Rev. P. A. Peterson, of the Virginia Conference: I have been waiting for an opportunity to speak on this subject when it would not appear like presumption on the part of a young member to do so. I am admonished by a writer in the last issue of the "Daily Advocate," that I ought to be brief in what I shall say, and I propose to be as brief as possible. Just at this point I desire to say that in that issue of the "Advocate" the reporter has given me a very good name, but as it is not my property I do not claim it. Mr President: Bro. M'Anally yesterday expressed his astonishment that Dr. Smith should have changed his ground on this question. He introduces his speech by asking, will wonders never cease. Now it is not surprising that a person should change his views on any question, but what surprised me yesterday was that Dr. Smith should assert the doctrine which he did on this subject without being contradicted by any one of the older members of this body. As I understand the economy of our church—I may be in error on the subject, but I have been so taught—the Episcopacy is recognized not as a distinct order in the ministry, but as an office in the ministry—the highest office in the ministry. Under what law is that office created? It is created, as I understand it, by the Constitution of the church. The church constitution defines the powers and perogatives of the Episcopacy. Now the question arises, where, in all that constitution, is the provision investing the Episcopacy with the veto power. There are two extremes on this subject, as it appears to me. The Methodist Episcopal Church reached one in 1844, when it maintained that the Bishops were creatures of the General Conference—were merely its officers—that they had absolute control of them and might do with them as they pleased. Dr. Smith has reached the other extreme by assuming that the absolute veto power is inherent in the episcopacy. Now it seems to me that there is a middle ground here, and that middle ground is the true and safe ground. May we not get our views of the polity of our church by an attempt to draw analogies between our ecclesiastical polity and the civil institutions under which we live? It strikes me that the constitution and the government of the United States is in the mind of some of the brethren whenever they speak about the government of the M. E. Church South. But on this point it strikes me there is no analogy at all. The constitution of the United States and the constitutions of the several States specifically provide that the President, in the one case, and the Governors, in the other case, shall have the right of the veto power, by which to provide against the enactment of unconstitutional laws. But is there any such provision in the constitution of the M. E. Church South? The office of the Episcopacy is created by the constitution, and the General Conference is vested with authority to fill that office and to prescribe the duties of the officers, under certain limitations and restrictions. One of the restrictive rules forms the ægis of his protection in office. It says that the General Conference shall change or alter any part of our government, so as to do away with Episcopacy or destroy the plan of Itinerant General Superintendency. And you cannot touch that question at all except by pursuing the course laid down in these same restrictive rules by which to effect a change in that matter. It seems to me, then, if the constitution does not confer upon the Episcopacy the veto power, the whole question is in the hands of the General Conference, which has authority to legislate for the church, and to make any rules and regulations for the government of the M. E. Church South that do not conflict with the restrictive rules laid down in the Discipline of this church. Now I hold, then, that this veto power does form in our Discipline a very important rule. No occasion, it is true, has arisen, calling for the exercise of that power; but it might arise. And what does the General Conference propose to do? The General Conference proposes, as I understand the question, simply this: We will enact a regulation to this effect, that in certain cases, instead of the usual vote of the majority, it shall require two-thirds of the members of the General Conference to enact that law. Has not the General Conference a perfect right, under the constitution of the church, to establish such a regulation?—Have they not the right to say that when "you shall have passed a rule or regulation, and the Episcopacy shall give it as their opinion that that rule or regulation is unconstitutional, then, instead of having the full force and effect of a law being adopted by a majority, it shall have no force or effect until it shall have been re-adopted by two-thirds of the General Conference." But, says Dr. McTyeire, the General Conference has no right to lay any restrictions upon itself.—Now it seems to me that that point is not altogether well taken, because the General Conference is daily laying restrictions upon itself here. Do you not here lay a restriction upon yourselves by the rules of order which you have adopted? It seems to me that this question sustains exactly the same relation to the General Conference. You legislate in this matter for the present General Conference, and for all succeeding General Conferences, provided, in the very nature of things, that they concur in your views. When you meet, then, in your next quadrennial session, whenever or wherever it may be held, this whole question is still in the hands of the General Conference, where it properly belongs; and if the power has been abused, or if there is a probability that the power will be abused, is not the General Conference, as it is constituted by the organic law of the church, superior to the episcopacy. Now, Mr. President, just right there a moment. The doctrine of Dr. Smith is, as I understand it, that the episcopacy is a co-ordinate department of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Now, what is meant by that? One of two things. It is meant either that the episcopacy as a unit, is essential to the government of the M. E. Church as suggested, or that the episcopacy is equal in degree and order, and not subordinate to the General Conference. Now which of these propositions is true? The last proposition cannot be true. If the first be true, then you have infracted the system of government, then you have destroyed the structure of Methodism when you destroy the episcopacy itself, but are you not still the M. E. Church South, even though you may not have a Bishop? Does not the law of the church provide for that very contingency, that in case of the death of all the members of the episcopal college, the General Conference shall elect a Bishop who shall be ordained by three or more elders from your body? I agree that the Episcopacy are invested with very high functions, but as officers of the church whence do they derive those functions, those rights, and those prerogatives? Take for instance the power of appointing preachers, could not the General Conference appoint those preachers instead of the Bishops if the occasion should render it necessary? Take the prerogative to preside in the Annual Conference, and here is a law requiring that in the absence of the Bishops some person present shall preside; that person cannot preside however if a Bishop be present. Now, sir, the plain point is this: The office is created and founded by the organic law of the church; the officer is appointed by the General Conference. What powers, therefore, are not conferred on the officers by the organic law of the church they do not possess. There is no provision conferring the veto power, therefore the veto power does not inhere in them. It is a question with the General Conference, and with the General Conference alone, whether they will establish this prudential regulation, whether they will say, as they have a right to say, that a regulation which they have adopted shall not be a law; in other words, when the Bishops dissent, shall a rule or regulation become a law of the church until it shall have been adopted by a vote of two-thirds of the members of the General Conference? To my mind, therefore, there is no necessity for this to go to the annual conferences. It is not a change in the structure—not an organic law. There is nothing in the restrictive rules that prevent the General Conference adopting this measure. Why invest them with so much importance? Why seek to make that organic which is not organic?

Rev. W. P. Radcliffe, of the Ouachita Conference, said he had a substitute, which he wished to offer, for Dr. Smith's resolution. The substitute is as follows:

> WHEREAS, in section second of chapter second, page 47 of the discipline, there is a proviso that when a rule or regulation is adopted by the General Conference, if the Bishops consider such rule or regulation unconstitutional, they may present their objections to the General Conference, and it shall then require a vote of two-thirds before such a rule or regulation shall have the force of law; and,
>
> Whereas, such proviso is in spirit, tendency, and effect a check equivalent to a restrictive rule, and has not been inserted in the discipline by the proper constitutional rule, therefore,
>
> Resolved, that the book editor be instructed to erase said proviso from the discipline.

On motion, the time for adjournment was extended to allow Rev. Wm. P. Radcliffe to speak to his substitute, whereupon he spoke as follows: I make no apology for what I have to say, and as long as I conform to the rules of the house I shall make no apology. I am here as a delegate, and I have the same rights and privileges as any other delegate on this floor, and I wish brethren would not talk about deferring to this man and that man. I recollect that there was one young minister who came in conflict with St. Paul, and they had a sharp dispute; but the sequel proved that Barnabas was right and Paul was wrong. So it may be that some of the Pauls here are wrong. Now, sir, I am opposed to one view of this question taken by Dr. McTyeire on yesterday. He said and admitted that the General Conference of 1854 had a right to restrict its action on this subject, but had no right to place a restriction upon subsequent General Conferences. I ask, sir, what right has any delegated body on earth to transfer any part of their power to another people? We are here in our absolute character as law-makers; we are here as delegates—as the law-making power of the M. E. Church South. We have no right to transfer any part of our power to these venerable Bishops, to the members of the Louisiana Conference, or anybody else. We stand alone responsible, and we cannot make a transfer of this delegated power. But what is the fact, sir, with regard to the power in this case? Now, I wish it distinctly understood that in what I say I do not commit myself to the question whether I am in favor of increasing or diminishing the power of the Bishops. Do not misinterpret what I shall say in that direction. But look at the great power that has been transferred to the Bishops with this proviso. Suppose we are, 140, here to make laws. The Bishops have no vote; all of them cannot cast one vote in making a law. But here a rule or regulation is brought up, and 71—a majority—pass it, and 69 are against it. It passes to the Bishops—they reject it, thinking it unconstitutional, and send it back with their objections. The 71 cannot gain another vote; but what does it require? It requires a two-thirds vote, which will take twenty-three more members to pass that law or regulation. Before the Bishops had no vote at all; now they make themselves equal to twenty-three votes in making a law. And it is worse than that, sir. Suppose these five Bishops get together and three of them decide that it is unconstitutional, and the other two decide that it is not, the majority of the Bishops can bring in their veto, and then, sir, you will find that one Bishop is equal to twenty-three delegates in the law-making power. Now you come in and tell us that this is just a simple rule of the Discipline. Take the view of Brother Edwards, and others on this subject. Why tell us that it is a simple regulation and does not require a three-fourths vote of the Annual Conferences to make it a law—that a simple majority of the General Conference could pass it. See the absurdity of that in that point of view. Here a rule is brought up; a majority of 71 against 69, make it a law; but the Bishops veto it, and they may take another vote, but the 71 cannot get another vote. The 71 believe they are right and are determined to carry through their plans. What do they do? They say we will repeal this veto power above a majority; put it in, and a bare majority can take it out. The difficulty is out of the way now, the veto is set aside, and they bring up the original question and pass it in spite of the Bishops, and just before they conclude that they can put the veto power back again if they wish. Dr. Smith is right, but I do not believe he understood it in that light when they passed it. Now to the proof on this subject.—Brother McAnally testified on yesterday that opposition was made to this measure, and that Dr. Smith did carry his point, making the impression upon their minds that it was not restrictive, that it was a simple provision or regulation; and on that ground they voted for it at that time. What is the fact in regard to the record? Any brother can get it and examine it, and he will find that this measure passed and was recorded as a simple resolution on the journal; and the whole record shows that they considered their action as final. There was no motion to send it anywhere—not even to a committee. It was a measure offered by Dr. Smith, seconded by brother Johnson, and passed as any other resolution. No organic law, and yet it made our Bishops equal to 23 men here in making law? In spirit, tenure and effect, it is a check equivalent to a restrictive rule. Will you pass such a law as that with a bare majority? It has never passed, but it is put in the Discipline. And now Dr. Smith tells us that it is as much organic as any law, and requires not only a two-thirds vote of the General Conference, but also a three-fourths vote of the annual conferences. I agree with him. But here is an important deficiency in the matter. It did not get the two-thirds vote of the General Conference of 1854. It does not start right. The journal does not show it; and I defy any man to prove it. Some brother said it had a two-thirds vote, and another said it was passed under such circumstances that he could not tell whether it did or not. With this conflicting verbal testimony we must go to the journal. I suppose that it got a bare majority, and no man can prove that it got a two-thirds vote. It is in the discipline wrongly and it ought to be taken out, and the resolution I have offered ought to pass.

Rev. Dr. Wm. A. Smith, of the Virginia Conference: A mere word of explanation before the General Conference adjourns. I do not choose to discuss the subject now, and would not under the circumstances. The dogmatic statements made in connection with my name might make an impression upon many minds that I conceded many of these statements. I joined issue with them, and at the proper time will find no great difficulty in showing that the speakers are indebted to imagination for many of their facts, and to their memory for much of their wit.

The Conference then adjourned with a benediction.

SEVENTH DAY.

WEDNESDAY, April 11, 1[8]66.

The Conference met at 9 o'clock A. M., pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by Bishop Early.

The chair announced the following committees:

Committee on the Support of the Ministry—Wm. A. Smith, J. C. Keener, Robert A. Young, Robert S. [illegible], Charles Betts, W. H. Anderson, F. Key, Samuel Register, [illegible] Watson.

Committee on Celebrating the Centenary of Methodism—Thos. O. [illegible]mers, H. A. C. Walker, [illegible] Veitch, W. H. Johnson, P. A. [illegible], Greco, first to the Tennessee Conference and afterwards presented to the Montgomery and Mobile Conferences by them all referred to this body. The memorials ask for a change in the name of our church. The latter paper argues it on the ground "that there is not any constitutional or [illegible] in the way of the M. E. Church forming churches wherever [illegible] may be found in any part of the United States;" and that the word "South" is inappropriate to a church, whose field of [illegible] world.

The Committee has given the subject careful consideration, and with [illegible] unanimity agree that the prayer of the memorialists should be granted.

When the church was divided it was expected that because of the peaceful separation of the original Methodist Episcopal Church, one portion should represent Methodism in the Northern States—the other part represent it in the Southern States. In this view the Discipline recites (Part I, chap. II., sec. 2, pp. 14 and 15) that "an organization was established for the Southern and Southwest," and in another place for the "Slaveholding States." The word "South" was appended to the name of our church to distinguish us from the other branch of Methodism, as indicating the Plan of Separation provided for that we should be the church of a section, while the Northern Church, which did not change its name, was just as truly the church of a section. But the Plan of Separation no longer confines us to the South and Southwest." Hence the term "South," that indicated that we were local, and being the church of a section, is not appropriate to our church.

Yet the word has not lost its geographical significance, whenever applied to a section of the State of this Union. What was the South in 1845 is the South yet; and the church in a Northern State connected with our organization would not be properly designated by a term which would identify it with the Southern States, as it was designed that the word "South" should do for our church, when it was organized.

Besides this, we are assured by brethren who are in circumstances to know the facts, that beyond our border a great and efficient door is opening to us, but that the word "South" remains a source of embarrassment, and a positive hindrance to our progress. Those who stretch forth their hands to us tell us, that to unite with us unless we will adopt a name that locates us that we are holding church relations with the nation, rather than to a part of it—and that part outside their limits—will subject them in relations to others that will greatly increase their difficulties. We believe, that for their sakes, we should, as St. Paul, "be made all things to all men," that we may, by all means save some, where no principle is involved, adopt such a course of action. None, we believe, pretend that principle forbids a change of name. Some prefer the change but oppose it now; thinking it would be better to defer it for a few years. The change itself is not opposed because it is wrong. Hence, St. Paul's rule applies here. Ought we not, however, at once eliminate a term which makes us appear a sectional church, hedged in by [illegible] implied geographical limitations, if by doing so we can carry the Gospel to multitudes whom we could not otherwise reach?

Your Committee are fully aware that in many faithful and zealous members of the church, there is a natural repugnance to any change of name. Many have suffered grievously for their adherence to the communion, and the title has been the occasion of their suffering. They have found faithful at the risk of the loss of all things. The name is now a hallowed name to them. We deeply sympathize with these noble brethren, and would ns far toward conciliating them as is possible, and yet remain true to the interests of Christ's Kingdom in all sections and for all time. We beg them to study our position before they judge so hastily. Let them reflect, that if they are aggrieved by a change—others, perhaps thousands, will be kept from our communion if we change not. If the Gospel is due to them, is it not also due to these others? Would our beloved brethren tie our hands so that we cannot carry to those asking it the bread of life? We think too well of them to suppose that they will feel aggrieved with this Conference for making a change now, which they would prefer postponed, because we keep in view for the whole country, and for years to come, the interests of that church for which they have suffered so much.

We are fully persuaded that if their representatives here will tell them how this Conference honors them for their sacrifices and loves them for their constancy, and yet withal has felt compelled, for the sake of the work which the Master has committed to it, to do what they would not have preferred, these brethren can convince them that this body is actuated by the purest motives—that is, the advancement of the kingdom of Christ.

If any suppose that the Conference has been impelled to a hasty act by circumstances that have recently grown up around us, they may be met by the fact that as early as 1854, and again in 1858, the subject of a change of name was brought before the General Conference. There is now lying upon the table, under the rule, a resolution offered toward the close of the session of 1858, (Journal, p. 514,) proposing to change the title to that of "The Methodist Church." In the press of business it was not reached. Had it been, it is highly probable that the Conference would have done then what it is proposed to do now; and this Committee believe that the resolution should be called up and acted upon, at this session of the Conference. We offer, therefore, the following resolution for adoption:

Resolved by the General Conference of the M. E. Church South, in Conference assembled, That we change the style and title of our Church.

We further recommend that this body call up and act upon the resolution last offered in this General Conference in 1858, viz: That the style and title of the Methodist Episcopal Church South be changed to "The Methodist Church."

Respectfully submitted,
E. H. MYERS, Chairman.

Rev. Dr. McAnally, of the St. Louis Conference: I move that the consideration of the report be made the special order for Wednesday next.

Rev. W. W. Bennett, of the Virginia Conference: I move, as an amendment, to substitute to-morrow for next Wednesday.

Rev. Dr. McAnally accepted the amendment, and, on vote, the motion prevailed.

Rev. Dr. Hamilton, of the Committee on Boundaries, reported on a resolution from the Georgia Conference, recommending that that conference be permitted to divide at such time as it may deem best, and that that portion of the State of Georgia now embraced in the Florida Conference, be receded to the Georgia Conference. Laid over until to-morrow, under the rule.

The same, on a memorial from the preachers of the Kansas Mission Conference, recommending that their prayer be granted; namely, that that portion of that conference, lying south of the Kansas river be added to the St. Louis Conference, and the remainder to the Missouri Conference. Laid over under the rule.

The same, on a memorial from the Pacific Conference asking a division of their Conference, recommending that the territory now embraced in the Oregon, Jacksonville, and Idaho districts be formed into a separate Conference to be called the Columbia Conference. Laid over under the rule.

The same, upon the request of the several delegates from the East Texas, Texas, and Rio Grande Conferences, recommending that the East Texas Conference have the privilege of dividing at such time as is deemed best; that the Rio Grande Conference be reannexed to the Texas Conference, and that the Texas Conference thus constituted shall have the privilege of dividing as may be agreed upon by its members. Laid over.

Rev. Dr. L. Pierce, of the Georgia Conference, presented a number of papers in regard to changes of economy, which were referred to the Committee on Changes of Economy.

Rev. Samuel Register, of the Baltimore Conference, presented the following preamble and resolution:

WHEREAS, in their address to the General Conference, the Bishops called the attention of this body to the importance of giving particular attention to the religious training of children, therefore,

Resolved, first, that a special committee be appointed, consisting of nine, to devise some means whereby the doctrine of infant membership, as held by the church, shall be more fully defined and clearly recognized in the Discipline and practice of our church.

The second part of the resolution provides that Sunday Schools be so organized as to harmonize with this proposition.

Rev. Samuel Register said he did not know how it was in other sections, but within the bounds of the Baltimore Conference he was sorry to say that out of the large cities and towns, so far as the usual work is concerned, many of our Sabbath Schools are conducted in the loosest way possible, and are really demoralizing. Such was his sober conviction, and he thought now, that we are proposing, to some extent at least, to re-lay the foundation of our church, that the church should speak out boldly and distinctly on this vital question. If we take the right course in this, we can save to Methodism the children of many families that would otherwise go to other denominations or be estranged from religion altogether. Matured in the church in infancy, you will rear up, by this means, a grand and mighty army, that will redound to the glory of God and the prosperity of the church.

Rev. Dr. Myers moved that a committee of nine, six from the Conference at large, and three from the Sunday School Committee, be appointed by the Bishop, to which this resolution should be referred, which motion was agreed to.

A resolution was offered in regard to incorporating a catechism in the Discipline, for the use of families, which was referred to the Committee on Revisals.

Rev. Dr. John B. McFerrin, of the Tennessee Conference, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That two or more of our Bishops be requested to wait upon the President of the United States, and tender him appropriate expressions of gratitude for the restoration of our church property, and to further assure him that we, as a body of ministers of Christ, enjoin upon our congregations submission to "the powers that be," and while we stand aloof from all party politics and deprecate any intermeddling of churches or ministers, as such, with political affairs, we yet feel it to be our duty cheerfully to comply with the Apostolic injunction to make "Supplications, prayers, intercessions and thanksgivings for all men—for all in authority—that we may lead quiet and peaceable lives, in all godliness and honesty."

Rev. P. M. Pinckard, of the Missouri Conference: The object and spirit of that resolution I like, but I would be glad if another idea was added there. I think it may be improved, and made much more appropriate and much more suitable—not that I object to anything there, but approve of it, but the resolution as it is prepared, does not cover the ground that I would like to see it cover. Therefore, I hope it will lie over a day in order to give us an opportunity for consultation, that it may be improved. I make a motion to that effect.

Rev. Dr. McFerrin: Before offering the resolution, I submitted it to several brethren, and they expressed the opinion that it would do. I do not like to have a matter of that kind laid upon the table. It looks a little suspicious, and I, therefore, hope the resolution will be acted upon now.

Rev. P. M. Pinckard: I merely remark that it does not go far enough. I believe we ought to refer to other questions as well as those there referred to. I do not object to the method in which the proposition is made, but I do think there are some other important questions that the attention of the President ought to be called to. While we have much for which to be grateful in that direction, and while we are under obligations to the Government, I do not want this General Conference, by any action it may take, to ignore the fact that there is very much yet to be done in that very same direction, and I am opposed to this General Conference adopting any paper that is partial, that speaks short of the whole facts in the case. That is the point I aim at—it is to embrace that action that I want time.

Rev. Dr. A. L. P. Green, of the Tennessee Conference: I think I understand the object of Brother Pinckard. I think it is not necessary that action on this resolution should be delayed in consequence of what he has under his eye. If there be other facts that we would like to lay before the President, and wish a messenger to bear those facts, it will be no difficult matter to refer them to these two Bishops, to make such communication, after this resolution shall have passed. We do not know, and we will not know, what we may want to communicate to the President until a late period in the session of the Conference.

Rev P. M. Pinckard: No man on this floor can appreciate more highly than I do the obligations that we are under to the President and to many officers of the Government, for restoration of very important church property interests to us, and for their friendly interest in saving it from being further injured. But there are yet very important church property interests in Missouri, in Texas, and in various other portions of our country that are held by the same authority. No legal authority withholds them from us, and I believe that they ought to be included in that resolution. While we express our gratitude and our sense of obligation to the authorities for having restored to us so much of what was unlawfully withheld from us, we ought not to let that point pass, nor to express that sense of obligation without, in the same connection, reminding them that there are yet important property interests withheld from us, and call the attention of the Government to the fact that we claim—modestly but firmly claim—all our rights in that direction.

Rev. Dr. L. Rosser, of the Virginia Conference: I know that there is so much of the pure spirit in that resolution, that I shrink with some timidity when I attempt to oppose it. From the beginning of Southern Methodism we have, with a scrupulous fealty to the powers that be, refrained from all interference with civil authority, partisan prejudices, and the organization of political parties. At the present time, sir, in the transition state of the American people, there are two great fundamental parties contending in the political arena, and we cannot adopt that resolution—noble, pure and impressive as it is at strictly without being, by the construction of the whole American public allied with President Johnson. The people throughout all this land will so construe it, and associate us with Mr. Johnson. I am unwilling, as an ecclesiastical body, to put ourselves in any political position whatever. Let us stand in this sublime isolation, in the impressible fortification given us by the ministry, and do our duty according to our ecclesiastical rules and regulations, without turning aside to take sides with or association in the great political conflicts of the present age.

Rev. W. W. Bennett, of the Virginia Conference: I regret very much the introduction of that paper before this Conference. I had hoped that this Conference would hold itself aloof from all expressions that might bear the slightest semblance to political association; and yet, sir, we have drifted into the very thing we hoped to avoid. We are now going into it very deeply, and it is impossible to tell where we shall take up. We may have, sir, here after to-day a stronger paper than that which has been presented, and if we encourage this thing, we may find ourselves, in the end, in a most unenviable position—a position in which I am most unwilling to, and will not place myself. I would just as soon think of thanking Mr. Johnson for vetoing the Freedmen's Bureau bill, or vetoing the Civil Rights bill, as I would for restoring to us those churches which had been forcibly taken from us. I believe, sir, that he did right, and I believe he did it because he believed it to be his duty as the President of the United States, and I do not, sir, conceive that Mr. Johnson will thank this General Conference, or any other body, for expressing their gratitude to him for doing that which he conceived to be his duty. He did not do it because of any special preference he had for the Southern Church. He would have done the same thing for any body of Christians in the whole land. He did it on the principle of abstract right. But again, sir, I am opposed to this paper because it will bear the precise aspect before this country that my honored friend from Virginia has declared that it will. You will, by this action, be understood as allying your fortunes as a church to a political party. Shall we follow the action of another important branch of Methodism in this country that has openly allied itself with the political fortunes of the country? I wish the Church of which I am an humble minister to be kept pure from all political entanglements. I hoped that nothing of that character would be referred to in this General Conference. Our record is before us, and we are not afraid to face that record. We declared our principles long since, and they have been maintained from that day to this. I therefore hope and pray that this General Conference will hold itself aloof from any action that can be interpreted to mean an expression in favor of any political party in the United States of America. I believe that I as much intend to be a loyal citizen of this Government, under the obligations I have taken, as any man on this floor, or in any section of this country; I believe that I have as high an appreciation of President Johnson as any other man; I believe I honor him as fully, for the noble stand he has taken, as any other man can do; but, sir, as a Methodist minister, and as a member of this General Conference, a delegate from the Virginia Conference, and representing her interests here in common with other honored brothers from that body, I cannot, with my sense of duty, give a vote that will place this General Conference, by a possibility even, in a false position before this country.

Rev. Dr. J. B. McFerrin, of the Tennessee Conference: I had not the slightest conception that the introduction of that little resolution would call forth debate. I have not as much acuteness of intellect as some men, but how any man who understands anything can construe that resolution into party politics, or any man assume that by the adoption of that resolution we endorse any act of the Administration, or any side in party politics, is beyond my conception. The brother from Virginia says that he does not know that we are required to return thanks when a man does his duty. "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, therefore," etc. He says that we must not thank him because he has done his duty, but if he has not done his duty I suppose we must therefore return thanks. I feel very much like thanking President Johnson for returning our churches. I do not know whether Brother Bennett does or not—I do. I thank him; and if this Conference will not thank him, I hope the reporter—if he is taking any notes of what I am saying—will take down my thanks, and he will get the thanks of at least one man in connection with this General Conference. I am here as a christian minister, and I avow it to the world, and to Mr. Johnson, and I hope with that message it will be borne to him by two Bishops, that as ministers individually, and as a body of ministers we do not interfere with, but deprecate all interference with political questions. Is there any danger or harm in saying what our record is? I remember not many days since, that a committee went from the Baltimore Conference, and waited upon him, and I never heard of any tremendous earthquake following that—never. I want President Johnson to know, and the Congress of the United States to know, and all the North to know that we as ministers of Jesus Christ, do not interfere with political questions as ministers. But it is our duty to pray for them, and in the name of our God we will send up our petition for them, and for the Government under which we live.

Rev. Jos. B. Cottrell agreed with Dr. McFerrin, that the resolution did not complicate the conference with any political party or issue. The Doctor's logic was good on that point. He differed with him, however, as to the propriety of thanking men for doing simply their duty. It was something over and above duty—an act of supererogation which usually calls for, or demands an expression of thanks. In this case he thought there would be as much propriety in thanking the High Sheriff of his county for restoring, according to law, any property that might have fallen into the hands of parties coveting it. He desired to avoid everything that savored of obsequiousness to civil authorities. He had taken occasion, some time since, in an article for the Southern Christian Advocate, to note the demagogueism of the churches. Ecclesiastics bowing and scraping about presidents and governors, did their cause but little good. He stood alone, the other day, in opposition to passing a resolution at the instance of the New York East Conference. He wished nothing done directly or indirectly that should open the way to resolutions of that nature. Suppose, sir, (said he,) I should offer a resolution here this morning inviting the New York East Conference to petition, conjointly with this General Conference, President Johnson to release from Fortess Monroe our late Confederate President. That would be an act of substantial Christian mercy. And yet the impropriety of it might be evident to some minds. As for my own part, I think I apprehend the duty prescribed by the Apostle Paul, touching obedience to rulers, and can go by his programme, yielding obedience to governments de facto; and having, in good faith, taken the oath of allegiance—as an honest man expecting to keep it "not for wrath, but for conscience sake;" I yet feel bound with and in the person of the prisoner of Fortress Monroe. "My (political) life is hid with him in prison." But, sir, I am not to intrude these things, by resolution, upon this body. As for the property restored to our church, it was bought with our money, and its restoration to us was operated simply by law. I will not trust myself to speak on the subject. I am exceedingly filled with disgust that such an ecclesiastical theft should be perpetrated along the highway of the history of nations, is a matter as humiliating as astounding, and I feel little like contemplating it.

On vote, the resolution was then adopted, and the Conference adjourned.

EIGHTH DAY.

THURSDAY, April 12, 1866.

The Conference met at 9 o'clock, A. M., pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by Bishop Kavanaugh.

The opening devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. C. J. Vandeventer, of the Missouri Conference.

Rev. Dr. Thos. O. Summers, Chairman of the Committee on Revisals, reported in regard to certain memorials and resolutions that had been referred to that committee, as follows:

That they see no impropriety in the use of the Sunday service, or any part of it, proposed by Mr. Wesley for the use of the Methodist Church, by those who see fit to employ it;

That they recommend that there shall be in each pastoral charge, if practicable, at least seven stewards, and a greater number may be appointed, at the discretion of the Quarterly Conference, provided that there be not more than one for every fifty members, though there may be one for every Society in the Circuit;

That they do not think it expedient to require a three-fourths vote to alter the boundary of a Conference;

That they do not understand that a single Annual Conference has the power to defeat a measure proposed by all the other Conferences;

That they do not deem the changes proposed in regard to Episcopal decisions expedient;

That they do not approve of the proposition requiring Annual Conferences to sit with closed doors during examinations of character;

That they do not deem expedient proposed changes in the 49th and 50th questions of the Discipline, but recommend the insertion of the following: "How many infants and adults have been baptized during the year?" and "What is the number of Sabbath School Teachers and their names?"

That they recommend that a properly digested Catechism be prepared by the Bishops and Book Editor, to be printed in the Book of Discipline.

The report lies on the table under the rule.

Rev. J. E. Evans, chairman of the committee on Circulating the Holy Scriptures, presented a report, and recommended the adoption of a preamble and the following resolutions:

Resolved, That this Conference will cordially unite with the American Bible Society in the circulation of the Sacred Scriptures, without note or comment; and that our preachers and people are hereby requested to cooperate in this holy cause.

Resolved, That our Bishops be, and they are hereby requested to appoint to the Bible Agency, from time to time, such of our traveling ministers as the Bible Society may select for that work.

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Worship appointed by this Conference, and they are hereby instructed to confer with the officers of the Auxiliary Society of this city, and jointly with them to make arrangements for a public Bible meeting, at an early day during our session.

On vote, the resolutions were adopted.

The question then being on the adoption of the preamble,

Rev. Dr. H. N. McTyeire, of the Montgomery Conference said: I have voted for the resolution because I understand them, because I like them, and because I am willing to work up to them. But I cannot vote for the preamble. At least until it shall have been printed and laid on the table long enough for me to examine it, and re-read it very carefully. I admit that the American Bible Society has, more than any other National Institution, so-called, kept itself catholic, but, sir, I cannot vote for any preamble that would seem to sanction some things which it has done and permitted. Soon after the return of peace, feeling an interest on this subject, I wrote to Dr. Holdich, one of the secretaries, and asked him to send me the speeches and resolutions passed at the anniversary meetings that had been held while we were outside. He did so, and I was pleased with the general tenor of things, but not with all by a good deal. For instance, that society held one of its anniversaries, on which occasion a Dr. Spring made a speech most insulting to all Southern ministers. On the same occasion, a Federal General—of whom I would not speak in disparagement personally, for I happen to have the pleasure of his acquaintance—made a speech, and instead of confining himself to the merits of the Bible and the benefits of circulating the Bible, he indulged in a tirade of abuse and denunciation against Southern people, Southern leaders, and Southern principles. On one of the anniversaries, one of the secretaries of the society, Dr. J. S. R. Taylor, brought forward a resolution in which the assassination of President Lincoln—an event which the people of the whole South deplored and denunciated promptly—that sad and unhappy event was alluded to in a manner as though the Southern people had been parties to it. Now, sir, considering the exciting times—

Rev. W. C. Johnson, of the Memphis Conference, (interrupting) allow me to correct the speaker, please. I wish to make statement to call Dr. McTyeire's attention to the fact that there is a foot note in the report of those addresses to which he alludes, disclaiming, on the part of the managers, all responsibility for them.

Rev. Dr. McTyeire: I read the foot note carefully. But what does that foot note mean when an officer of the society offers such a resolution and speaks to it in such a style, and it is published by the society too?

A Delegate: Was the resolution adopted?

Rev. Dr. McTyeire: Certainly it was adopted.

Rev. S. P. Richardson, of the Florida Conference: President Lincoln was a director of the American Bible Society, and that resolution was offered in regard to his life membership.

Rev. Dr. McTyeire: Yes, he was a life director, and he was president, and all that, but I will not vote for anything that implies in the most remote manner that the Southern people were a party to the assasination of President Lincoln. I am willing to let by-gones be by-gones. I am willing to take up the Society right where I find it. I am willing to go forward, spreading the Bible as printed, without note or comment, by that Society, throughout the land. I am willing to furnish agents from our churches, and to do all that those resolutions say, but you must excuse me from voting for a preamble, that by the most remote implication seems to justify all that they have been doing in our absence. I wrote to Dr. Holdich for those documents, for we had a vested right in that concern, and we wanted to know what they had been saying behind our backs. But while I am willing to cover that up, to pass it by, do not call on me to approve it; do not call on me to say anything that would seem to approve it. Just let all that go by, brethren, and now we will take up the Bible, without note or comment, and join heartily with them in scattering it over this land. Therefore, while I voted heartily for the resolutions, I beg leave to say that I cannot vote for the preamble.

Rev. J. E. Evans, of the Georgia Conference: I am prepared to believe that Dr. McTyeire, upon a critical examination of the report, will be as ready to vote for the preamble as he was for the resolutions. We were not ignorant of the fact, that some things in the history of the past in regard to that Society would not be endorsed, and when you analyze that preamble, you will find that there is nothing in it but a simple statement of their appeal to unite with us. There is nothing in it that endorses a single action of that Society during the late war.

Rev. Dr. McTyeire: That is, it is what the Board of Managers say about themselves. Of course they can tell a very good story for themselves. They say that they have preserved a catholic character as a society. But we can read their record as well as they. They have spoken very kindly to us, but there stand their anniversary speeches and resolutions, one of the most offensive of which was introduced, and spoken to by one of their secretaries. There they are, and I do not care to adopt their own language, declaring to us that they have preserved the catholic course in all. While I give them credit for a great deal of circumspection, I am very far from being able to endorse their entire course. Why if I had that speech of Dr. Spring here, I could read to you where he accused the ministers of the church in the Southern States of defection, and the churches of shameful defection, and the speech of that General, who instead of confining himself to the Bible, and its influence among the soldiers, and the blessings it produced, entered into a tirade of abuse against us. When I find these printed by the type of the American Bible Society, at the expense of the American Bible Society, under the imprint of the American Bible Society, and circulated by them as a part of their record, can I accept of them what they say of themselves, that they have pursued a catholic course?—I know the foot note is there, but what good does it do if a man spit upon me, and rub it in, and then say, "It was not done officially!"

A delegate: In a foot note.

Rev. Dr. McTyeire: I have voted for, and I will stand up to those resolutions. They commit me to the Bible cause, and not to the course those managers have pursued. I want Brother Richardson, who is agent, to have the weight of all the help we can give him, and also brother Johnson, than whom, if they were not present, I would say there are no better agents, I would not put anything in the way of the prosecution of their work.

Rev. S. P. Richardson, of the Florida Conference: Before I accepted the position that I occupy before this General Conference, I had a frank correspondence with the American Bible Society, and talked plainly to them upon their present relations to the South. Defining my former position and my present relationship to the past and present, I would not, as a representative of the American Bible Society, and as a member of this General Conference, with all the light that is before me—and I think I am in a position that I might give all the facts—I would not have you do anything that you ought not to do, that Southern men ought not to do, that the Southern Methodist Church in its General Conference ought not to do, for you would implicate me. The American Bible Society, in a word, through their Secretaries and Board of Managers, in their communications to me, make this declaration in reply to interrogatories: "That we, in good faith, and in the spirit of Christianity, do desire to co-operate with you in circulating the Word of God." In reference to our vested rights, I might say much. I have made the calculations, and I think that outside of our life membership and life directorship we have vested, as donations to the American Bible Society—not taking out what they have given to us as the Southern States—about one hundred and twenty-seven thousand dollars within the last fifty years. They have not ignored those vested rights. They have retained all our life members and life directors, and all the officers of our auxiliary societies in the South. And while I will not approve of all they have said or done, during the terrible war through which we have passed, we left them and abandoned the American Bible Society ourselves, and we could not blame them if they had swept away every name and confiscated all the vested rights we had there.

Rev. N. H. Lee, of the Louisville Conference: I move that the preamble be re-committed to the Committe on Circulating Holy Scriptures.

Rev. Dr. C. F. Deems, of the North Carolina Conference: I move to amend that motion by instructing the committee to amend the preamble so as to show an unwillingness to contribute our money to the publication of speeches and resolutions injurious to the people and character of the South. I want some expression to go to that committee of what we want them to do. I concur with Brother McTyeire in his views of the whole matter. I am not prepared to vote for that preamble as it now stands. Nevertheless I do not wish to seem even to throw a straw in the way of an institution which I reverence as I do the American Bible Society, but I am not willing that annually the collections taken up in my congregation shall go to buy the paper upon which annually hereafter that speech of Dr. Spring, and that resolution of Dr. Thompson shall be reproduced for circulation in Europe and America. I am one of the managers of that Society, and attend the monthly meetings whenever I can. We have that very speech and that very resolution stereotyped, and in our vaults, and every now and then, when the copies are exhausted, all the anniversary speeches from the beginning are printed, so that any libraries or bodies of men, in Europe or America, asking for copies, may be supplied. Now, I am unwilling that one dime of my money, or the money of any Southern man, shall go that way.

Rev. Dr. D. S. Doggett, of the Virginia Conference: I have not the slightest objection to re-committing this preamble, but I have a very great objection to such a re-committment, as is suggested by Dr. Deems. I think it would damage us a thousand times more than to adopt the present report. The course of argument goes, in fact, against any alliance or co-operation with that society at all, and if this debate prevails in that direction, you will place a chasm between this General Conference and the American Bible Society, that we cannot reach over. I think a good deal of this debate has originated in the association and imagination of the brethren. There is not a word in that report commendatory of the course of the American Bible Society. I found myself upon the committee from which this report comes, and I attended its last meeting. The chairman had drawn up a report, and in that report there were a few sentences that I could not myself endorse, and it raised the whole question before the committee as it is now before the Conference. I told the committee that I was particularly connected with that society as director of the Virginia Bible Society and that some delicate issues had arisen in our Society, but we had determined to submerge these issues, and close in with the American Bible Society in its great mission of spreading the Bible throughout this land and other lands. After we had modified the report, so far as it was possible to perceive, there was not a word left in it commendatory of the character and course of the American Bible Society. The only ground of objection seems to be in that little extract which the chairman of the committee thought ought to be introduced into the report as the justification and explanation of the course of the Society toward the South, and I am perfectly willing that that should be stricken out. But what have all these platform speeches to do with the question? Is it true that the American Bible Society has maintained with consistency and fidelity its mission as a Society for the distribution of the Bible? I believe, as a general thing, it has. There is one exception to it, perhaps, and that was in connection with the history of the Virginia Bible Society, but which I will not recall on this occasion. What is the propriety of raising the question of local contrariety on this subject? I think there is none. I claim that a man cannot well be more thoroughly and intensely attached to the South than myself. I yield to no man on that subject; but as a member of this Conference, I would not agree to protest in this memorial, if it should go back to the committee, against the expression of the American Bible Society in the stormiest period of our history.

Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall, of the Mississippi Conference: I want to amend the amendment. I am not so much opposed to the speeches that have been made on the platform at the meeting of those anniversaries of the American Bible Society; but what I am opposed to, and what I shall labor for, and what I shall not rest quietly under is, to erase those stereotyped plates by which they have bound themselves to perpetuate for a thousand generations that slander upon the Southern Church and the Southern people. If they intend with their stereotyped plates to perpetuate those contumelious reproaches, I want it understood that those plates must be destroyed before I contribute my money to their Society. I will not, under any circumstances, aid or accept an agency for the American Bible Society, with the understanding that those stereotyped plates can be brought out and parade, perhaps, again and again in future years for generations to come, those unhappy, and as I deem them, unjust and uncharitable references to the South.

Rev. Dr. R. McAnally, of the St. Louis Conference: It is an easy matter, it seems to me, to get rid of this whole affair in its present aspect. The motion is to recommit the preamble to the committee for certain revisions. Now, then, I would respectfully ask the General Conference to stop where they are, with the adoption of the resolutions, and let the preamble remain unadopted and unacted upon. I move that the vote be now taken.

On voto, the motion that the vote be now taken on the recommitment of the resolution, was agreed to.

The amendment offered to the motion by Rev. Dr. Deems, having been accepted by the original maker of the motion, the question then secured on the motion for recommitment as amended, and was carried.

The chair announced the following Committee on Infant Church Membership: Samuel Register, J. Hamilton, John W. Glenn, John C. Granberry, H. A. C. Walker, J. E. Edwards, H. H. Montgomery, S. P. Richardson and Thos. Madden.

The Conference then adjourned with a benediction.

Statistics of the Churches.

As statistics of the churches are floating through the secular press, containing many inaccuracies, it may be well to present them as officially reported by the several denominations. In a very appreciative article on Methodism, written from New York for a Boston paper, the writer says Daniel Drew, Esq., has given a quarter of a million towards the Centenary fund, and will give half a million more; and adds that the Methodists will raise a million for the Centenary, that is, one man will give three fourths of the whole sum.

Methodist Episcopal Church, including local preachers,	22,987
Baptist Churches,	19,677
Congregational Churches,	19,304
Free will Baptist churches,	12,668
Protestant Episcopal church,	1,589
Total,	76,225

The population of Maine in 1860, was 628,000. These five churches contain over twelve per cent. of the population of the State, or about one in eight. From 1850 to 1863, the Maine Conference gained 1,624, and, adding omissions in reports of 1863, the East Maine Conference gained about 1,000, making in the whole State 2,624.

The following is an exhibit of several churches in the United States for 1865. As the other churches report for the whole nation, I present our statistics for the same territory:

M. E. church (N. & S.)	1,628,320
Bapt's church's (for 1864,)	1,040,300
Congregational churches,	263,296
Protest'nt Episcop'l church,	154,118
Free will Baptist churches, [including Canada West,]	54,076

The Baptists have a large membership in the Southern States, included in the above, omitting the Methodist E. Church, South, the Methodist E. Church has 928,320 communicants; exclusive of local preachers, or about twice as many as the Congregational, Episcopal, and Freewill Baptist churches combined; those three having 471,490. Our church has in New York State 159,000 members, or 5,000 more than the Episcopal church in all this country.

The growth of the churches from 1800 to 1850:

	MINISTERS.	MEMBERS.
Protest'nt Episcop'l,	6 to 1	6 to 1
Congregational,	4 to 1	2⅞ to 1
Baptist,	4 to 1	5⅜ to 1
Presbyter'n (N. & S.)	14 to 1	8 to 1
M. E. church (N. & S.)	19⅜ to 1	17¾ to 1

In 1773 we had one Conference, ten ministers, 1,160 members. In 1865 we had sixty Conferences, 6,821 traveling ministers, 928,320 members. The church was founded in 1766, and episcopally organized in 1784. In 1865 we had churches and parsonages valued at $27,000,000; with 25 colleges and theological schools, with more than $3,000,000 of property; 158 instructors, and 5,345 students: 77 academies, with 556 instructors, 17,761 students, making a body of 714 instructors and 23,106 students. The Book concern, commenced in 1789 in Philadelphia with a borrowed capital of $600, has a capital now of $837,000, 500 publishing agents, editors, clerks and operatives, 30 cylinder power presses in constant operation; 2,000 different books on its catalogue; 14 periodicals with a circulation of more than a million per month.

Sunday schools, 13,400, instructors 150,000, pupils 918,000, volumes in library 2,500,000. Our Union issues 2,500 publications, and has a monthly circulation of 300,000 periodicals. Missionary Society 1,059 circuits and stations, 1,128 paid laborers and 105,675 members, besides 800 domestic missionaries.

As the result of the Methodism of 1776, there are now in the Methodist E. Church, North and South, including the Methodist E. Church in Canada, 1,972,770 members, 18,650 traveling ministers, 15,000 local ministers, 200 colleges and academies, 30 periodicals, and, including ministers, 1,986,420 communicants, and nearly eight millions of people, or more than one-fifth of the population of the country.

PARIS ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.—At a recent meeting of the Paris Academy of Sciences, MM. Salleron and Urbain presented a paper entitled "A New Method of Testing Mineral Oils." Their plan is to determine the tension of the vapor of the oils, for which they have contrived a special aparatus, of which a description has not reached us. From their experiments they have come to the conclusion that the tension of 64 millimetrees (35) degrees of water may be adopted as the limit which an oil safe to use in a lamp should possess.

GROWTH OF PROTESTANTISM IN PARIS.—A correspondent of the New York Observer, writing from Paris, gives some interesting facts: "At the beginning of the present century, the capital of France contained but a handful of Protestants, and worship was celebrated by one or two pastors who had almost nothing to do. To-day this state of things is greatly changed. Protestantism has extended more until it now holds a high position both among people and press.

Religious Experience.

The great primary reason why men deceive themselves as to their own spiritual condition and their relation to God in Christ, is to be found in that fearful passage of Scripture, "The heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked." The knowledge of this tremendous fact is calculated to fill every mind with dread, and to incite to constant watchfulness, lest we be deluded to our undoing.—With reference to the foundation of our hopes for eternity, we want certainty. We need full assurance, and it is perfectly amazing that so many professors of religion live in comparative ease, and enjoy a tolerable degree of comfort, while they rest upon a bare peradventure.—This is all the more wonderful, inasmuch as in this age of the Church the questions which more than all others occupy the minds of professing Christians are—Am I a Christian? Have I been born again?—Am I a truly converted man? In the earlier days of the Church the great inquiry was—Are these things so? Are these wonderful words about Christ, the Son of God, coming into the world to save sinners, by redeeming them with his own precious blood, all true? Just as soon as the conviction broke upon the mind, either with the suddenness and dazzling brightness of the lightning's flash, or with the quiet gentleness of the first soft rays of the early dawn, that the great facts of the Gospel were infallibly true, the heart seized upon them at once, and embraced them as the life of the soul.

But now, owing to the wretched experience through which the Church has passed since then of formalism and legalism, the mind of the Church has taken on a permanent subjective condition. The questions that seem most interesting and of paramount importance are not such as relate to the objective reality of Gospel truths, but those that concern our relations to the Gospel. They are the questions of Religious Experience. We suppose that the hymn beginning,

"'Tis a point I long to know,
Oft it causes anxious thought,
Do I love the Lord, or no?
Am I His, or am I not?"

could not have been written in the first two or three hundred years of the Christian era. At the present day, however, it does verily express the real feelings, and indicates the actual and often persistent condition of a very large number of Christians. This is not due to any local or temporary causes, but is the result of many great moral and spiritual forces, acting and reacting through a long series of years and even centuries. This state of things comes to us by inheritance; but it is manifest that it is a transition state, and was never meant to be permanent.

We cannot, it is true, return to the same simplicity of faith in the revealed facts of religion that specially characterized the early Church. We cannot lose the impress which has been stamped on the Church of Christ, by the varied scenes and experiences through which she has passed since the days of Augustine and Ambrose, of Milan. And even if we could go back to the spiritual state which marked peculiarly the Apostolic times, it would not be desirable. "To affirm that such would be a consummation devoutly to be wished," would be to deny that the plans and purposes of God had made any advance towards their fulfilment in these eighteen hundred years. The Church of God, taking with her the lessons which she has learned from all her sad as well as joyous experience, must go forward to a higher simplicity, a clearer and fuller apprehension, and a deeper and richer experimental knowledge of the glorious mysteries of the Gospel. She does not need a new revelation from God—still less does she need new inventions of men, either in doctrine or practice. But she does need to know more of the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom he has sent, whom to know is life eternal. We cannot, therefore, teach the people of God in these days that there is no such thing as a deep and ever deepening experimental spiritual religion. There is a real experience of divine things, and the language of the Church of our times, when she talks of "experiencing religion," "experiencing conversion," etc., is no unmeaning jargon; it is the genuine language of Canaan, with the true shibboleth, which the men of Ashdod deride only because they cannot understand. While these things are surely true, it cannot be doubted that the whole matter of experimental religion has been greatly misunderstood and terribly perverted, not only to the saddening of the Lord's people, but to their grievous injury.

SELF-RELIANCE.—Were we to ask a hundred men, who from small beginnings have attained a condition of respectability and affluence, to what, under God, they attributed their success in life, the general answer would be, "It is from being compelled to think for and depend on ourselves."

SENTENTIOUS SAYING OF DR. WITHERSPOON.—Not to hit a mark is to miss it: almost persuaded to be a Christian, is to remain an impenitent sinner; almost to enter the gate of heaven, is to sink down to hell.

Decease of A. W. Smith, LL.D.

A note from chaplain H. B. Hibben, dated Annapolis, Md., March 22d, informs us that "Prof. A. W. Smith (Naval Academy) died this morning at one o'clock of pneumonia, after an illness of a few days. He died in great peace, sympathizing with his friends to the last, and cheered by the hopes of religion."

Dr. Smith was born in the interior of this State (Madison county, perhaps) about the year 1805, graduated at Hamilton College, and about 1830 became a teacher at the Oneida Conference Seminary, Cazenovia. Two years later he was chosen Professor of Mathematics in the Wesleyan University, which was then in its infancy. His connection with that institution continued down to 1858, he having for several years preceding that date filled the presidency of the University. In 1859 he was appointed Prof. of Mathematics in the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, which was afterwards removed to Newport at the outbreak of the war, but, returned to its former place only a few months since.

As a christian gentleman, Dr. Smith was without reproach, and as an educator, he stood in the very front rank of his profession. He also possessed a good share of administrative ability, which was largely called into exercise in the management of the affairs of the Wesleyan University, which, even before his elevation to the presidency, often devolved upon him for long periods on account of vacancies in the presidential office, and in the absence or ill health of the incumbents. The announcement of his decease will cause real sorrow with many of those who have enjoyed the advantages of his instructions and counsels.

From the Episcopal Methodist.

Dr. Bond—The Episcopal Methodist.

The editors of the Episcopal Methodist recently made a visit to the city of Baltimore for the purpose of conferring with the Rev. Dr. Thos E. Bond, in relation to carrying into effect the wishes of the late Baltimore Conference. As the result of the interview, we take pleasure in announcing that Rev. Dr. Bond is henceforth to occupy the position of associate editor. The paper is to be published in the city of Richmond till the first of July, at which time the present volume closes.—Thereafterward it is contemplated to remove the paper to Baltimore, as the seat of its publication. In the meantime it is understood that the preachers of the Baltimore Conference will act as agents for the paper, and use all proper diligence to secure its introduction into as many families as possible within the bounds of the Conference. It will be furnished to subscribers at one dollar from the first of April to the first of July. It is contemplated to enlarge the size of the paper at the commencement of the next volume, and to conform the subscription price to the prevailing prices of similar journals at that time. The details of the whole plan are not as yet fully settled; and at the present we can say no more than announce the fact that the paper is expected to be removed to Baltimore, and that the Rev. Dr. Bond, from the present issue, in conformity with the expressed wishes of the Baltimore Conference, is to be one of the editors of the Episcopal Methodist. It is to be hoped that the preachers and the leading members of the Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South will take vigorous hold on this enterprise, and make it, as they can do, a decided success. The paper will remain on its present footing, as an independent journal, so far as its pecuniary responsibility is concerned.

THE DEPTH OF THE CONSCIENCE.—How deeply seated the conscience is in the human soul, is seen in the effect which sudden calamities produce on guilty men, even when unaided by any determinate action or fears of punishment after death. The wretched criminal, as one rudely awakened from a long sleep, bewildered with the new light and half recollecting, half striving to recollect, a fearful something, he knows not what, but which he will recognize as soon as he hears the name, already interprets the calamities into judgments, executions of a sentence passed by an invisible Judge, as if the vast pyre of the last judgment were already kindled in an unknown distance and some flashes of it, darting forth at intervals beyond the rest, were flying and lighting upon the face of his soul. The calamity may consist in loss of fortune, or character, or reputation; but you hear no regrets from him. Remorse extinguishes all regret, and remorse is the implicit creed of the guilty.—Coleridge.

Those who retort angrily, instead of letting remarks fall harmlessly, are like one who throws a missile that has been hurled at him, only to have it again hurled at him with a surer aim and deadlier force. It is much better to let it lie untouched at your feet.

"Thou, God, seest me!"—Bible.

THE CHILD AND THE BIRD.—A beautiful child one morning offered some rich dainties to a sky-lark in a golden cage; but the bird refused to eat, and flapped his wings against his prison bars, eager to soar through accustomed fields of light and sing at Heaven's gate.

Then the child knew that his favorite cared for other food and longed to fly from his narrow home, so he opened the door of his pretty cage, and soon the lark was soaring on swift wings, singing a song of richest melody, and was hidden by a snow cloud from the little gazer.

After a few brief days the spirit of the child, like the bird, escaped from its earthly prison, the door being opened by the angel of death.

The Lord saw that that mortal tenement, beautiful though it was formed, was no fit mansion to contain a spirit ready to join the choir of infant worshippers in Heaven.

A way of escape was offered, and the ransomed child responded to the call of a Saviour: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

FATHER IGNATIUS.—Father Ignatius, when at Rome, went up the Scala Santa very devoutly on his knees; but he thus relates his encounter with one who tried to make a Romanist of him:

"I must not omit to tell you that the Professor of Dogmatic Theology at the Propaganda has called on me. His arguments were 'loud' and lengthy, but not in the least convincing, as he started from ungranted premises, and would not allow me a chance of putting in an inquiry, much less a dissenting word. He called the Church of England my idol, which I must must throw down before I could come to Christ. This amused me amazingly."

A GOOD ANSWER.—A young lady in a Sabbath School asked her class, "How soon should a child give its heart to God?"

One little girl said, "When thirteen years old;" another, "ten;" another, "six." At length the last child in the class spoke, "Just as soon as we know who God is."

Conversion is, when the longing of the soul is no longer to a sensual gratifications, or worldly abundance, but simply and purely to heavenly things; so that when the question is asked, wherein do I seek for rest, satisfaction and enjoyment? the heart can answer at once, in communion with God, through Jesus, by the Spirit.

No spiritual man performs a harsh action on the ground of legal right; the main question with him is, how any action will be estimated in the land of spirits, according to the Divine standard of legality there extant.

The 29th of June, 1867, will be the 1800th anniversary of St. Peter's death. On that occasion the Pope is to convoke all the Bishops of christendom to Rome, where a grand jubilee will be celebrated.

BIBLE BONES.—A shrewd old working man once said: "For a long period I puzzled myself about the difficulties of Scripture, until at last I came to the consolation that reading the Bible was like eating fish. When I find a difficulty, I lay it aside and call it a bone. Why should I choke on the bone, when there is so much nutritious meat for me? Some day, perhaps, I may find that even the bone may afford me nourishment."

We would that there were less picking of bones, and more of feasting on the substantial food with which infinite love has spread the spiritual board!

BIBLES FOR THE WORLD.—It has been ascertained that since the first Bible Society began its work, in 1804, the various societies in different lands have issued upwards of eighty-one millions of Bibles and Testaments. To these if we add the number printed by private publishers, they will make an aggregate little short of one hundred millions.

MARRIED,

In Prattsville, Ala., on the morning of the 27th ult., at the residence of Daniel Pratt, Esq., by the Rev. A. J. Briggs, Mr. JAMES B. WOLF, of New Orleans, La., and Miss JENNIE DERARNELUBIN.

OBITUARIES.

ELIZABETH G. CARSON, consort of Judge Robert Carson, of Millcan, Texas, was born in Edgfield District, South Carolina, on the 11th day of April, 1807. She made a profession of faith in Christ at the Rocky Mount Church, in Jones county, Georgia, in the year 1825, becoming then and there a member of the Methodist Church.

She remained in the communion and fellowship of the church of her choice, a faithful and consistent Christian woman up to the period of her death. On the 10th of March, 1846, in Talbot county, Georgia, she was married to Robert Carson, and on the 6th of March, 1866, she died in great peace, at Millican, Grimes county, Texas.

Through a long and useful life, sister Carson exemplified the character of a true Christian by active and benevolent sympathy with the sick and suffering; by a firm adherence to the doctrines and usages of her church; a prompt, zealous, habitual conformity to its discipline; and by a tender, loving and untiring devotion of heart and life to the domestic obligations of a mother and wife. A life thus spent never fails to make the hour of death a period of happy trust in God and joyful hope of heaven. Thus it was with our sister. She was ready to die. In her last moments she found the Saviour present to cheer and comfort her soul. Our loved and lamented friend proved the sustaining power of grace in the Church below; and by that grace has been safely guided, we doubt not, to "the rest that remains to the people of God."

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

"The business of the current week," says the Price Current of Wednesday last, "opened on Saturday with but little activity in any branch of trade, the prevailing dullness being increased by its being rainy and inclement, but with a return of fine weather the market has since exhibited more animation. With regard to our leading staple, in particular, the movement has been checked by a further decline in Foreign Exchange.

COTTON—We noticed in our last report that after quite an active demand on Friday, the market closed at 28 to 30 cents for Ordinary, 32 to 33 for Good Ordinary, 34 to 36 for Low Middling and — to 38c for Middling. There was no material change on Saturday, but the demand continued fair. The sales summed up 2800 bales at rather stiffer prices than Friday's currency. On Monday the market opened with a good demand and an upward tendency, but at a later hour, owing to discouraging accounts from New York, and a decline in Foreign Exchange, prices lost their buoyancy, and closed at a reduction of ¼ to ½ cent, as follows: Ordinary 28 to 30; Good Ordinary, 31 to 32, Low Middling, — to 35; Middling, 38 to —.

TOBACCO—The stock is very small, but more liberal supplies being expected, there is a fair prospect for an early resumption of our former trade. In fact, we are informed that foreign buyers are only awaiting for sufficient supplies to warrant their entering the market. There has been some enquiry for foreign export, but only a few hogsheads have been sold to the city trade, at prices ruling within the range of the quotations below. Three hhds medium, heavy, old, sold at 16c, and 2 at 18 cents per lb. Low Refused, Light—5 to 6½; Good do., 7 to 8; Common Leaf, 9 to 10; Fair, 12 to 14; Good, 15 to 17; Fine, 18 to 20; Choice Selections, 21 to 24. Heavy—7 to 7½; Good do. 8 to 9; Common Leaf, 10 to 12; Fair, 14 to 17; Good, 18 to 20; Fine, 22 to 24; Choice Selections, 26 to 28.

SUGAR—There is a fair supply of the production of Louisiana on hand, but very little demand, and the sales on Saturday and Monday were confined to 150 hhds at about previous prices 12½ cents for Good Common, 14 cents for Fully Fair, 14½ cents for Seconds, 16 to 16½c for Light Yellow Clarified, and 15 cents for Prime to Choice. Yesterday there was more demand and the market was firmer. There were sales of 125 hhds at 7½ cents for Inferior, 12 cents for Common, 13c for Low Fair, 14¾ to 15½c nis for Seconds, 15½c for Yellow Clarified, and 16½c for Choice Yellow Clarified. There is a large stock of Cuba on hand, but only a retail demand at 12¾ to 13c for No. 13, 14c for No. 14, and 15c per lb. for No. 15.

MOLASSES—The market is nearly bare of the production of Louisiana. There has been very little demand, however, and only a few barrels were sold on Saturday and Monday at 55 cents for Common, and 75 cents per gallon for Prime, slightly fermenting. Yesterday we did not hear of a sale. There have not been any sales of Cuba Molasses. It may be quoted by the cargo at 48 to 50 cents per gallon, in lots at 51c, and at retail at 55c.

WESTERN PRODUCE—The general market has again shewn very little animation since the date of our last review. Prices for Flour, Corn and Oats have ruled lower. There has been a good jobbing demand for Bacon at firmer prices, but other articles of Western Produce and Provisions have been neglected.

FLOUR—The supplies are increasing. Dealers, who are the only buyers, have been holding back, and prices, especially for the lower grades, have consequently declined 50 cents per barrel. The sales on Saturday and Monday were confined to 3000 bbls., in lots of about 100 bbls. at $5 to $5 25 for Common, $6 75 for Fine, $7 50 for Superfine, $10 for some on its merits, $9 for Low Extra, $10 to $10 37½ for Medium Extra, $11 to $11 35 for Good Extra, and $12 75 per barrel for Choice Extra. Yesterday the market was very dull and depressed, and only 1500 barrels were sold, in small lots, to dealers, at $6 for Fine, $7 30 to $7 50 for Superfine, $9 and $10 for some on its merits, $11 75 to $12 50 for Good Extra.

BACON—There has been a very good jobbing demand at firm prices. On Saturday 20 casks Shoulders sold at 13c, 80 at 13½c, and 40 casks Clear Sides at 17 cents per lb. Shoulders have been selling in a small way at 13¼ to 13½ cents, Ribbed Sides at 16 to 16½, Clear Sides at 17 to 17¼ cents, Smoked Hams at 18 to 20 cents, and Sugar Cured Hams at 20 to 22c per lb.

GREEN MEAT—There is a good stock on hand, but the market is dull, and there have been no large sales since our last review excepting 10,000 lbs Shoulders, in bulk, on Saturday, at 10½ cents per lb. Green Shoulders have been selling in a small way at 11¼ to 11c per lb Yesterday there were retail sales of Green Shoulders at 11½ to 12c, and Sides at 13 to 14c per lb.

LARD—The market has continued dull, and there have been only retail sales at 14 cents for prime in tierces and 21c in kegs. There is a fair stock on hand, but holders decline making the concessions asked for by foreign buyers. Round lots may be quoted at 18 to 18¾ cents in tierces and 19½c in kegs.

BUTTER AND CHEESE—Butter is in fair supply; there is a good demand for Choice Northern, but other descriptions are dull. Northern Butter is selling at 40 to 60c, Western 30 to 40 cents per lb. All descriptions of Cheese are in fair supply at 23 to 24c, and English Dairy at 27c per lb.

WHISKEY—The market is well supplied, but continues dull, there being very little demand, even at retail. Good Western Rectified is retailing slowly at $2 20 to $2 34 per gallon.

CORN—Has been in good supply, but less in request, and prices have ruled in favor of buyers. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 15,000 sacks, in lots, at 82 to 82½ cents per bushel.

BRAN—The supplies are liberal, at $1 10, 1 45 and $1 17½ per 100 lbs.

COAL OIL—Is selling in a small way at 60 to 62½ cents per gallon in bbls, and 85 to 90c in cases.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE General Conference
OF THE
M.E.CHURCH SOUTH
Convened in New Orleans, April 4, 1866.

NINTH DAY.

FRIDAY, April 13, 1866.

The Conference met at 9 o'clock, A. M., pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by Bishop Paine.

The opening devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. W. H. Watkins, of the Mississippi Conference.

Rev. L. Rosser, chairman of the Committee on Missions, presented and recommended the adoption of the following, as a substitute for the 7th chapter of part II of the Discipline, which, on motion, was ordered to be printed:

COMMITTEE ON MISSIONS: REPORT NO. 1.

The Committee on Missions beg leave to submit the following as a substitute for the entire Section VII, Part 2, pp. 277–291 of Discipline:

1. The Missionary operations of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, shall hereafter be committed to the management of two separate Boards, to be styled severally the Foreign and the Domestic, under the provisions and regulations following:

THE FOREIGN BOARD.

ART. I. This Board shall consist of a President, two Vice Presidents, a Secretary, a Treasurer and nine Managers. They shall all be members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and be quadrennially elected by the General Conference.

ART. II. The Board shall have authority to make by-laws for regulating its own proceedings; to appropriate money to defray incidental expenses; to provide for the support of superannuated missionaries, and widows and orphans of missionaries, who may not be provided for by any Annual Conference, (it being understood that they shall not receive more than is allowed by the Discipline to other superannuated preachers, widows and orphans); and to print books for the Indian and Foreign missions; and shall publish annually a statement of its transactions and funds; and shall also lay before the General Conference a report of all its transactions and a statement of its funds up to some convenient day, near and prior to the time of holding the General Conference.

ART. III. Seven members, at all meetings of the Board, shall constitute a quorum.

ART. IV. The Board shall keep a journal of all its proceedings, and the minutes of each meeting shall be signed by the presiding officer and the Secretary.

ART. V. The revenue of the Board shall be derived as follows: From annual collections in every congregation, in such month as each Annual Conference may direct; from special collections made by the Secretary; and from donations and legacies.

ART. VI. The sums allowed for the support of missionaries shall not exceed the usual allowances to other itinerant ministers. The Board shall meet annually to vote appropriations of money to those in the employment, and the President of the Board shall draw on the Treasurer for the allowance, in quarterly or half yearly instalments. And the Board shall require communications to be made quarterly by each of the missionaries, or from each mission, to the Secretary, giving information of the state and prospects of the mission in which they are severally employed. No one shall be acknowledged as a missionary, or receive support from the Board who has not some definite field of labor assigned him, or could not be an effective laborer on a circuit, except as provided for in the second article.

ART. VII. The Secretary shall reside at the place where the Board is located, but may be a member of any one of the Annual Conferences. It shall be his duty to journalize the proceedings of the Board, and to conduct their correspondence; to advise the Board of any matters which he may conceive important; to travel, as much as possible, through the connection, visiting the Annual Conferences and the Missions under the care of the Board, promoting the interests of the Board; to give the missionaries any information that may be necessary; to prepare and furnish for publication in the church papers, monthly, an abstract of the proceedings of the Board and condensed accounts of the missionary work; and furthermore, it shall be his duty to attend to all the business of the Board with the Government of the United States in relation to schools which have been or may hereafter be committed to its care in the Indian country, by the Department of the Interior or Commissioner of Indian Affairs; and it shall be his duty, also, to prepare and superintend the publication of the Annual Report, under the direction of the Board. His salary shall be fixed by the Board.

ART. VIII. The Treasurer shall hold all the funds of this Board in his possession, in safe deposit with such institutions as the board may direct; which deposit shall be made by him as an officer of the Board, and subject to his drafts as such, and his successors in office. He shall furnish an annual report, to be published with the annual report of the Secretary.

ART. IX. In case of vacancy occasioned by death, resignation or otherwise, in the Board, the vacancy shall be filled by the Board, by, and with the consent of one more of the Bishops, until the ensuing General Conference.

ART. X. Any one of the Bishops, on the recommendation of the Board, shall appoint Missionaries to the foreign field.

ART. XI. This board shall be located and domiciled in ——.

ART. XII. This Constitution shall not be altered or amended, but by a vote of two-thirds of the General Conference present and voting on the alteration or amendment.

THE DOMESTIC BOARD.

ART. I. This Board shall consist of a President, two Vice Presidents, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and nine Managers. They shall all be members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and be quadrennially elected by the General Conference.

ART. II. The Board shall have authority to make by-laws for regulating its own proceedings; to appropriate money to defray incidental expenses; and shall publish annually a statement of its transactions and funds and shall also lay before the General Conference a report of all its transactions and a statement of its funds up to some convenient day, near and prior to the time of holding the General Conference.

ART. III. Seven members, at all meetings of the Board, shall constitute a quorum.

ART. IV. The Board shall keep a journal of all its proceedings, and the minutes of each meeting shall be signed by the presiding officer and the Secretary.

ART. V. Each Annual Conference shall have charge of the Domestic Missions within its own bounds.

ART. VI. It is recommended that each Annual Conference organize a Conference Missionary Society, auxiliary to this Board, under such regulations as they shall severally adopt or General Conference order. Each Conference Society shall annually transmit to the Secretary of this Board, a copy of its annual report, embracing the operations within its bounds, for publication in his annual report.

ART. VII. The revenue of this Board shall be derived as follows: Each Annual Conference Missionary Society shall forward to the Treasurer annually at least, one tenth of all its collections for Domestic Missions, and whatever ballance may be in the treasury after defraying the expenses of its own Missions, from special collections made by the Secretary; and from donations and legacies.

ART. VIII. The Board shall have power to grant assistance from its funds to such Annual Conference Missionary Societies as are not able to support the Domestic Missions within their own bounds.

ART. IX. The Secretary shall reside at the place where the Board is located, but may be a member of any one of the Annual Conferences. It shall be his duty to journalize the proceedings of the Board and to conduct their correspondence; to advise the Board of any matters which he may conceive important; to travel, as much as practicable, through the connection, promoting the interests of the Board; to furnish for publication in the church papers monthly an abstract of the proceedings of the Board and condensed accounts of the missionary work; and it shall be his duty also to prepare and superintend the publication of the Annual Report, under the direction of the Board. His salary shall be fixed by the Board.

ART. X. The Treasurer shall hold all the funds of this Board in his possession, in safe deposit with such institutions as the Board may direct; which deposit shall be made by him as an officer of the Board and subject to his drafts as such, and his successors in office. He shall furnish an annual report, to be published with the annual report of the Secretary.

ART. XI. In case of vacancy occasioned by death, resignation or otherwise, in the Board, the vacancy shall be filled by the Board, by and with the consent of one or more of the Bishops, until the ensuing General Conference.

ART. XII. This Board shall be located and domiciled in ——.

ART. XIII. This constitution shall not be altered or amended but by a vote of two-thirds of the General Conference present and voting on the alteration or amendment.

2. Let each Annual Conference form itself into a missionary society, auxiliary to the Domestic Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, under such regulations as the Conference severally shall prescribe. And let each Conference Society transmit by its secretary to the secretary of the parent Board a copy of its annual report; stating, specifically, the number and names of the missions belonging to the Conference; the number of members of the Church, and of the children catechised in each mission; the numbers admitted on trial, and received into full fellowship, during the year; the number baptized, and, as nearly as may be, the numbers attending public worship, and of the whole population within reach of the missionary's appointments, together with the number of meeting houses on each mission.

3. It shall be the duty of each Annual Conference to provide for the taking up of separate collections during the year, within the bounds, for the Foreign Board and the Domestic Board.

4. It shall be the duty of the presiding elders to bring the subject of our missions before the first Quarterly Conference of each of the circuits and stations of their districts, yearly, for the purpose of moving the Quarterly Conferences to adopt such measures as shall be deemed best for the promotion of the cause, by increasing the number of contributors, and the amount contributed for missions, in their several circuits and stations.

5. It will be expected that in the examination of character, in the Annual Conference, a reference will be had to the faithful performance of the duty of preachers on this subject.

The Committee recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. The Missionary Society of the M. E. Church South, is hereby directed to transfer all the assets, property, and liabilities connected with the Indian and China Missions to the Foreign Board; and all assets, property, and liabilities connected with Domestic Missions to the Domestic Board.

2. These Boards shall, as soon as practicable, after organizing, procure separate and suitable acts of incorporation in their respective localities.

LEO. ROSSER, Chairman.

Rev. Dr. W. Smith, of the South Carolina Conference, presented a memorial from the Washington Street Church, in Columbia, South Carolina, it being an address to the members of the M. E. Church, South, appealing for aid.

Rev. Dr. W. Smith said: I should not do justice to my own feelings if I were not to add a few remarks upon presenting this memorial to this Conference. I have been at a loss to know what direction to give it. I do not see that it requires to be referred to any special committee. I am aware that this Conference has not funds at its disposal, or I am persuaded that the same generous spirit which has always animated you would make you contribute liberally to that church. There is however one thing that may be done very appropriately, that is, for this General Conference to give utterance to their sympathy for those who have been most deplorably afflicted in this late cruel war; and as the Columbia Conference has appointed an agent to receive donations, it may be well for this General Conference to endorse that agent and recommend the object of his mission to the generous consideration of the people throughout the country. When I look upon the past history of that church, when I look around me here and see so many esteemed and venerable men who have been connected with that church, and when I call up the flood of recollections associated with that church, my feelings are almost too big for utterance. I remember it as the spot where I first gave my heart to God. That building now lying in ashes, is where some of the most venerable and oldest members of this General Conference labored perhaps before I was born. I remember that it was a spot where christian liberality and christian feelings were called out and exhibited on the noblest scale. But, sir, it is now gone. Our friends at a distance have heard of the ruin of Columbia, they have heard of the sad havoc which war has made in that beautiful town, but the imagination cannot conceive of the scene of ruin that has been left. Throughout the long street where the business was conducted, block after block, on every hand the widespread conflagration has swept down and all now lies in ashes and ruins, save where some one desirous to recover from the shock, has commenced to build again, and here and there, perhaps, some single story building rises out of the ruins. The men of that church are men that have been wont, in the day of prosperity, to dispense with a bounteous hand, and to respond liberally to all appeals, but now many of them are dependent upon charity for their daily bread. It is a sight to make any man weep, and I believe there is scarcely any one who knew Columbia in its days of beauty and prosperity, who could visit it now and behold its ruins without weeping tears of bitterness and sorrow for its sad, sad fate. That congregation, made up of noble and generous men and women, with a large membership and flourishing Sunday School, are now scattered and dispersed and know not where to call home.

Rev. Dr. E. W. Sehon, of the Louisville Conference, then offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, that this Conference has heard with deep emotions of the sad fortunes of our brethren in Columbia, South Carolina, and earnestly commend the agent, Colier Murchison, who is soliciting aid for the rebuilding of their church, to the kind and liberal consideration of the members and friends of our communion.

The order of the day being the consideration of a resolution offered by Rev. Dr. A. W. Smith, of the Virginia Conference, some days ago, in reference to the rule on page 47 of the Discipline being submitted to the vote of the Annual Conferences, and a substitute for the same to expunge that rule from the Discipline,

Rev. J. C. Granberry, of the Virginia Conference, said there were two questions to which he would briefly speak; first, ought this veto power to be conferred on the Bishops, and secondly, if so, how ought it to be conferred? He could not agree with Dr. Smith in the opinion that the effect of the proviso will be only to specify or limit the veto power which already belongs to the Episcopacy. He could not find in the Discipline, either expressly or by inference, any such power. He found that Bishops preside at our Annual Conferences, and decide questions of law which are there raised. Bishops also preside over our General Conferences, but have no such power to decide questions raised here. Dr. Smith argues that they have to sign the journals to make them authentic, and that if they withheld their signatures, the acts passed by the General Conference would not be valid. He thought the signing of the journals a mere matter of form, and that the Bishops have no such powers as indicated. This veto power conferred on the Bishops is not to make an additional check, but to make available a check which already exists by law. Suppose the General Conference should attempt, by a majority vote, to adopt some measure, which is embraced in the first five restrictive rules. Where is the remedy against such a measure becoming a law? Who shall decide that it is unconstitutional—who shall decide that it is embraced within the scope of those five restrictive rules? There is nobody that can decide unless it is the Bishop. It may be that there will be an effort made by some of the members to introduce laymen in the General Conference hereafter. Some of the members think this will be covered by one of the restrictive rules, and, therefore, will require a two-third vote of the General Conference, and a three-fourth vote of the annual conferences, and there are members who think it will require only a majority vote of the General Conference. Who shall, and who ought to decide this question? We have Bishops—a select body of men, whose years, experience, wisdom, and devotion to the church, eminently qualify them to be judges of our constitution.—Not only that, but they are judges at our annual conferences. They decide law, and there is no appeal except to the bench of Bishops.—You put yourselves in this anomalous position, that the General Conference passes a law, which is, of course, binding upon the annual conferences; the annual conferences possess a majority in contradiction to that law, the Bishops decide that that is in opposition to the General Conference, and it is overthrown. But there is a higher law than the rules of the Conference—the restrictive rules of your constitution. The General Conference violates a law that is imposed upon it, and there is nobody to decide that they have violated it. There is another reason why this veto power should be lodged with the Bishop. The language of this proviso does not state any violation of the restrictive rules, but gives the veto power to what is unconstitutional. The question then arises whether these restrictive rules are a part of the constitution, as referred to by that proviso. If not, then they are entirely unguarded. Does it grant that if any measure is brought up which embraces a point in the restrictive rules, you can overthrow it by a majority vote? The church has devolved upon us a great responsibility. If you adopt this proviso, you protect whatever the Bishops shall decide to be the constitution of the church. He would like an amendment so that it would read, "The Bishops may present to the General Conference their objections to such rule or regulation, with the reasons thereof; and if, after hearing the objections and reasons of the Bishops, two-thirds of the members of the Conference present shall vote in favor of the rule or regulation so objected to, it shall also be submitted to the Annual Conferences, and if two-thirds of the Annual Conferences concur, it shall become a law." Suppose the General Conference, by a majority vote, attempt to introduce lay-delegates, together with clerical delegates, into the General Conferences of the church. The Bishops, after having the matter under consideration, bring in a decision that it is unconstitutional. The matter is submitted to the vote of the General Conference again and two-thirds vote for it. But if it is unconstitutional, it has not yet received the concurrence of three-fourths of the annual conferences, which, by the constitution, is necessary in order to pass such a measure, although it becomes a law according to this proviso. Therefore, it seemed to him that the Bishops ought to have the power to veto any act passed by this General Conference that they regard as a violation of the constitution, and then it should require a two-thirds vote of the General Conference and a three-fourths vote of the annual conferences, to make it a law.—Something has been said about the great power that would be thus given to the Bishops. It did not seem to him too much power to be lodged in their hands. In the first place, no Bishop can make a motion in this body, as he and other delegates could. Neither can they vote on any proposition brought before this body. All they can do is to prohibit legislation. They have not the power of vetoing any measure because they think it unwise. The President of the United States has the power of disapproving of any Congressional measure, whatever may be the ground of his objections. We do not propose to give the Bishops such a power as that; they can only return such measures as they deem unconstitutional. It was urged the other day, that by the veto power one Bishop may be equal to twenty-three delegates in making a law. He thought there was a fallacy in such an argument. It would be the decision of the Episcopal bench that would offset that number. Three might vote for a measure, and two against it, but it is not fair to consider that one is an offset to twenty-three, any more than it, in this General Conference, a measure should receive fifty-three votes for, and fifty-four against, and it should be claimed that one vote offset the whole fifty-three of the other side.

Rev. Dr. A. L. P. Green, of the Tennessee Conference, said he thought it barely possible that there may be some members present who do not fully understand the whole workings of this question from its beginning. As circumstances had held him to a pretty close contact with it all the time, he thought it worth while to make a few statements, and probably it may lead the members to a more accurate conception of the point at issue. In the General Conference of 1844 the majority of the Conference determined that the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church was supreme. Do not forget that fact, for they contended for and decided it to be a fact. The delegates from the Southern division of the church took grounds that there was a power co-ordinate with the General Conference, and that it required the co-operation of those two powers to make it supreme. This is what led to the division, and not the question of slavery. That was the exact point of difference. The General Conference determined that they had the right to punish a member of an annual conference, or an officer of the General Conference, without law—that the General Conference being supreme in power, they had the right to punish those persons without law. This we demurred against and contended that they had no right to do that thing, and that the Bishop had no right to entertain any such question. In answering this point they took the ground again that the Bishops were not a co-ordinate part of the Government, but the creatures of the General Conference, and consequently had to do precisely what the General Conference demanded that they should do—that the General Conference being supreme, they had the right to command the Bishops, to make them keep their seats, to make them entertain a question, or put a vote, and decide thereon, and sign and seal their acts. The Southern delegates took the ground that the Bishops were co-ordinate; that the deacons and elders were primary; that the Annual Conference was secondary, and that the General Conference was supreme within a certain limit, and could do such and such things under certain restrictions, and no more. They demurred from our decision. They contended that we were wrong, and they right, and a great "Croton" speech carried it, as they supposed, triumphantly. We brought in a protest, in which we took the ground that the power you talk of was absolute, and was embraced in the genius, and, by implication, in the platform of our church—that this power was absolutely existing, and that they had by this course of conduct ignored a power which was a natural and legitimate element of the Church; that the power of the Bishop to judge law, and to entertain or reject questions that might be proposed, was as old as the church; that that power had never been seriously questioned; that we had always practiced it in the church, and that, as such, it ought to be regarded as a law of the church, and that it was a natural and elementary principle. With this decision on the part of the members of the Church South, we protested against the course of the General Conference, came home to our people, and the ground taken by us was laid before the church in its elementary character; brought before the quarterly meetings and Conferences, and every body, and was everywhere approved. Under this view of the case a convention was called, and the M. E. Church South was organized. We went to work under that precise state of things, so that very thing contended for by Dr. Smith is, to all intents and purposes, an elementary principle in our church, as thoroughly defined and established as it is possible for the people and a Convention or Conference to do it. This principle was thought plain enough by the General Conference held at Petersburg, and no action was taken in regard to it. Subsequently we thought this should be put in the Discipline, and then it was that we thought we ought to throw around that power a little guard, for the Bishops might sometimes do too much, and consequently this proviso was introduced. It may be necessary that the action of the General Conference should also be guarded in reference to this measure, so that it will require not only a two-thirds vote of the General Conference, but also a three-fourths vote of the annual conferences to pass a measure over the Bishops' veto. But the great point that he particularly called attention to is, the recognition of the veto power of the Bishops. That is an elementary principle of the church, as we organized it, from bottom to top, all around it, all through it, and all over it. It is the principle that divided us, and the great organic corner stone of the church when we organized it. It seemed to him that it was utterly impossible that there could be any other view than this.

Rev. Dr. Wm. A. Smith, of the Virginia Conference, then made a lengthy speech on the same subject, after which the Conference adjourned without action thereon.

TENTH DAY.

SATURDAY, April 14, 1866.

The Conference met at 9 o'clock, A. M., pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by Bishop Andrew.

The opening devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. Wm. G. E. Cunningham, of the Holston Conference.

Bishop Andrew: I have thought several times since we have been here, that perhaps it would be proper for me to make a few suggestions which you can take in good part or not, just as you please. As the most of you are probably strangers to this climate—at least to this city—it requires a good deal of caution on your part, because you are especially exposed to the influence of the climate, especially if there should be any epidemic in the wind. Be careful what you eat. It is a very easy matter to bring on disease at this time. Take care how you indulge in fruits. Men not accustomed to an abundance of such things coming here, are apt to thus indulge too freely. Now, if there should happen to be a case of cholera reported here, there would be a terrible scattering, and it would be questionable about our ability to keep a quorum here. There is a possibility of that thing. I hope it will not come to pass, still it may. Yet I see you are conducting yourselves as though you had a certificate that can be relied upon; declaring that you will have no disease, whatever you may do. Brethren, remember you have a good deal to do, and that you have scarcely done anything yet. I like free discussion, but I like to have it understood that speakers should concentrate and bring their thoughts within a small compass. If we all indulge in desultory discussions we shall have nothing but talk. I mean, do not take up more time than is necessary. I should like to know if you have done one single thing since you have been here. There has been a great deal of talk, but I want to give you this hint, that we have got a good deal to do. The church is expecting a good deal of you. Whenever I receive a letter, the expression is, that the people are anxiously looking to you. The eyes of all the church, the eyes of the people, and above all, the Eyo of God is upon you. Again, I would like to know whether there has been a conversion since we have been here? One Brother says that there has been three. There ought to have been more. There are plenty of sinners to work upon, and if we are all faithful, God will certainly give us some instances of his grace. Some of you have come here from a long ways, have never been here before, and you think that your talent, learning, and ability, must be shown in your preaching. But I tell you preach Jesus, and him crucified. Preach as in your work in the country, and believe me, the people of this city will like your preaching all the better if you preach plain scriptural truths. If they see nothing but an exhibition of talent, they will be disappointed. Preach as if you expected to meet your congregation at the bar of God, and leave behind an influence that will enable them to hate their sins, and love their Savior.

Bishop Paine took the chair.

Rev. G. Jones, of the Memphis Conference, asked leave of absence for Rev. M. J. Blackwell, and that Rev. J. H. Brooks take his place. Granted.

Rev. Dr. W. M. Wightman, chairman of the Committee on Episcopacy, presented a report recommending the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, first, That the following be incorporated in the Book of Discipline, to take the place of Item 11, under question 3d section 5, page 63: "To travel during the year, as far as practicable, through the presiding elders' districts of each Annual Conference which may be included in his Episcopal district, in order to preach and to oversee the spiritual and temporal wants of the church."

Resolved, secondly, That the Episcopal College be strengthened by the election of six additional Bishops.

Laid on the table under the rule.

Rev. Dr. D. R. McAnally, Chairman of the Committee on Books and Periodicals, presented a report, and recommended the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the agent or agents of our publishing interests, together with the Book Committee, be instructed to obtain suitable plans and specifications for building houses of worship in cities and towns, and also in rural districts; and that they also cause the same to be published in book form, for the use and benefit of the church at large.

On motion of Rev. H. A. C. Walker, of the South Carolina Conference, the report was adopted.

Rev. J. E. Evans, chairman of the Committee on Colored People, presented a report, recommending the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That we recommend to our people the establishment of day schools under proper regulations and trustworthy teachers for the education of colored children.

On motion of Rev. Dr. A. H. Mitchell, the report was adopted.

Rev. J. E. Evans also presented another report from the same committee recommending that the colored people be organized into separate charges, have their own annual conferences, colored persons be licensed to preach, and ordained deacons and elders according to the Discipline when they are deemed suitable; the bishop may form a district of colored charges and appoint to it a colored presiding elder when, in his judgment, it is required; when it is judged advisable by the bishops, annual conferences of the colored people may be organized to be presided over by our bishops; when two or more annual conferences shall be formed, let the bishop advise them to form a general conference in fraternal union with ours; and special attention should be given to Sunday schools for colored children. Laid on the table under the rule.

Rev. Dr. E. H. Myers, Chairman of the Committee on Changes of Economy, presented a majority and also a minority report, in reference to the reception of members into the church, with a form therefor, and also giving directions for the social meetings.

Rev. Dr. Myers said the point of difference in the reports is, that by the plan offered in the majority report, a committee is to be raised in every congregation, wherever practicable, to be composed of three or seven members. In the minority report there is no direction given with respect to the committee, but such committee becomes possible in certain cases, but is not obligatory. The reports lie on the table under the rule.

Rev. J. E. Evans, chairman of the Committee on Circulating the Holy Scriptures, presented a report.

Upon motion of Rev. Dr. W. H. Watkins, of Mississippi, the report was adopted.

Rev. Dr. Jefferson Hamilton, Chairman of the Committee on Boundaries, presented a report, recommending—

That the request from the Mississippi Conference, a change of boundary so as to include that part of the State of Mississippi now in the Mobile Conference, within the Mississippi Conference, be not granted.

That the request from the Arkansas Conference to divide, making the Arkansas River a boundary line, be not granted.

And recommending the adoption of a resolution in favor of extending the boundaries of Conferences beyond the geographical line fixed in 1844.

On vote the resolution was adopted; the remainder of the report lies over under the rule.

A minority report from the same committee was also presented, favoring the division of the Arkansas Conference as proposed. Laid over under the rule.

Rev. N. Wilson, of the Baltimore Conference, offered a resolution requesting the Bishops to prepare for publication a commentary on the Discipline, embracing the Episcopal Decisions, which, on motion, was adopted.

Rev. Dr. Smith, of the Virginia Conference, said that, in regard to the question receiving a two-thirds vote of the General Conference of 1854, he was perfectly satisfied from his recollection, that the vote was nearly, if not quite, unanimous. If, however, any are unwilling to take the imperfect record of the journal, he thought the vote had better be taken over again.

Rev. Dr. L. Rosser, of the Virginia Conference, said that in the examination of all fundamental questions ordinarily there are two classes in the investigation—those who seek, with a scrupulous conscientiousness and a fearless intrepidity, that which is truth, and are resolved to ally fortune with the destiny of that truth through all its career; and that other class who are prompted frequently to sacrifice the convictions of their judgment and the impulses of their faith, particularly so in the latter case on the present occasion. Imposing was the array on yesterday on this subject, and scarcely had it been his privilege to notice so much ingenuity in the marshalling of forces and the calling up of artillery in battle. A young and gifted minister is sent forth to conciliate the enemy, but, unfortunately, he brought back an unfavorable response. Next an old and experienced scout is sent out to survey the land and prepare the general for the Sunday School Gathering.

The bright eyes, and ribbons and banners, of several hundred Sabbath School children filled the Carondelet Street Church on Sunday afternoon, with a glad and highly interested audience. The array of youthful forms and faces and fashion, was in striking contrast with the gray hairs, sober vestments and grave presence of a hundred clergymen.

The life of the resurrection is in every church that folds these helpless ones and leads them in and out to pastnre. The ministry of Christ is never more the ministry of the Resurrection, than when employed in feeding the children of the Church. He that "dwelleth in the praises of Israel," delighteth in the hosannas of children. And the voices of these little ones vibrate in the hearts of all that love the Saviour.

The songs were delightfully sung There is a wren living about our house that, in the early morning, sings very much in the same way—a sort of Sunday-wren, that absolutely sings sweeter on a Sabbath than upon any other day. Well, we suppose that the voice of a little boy or a little girl, hymning His praise, is, in the ear of the Lord, such a melody as is to us the Sunday-song of that wren. When all the children sang together we tried to think what instrument it most resembled; it was more silvery than the lute; more ringing and wave-like than the musical glasses; sweeter than the harp or viol. If those in Heaven are like "little children," the voices of many children must be next to the music of angels—the murmur of Heaven "afar off."

Most meetings of the kind are too long, but this one was exactly right. There were two speeches only. Both of them fresh, sunny speeches, of pure sentiment, suited to everybody, because suited to the children—one by Dr. Huston, of Kentucky; the other by Dr. Deems, of North Carolina.

It was an hour of good things and pleasant to remember.

From all that we can learn, this Sunday School interest will receive a large share of the attention of the General Conference. Our Church, some years ago, was disposed to look mainly to the world without for recruits, to depend upon revival seasons and efforts for filling up its membership, and somewhat disposed to neglect the children of our people. But now, while she does not abate in aggressive zeal, she realizes her resources and her responsibility to tenderly care for and train the children which God has given her.

The Saviour has only two tests of a true ministry. One is, do they care for His people, and the other is, do they care for his children—"my sheep," "my lambs." He has made it a personal matter—"Lovest thou me?" Let no man, then, claim to be a Christian minister who does not specially care for the children of the Church.

THE "NET RESULT."

Some two months ago, we called attention to the fair and Christian-like spirit of the Editor of the Methodist Quarterly Review, the Rev. Dr. Whedon: The voice of peace was once more heard in the land. One man was found who had been foremost in assailing the sucint condition of the South, who, in the recent War of the States, upheld with might and main the Northern side, yet who, with a nature original, bold, and dogmatic, was willing to allow that some good thing might come out of Nazareth. This admission was not a great deal, but it was something, and, amid sounds of universal reprobation, it was, to say the least, not unpleasant. He came forward to bespeak for us at least a hearing. He was kindly and forgivingly disposed towards the "erring sister." Not only in a public way, but in private letters, he was more than ready to cultivate that charity which never faileth. We hailed it then as a symptom of returning reason in the Northern mind. And so it was.

When, on the 9th inst., a telegram was received by the General Conference from the New York East Conference, bearing "Christian salutation" and an invitation to "unite in public and in private prayer for the peace and unity of heart of our common country, and for restoration of Christian sympathy and love between the churches, especially between the different branches of Methodists," we thought we could trace in it the hand of Dr. Whedon. Nor were we mistaken. Well, the General Conference in godly sincerity responded, and resolved "to entertain with Christian courtesy any proposals looking to the cultivation of kind and brotherly relations with other branches of the common Methodism of the country;" resolved "to pray," and did pray. So ends the first chapter.

The truth is, we down here have hardly learned the use of the telegraph. Anything coming that way startles us. It costs so much and comes so quick, seems so much like a life and death matter, that it were no wonder if its summons called out of us "all manner of prayer." But in the North, where the telegraph webs every square mile, they buy and sell, and pray by it with equal facility. It is quite common there for preachers to send over the wires the telegram, "Greeting: God is love"—just that much and nothing more. It is difficult for our people to imagine such a Christian simplicity of things—such a religious condition of the common mind as this indicates If we believed that the Millenium were at hand, we should take this as an evidence that it had already begun at that end of the Union.

About the time we calculated that the response had reached the New York East Conference, and it was in the full enjoyment and spirit of its own call to prayer, that body of ministers were warmly engaged in discussing the merits of our part of the business—referring our prayer to a committee to report upon, favorably if possible, but honestly anyhow. The committee was piously dissecting the prayer, and finding it essentially defective—"weighed and wanting"—defective first in loyalty, "outspoken loyalty;" defective next in respect to color, in "impartial justice to the oppressed;" defective politically, in respect of the Civil Rights bill—no thanks to the Senate for passing it—more still, by the "most obvious interpretation," detected in it what they had before sought for but never found—the "ascertained difference between our two Methodisms," and the "main obstacle to church unity." Our prayer stood no chance under the powerful lens of this Conference. Its seeming purity all vanished like that of spring water when placed under the microscope. "We suppose," say the committee, "that most of us are disposed to enter into any sincere prayer; as far as it goes; but we doubt whether this Conference feels a very deep interest in elaborately establishing a concert of prayer with sister churches who decline to pray for our national peace and concord. The result is, that we stand justified as having sought a religious unity upon the common ground of church and country." The truth is, our people understand open air, straight out and out praying; but anything beyond that, they are unequal to. Praying by telegraph is a more complex affair, and whatever is attempted in that way, to be done at all should be suited to the subtle, searching nature of the mysterious current.

After reading the quantative and qualitive analysis to which the learned and charitably disposed Doctor had submitted our response, and that he had detected only a trace of hypo-prayer, we were not surprised at the conclusion to which the committee arrived. No more praying for the present. A church that can't pray on the right side of the Bureau, on the right side of the Altar, and on the right side of the Government—the East North-East side, we suppose—should not pray at all; in fact does not pray, cannot pray:

Now we suppose that it would hardly help matters to say that we do pray for the country, for national peace and concord, and especially for President Johnson; that Bishops and Elders, in all public ministrations, daily mention the President, and pray God to sustain and preserve him, and to defend and deliver him out of the hands of all that hate him, that we "may lead a quiet and peaceable life, in all godliness and honesty." No, we must do as the New York East Conference does in her prayers—leave out the President and pray for Congress. So ends the second chapter.

The third is a full chapter of indignation—honest, sudden, righteous. The Rev. Dr. Curry thought that the report had been conceived in an arrogant spirit. If it were adopted, it would be a "taunt flung in the face of a defeated and humiliated people;" and thus, sifting the sifter, by one stroke consigned Dr. Whedon, the committee and the analysis to the Capulets—upon motion, laid the whole on the table. The high combination of electricity and sympathy was exploded by one patriotic touch of the New York East Conference. The residuum is almost nothing—a mere streak of something, not unlike a telegraph wire, and very much like the algebraic sign minus.

We are hardly through with one telegram before another arrives. The New York Conference, not discouraged by the judicial estimate which the New York East Conference has made of the net value of Southern christianity, proposes to us union, church unity. One Conference declines even to pray with us; but another Conference proposes to live and die with us—in a telegraphic sense. Both Conferences breathe the same air, live in the same neighborhood, and have the same sort of loyalty. Well, well, there is some hope for our salvation yet, and it is to be found in the difference of these two Conferences, as to our real "net" value. But meanwhile, we suggest that we let the telegraph alone—we don't understand its use in connection with religion. We have tried it once, honestly tried it, and it don't work. The only explanation of the difficulty that we can suggest is, that Bishop Ames is at the other end of the wire.

The New York East Annual Conference represented but a small part of the Northern Methodist Church. The General Conference of the M. E. Church South waved this consideration, and assented to a proposition which looked towards a more perfect spiritual accord between the several churches of Christ. But this object, it seems, in the estimation of that Annual Conference, was not sufficiently important in itself, to warrant any considerable outlay of prayer and fasting—did not present scope and vergo enough possibly for the pulpit ministration of a set day.

We are unwilling to entertain the thought that an Annual Conference, a grave body of godly men, would have deliberately conceived the purpose of circumventing and catching those with whom it proposes prayer. If so, it has been caught in its own duplicity. The New York Conference being the judge, there was nothing in the transaction, upon our part, unworthy of the spirit of christian fellowship.

We do not adopt this solution of the matter; but rather this, that Dr. Whedon and his friends thought that they could carry the proposition to pray through the Conference; but upon actual trial, finding themselves in the minority, escaped the mortification of failure by pretending to find a serious defect in the response of the General Conference.

We again give up the bulk of our space to the report of the proceedings of the General Conference.

attack, who then marches forth with his entire battery. For many long years the speaker had had an opportunity to determine the General's forces, and to estimate the skill of that wary chieftain. It is not possible, he imagined, to find a more powerful logician upon the American Continent, than he is, nor is it within the history of Southern Methodism that we have found a more skillful, yet imperfect system maker.

The speaker continued at some length to discuss Rev. Dr. W. A. Smith, and his speech, and closed this part of his address by comparing him to the magnolia of our forests, a tree of gorgeous and beautiful odors, but fruitless. The speaker then proceeded to discuss what he conceived to be the true issue, whether there is inherent in the episcopacy, the legislative element. He elaborately argued the question, contending that the powers of the Bishops are executively co-ordinate with the General Conference, but not legislatively so.

The Conference arrived at no final action on the question.

The Conference then adjourned with a benediction.

ELEVENTH DAY.

The Conference met at 9 o'clock A. M., pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by Bishop Pierce.

The opening devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. Dr. A. H. Mitchell of the Mobile Conference.

Bishop Pierce: I have to announce this sad intelligence received by telegraph: "Bishop Soule very ill. Can live but a few days."

Rev. Dr. Myers, Chairman of the Committee on Changes of Economy, presented the following:

REPORT No. 2 OF COMMITTEE ON CHANGES OF ECONOMY.

The Committee on Changes of Economy beg leave to offer their Report No. 2, embracing the subject of Reception of Members into the Church, with a Form therefor, and giving directions respecting the social church meetings, viz: Prayer Meetings, Love Feasts, Class Meetings, and a regular meeting proposed to be held monthly, when possible, and at least quarterly, in every congregation of church members.

All these subjects have been referred to the committee, in sundry papers from Conferences and individuals, some asking generally for changes, others offering suggestions to shape the action of the Conference; and two papers deprecating any change.

After giving respectful attention to all these papers, the Committee present a digest of their labors in a plan, which, beginning with the reception of members into the Church, sets before them their duties and privileges in that relation, and which, therefore, is so adjusted as to its details, as to form, on the whole, a harmonious system.

We may state, briefly, that it guards carefully against admitting improper members into the Church, while it does not exclude from the fold of Christ sincere and steadfast seekers of salvation; it provides, also, for extending the care of the church to those who are not ready to take on them the vows of church membership, but yet are penitents; it retains class meetings, without making attendance on them a condition of church membership; it gives more prominence to the prayer meeting than our system has given it heretofore; and it provides for regular meetings of the members of the church quarterly or monthly, when possible, in every congregation, to which meetings a specific work is assigned. It is believed that by these means discipline will be better maintained, and the membership of the church awakened to a new life; and a new energy imparted to them, adding greatly to the aggressive force of the Church.

The Committee recommend the striking out of the Discipline of Question 1, Answer 1 and 2, Section iii., Chapter 4; (pp. 138, 139) and Section ii, Chap. 3, (pp. 109, 114) Part II, and the insertion of the following:

SEC. II.—On the reception of members into the Church.

Ans. 1. In every congregation where practicable, let the Quarterly Conference select a standing committee of from three to seven judicious and faithful members, over which committee the preacher in charge shall preside, and they shall consider, by personal application or otherwise, all applications for church membership.—Where this is not practicable, the preacher in charge shall use all due diligence to ascertain whether the applicant is a suitable person to be admitted to the church, and he shall admit none other.

2. Applicants for church membership shall be made acquainted with the Discipline, and assigned to classes, until their application can be considered, as above provided for.

3. When the applicants shall have been approved, their names shall be called at a regular church meeting, and the preacher in charge shall give the admonition and propound the questions that follow:

Well-beloved, who are come hither to be admitted to membership in the Church of God, our Lord Jesus Christ, in his holy Word, hath promised to release you from your sins, and give you the Kingdom of Heaven and everlasting life; which promise he for his part, will most surely keep and perform.

Wherefore, after this promise made by Christ, ye must also faithfully, for your part promise, in the presence of this congregation, that you will renounce the devil and all his works, and constantly believe God's holy Word, and obediently keep his commandments.

Quest. Dost thou renounce the devil and all his works, the vain pomp and glory of the world, with all covetous desires of the same, and the carnal desires of the flesh, so that thou wilt not follow or be led by them?

Ans. I renounce them all.

Ques. Dost thou believe in God, the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth? and in Jesus Christ, his only begotten Son, our Lord? and that he was conceived of the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary? that he suffered under Pontius Pilate; was crucified, dead and buried? that he ascended into heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty, and from thence shalt come again, at the end of the world, to judge the quick and the dead?

And dost thou believe in the Holy Ghost, the Church of God, the communion of saints, the remission of sins, the resurrection of the body, and everlasting life after death?

Ans. All this I steadfastly believe.

Ques. Wilt thou obediently keep God's holy will and commandments, and walk in the same all the days of thy life?

Ans. I will endeavor so to do, God being my helper.

Ques. Have you been baptized?

If any answer this question negatively, let them be asked—

Ques. Will thou then be baptized in the faith you have just professed?

Ans. That is my desire.

Let them be then baptized, after which the preacher shall ask of all the applicants:

Ques. 1. Do you approve of the doctrines and discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, so far as you comprehend them, and do you agree to be governed by the rules of that church?

Ques. 2. Do you desire to flee from the wrath to come, and are you earnestly seeking to be saved from your sins?

Ques. 3. Have you faith in Christ?

The preacher may here address to the applicants such counsels as he may deem expedient; after which, taking them by the hand, one by one, he shall say to each:

"I now recognize you as a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, entitled to all the rights and privileges thereof; and commend you to the confidence, watchful care, affections and prayers of your fellow members."

The names shall then be entered upon the records of the church.

4. Applicants for membership in the church, according to the method laid down in the Discipline, section 1 of chapter.

5. Let the Church Meetings be opened and closed with religious services, and conducted in a decent and prayerful spirit.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Ministry Elected. Moved as substitute for 1st Ques. of Sec. II. of Report No. 2 of the Committee on Changes of Economy.

The undersigned, members of the Committee on Changes of Economy, agree to all of Report No. 2, from that Committee, with the exception of the first question and answer in Sec. I, on the reception of members into the Church, down to the form for their admission. For this question and answer we submit the following minority report, as a substitute for the report of the Committee:

Sec. I.—On the Reception of Members into the Church.

Ques.—How shall persons be received into the Church?

Ans. 1. When persons offer for Church membership, let the preacher in charge inquire into their spiritual condition, acquaint them with the Discipline of the Church, and assign them to classes.

2. When the preacher in charge is satisfied by due inquiry, in such way as he or the Church meeting may desire, of the fitness of the applicants to be received as members of the Church of Christ, and of their readiness to take upon them its vows and to keep them, he shall call their names at a Church Meeting, and on their presenting themselves, he shall give the admonition and propound the questions that follow.

Respectfully submitted,

JEFFERSON HAMILTON,
E. H. MYERS.

Dr. W. A. Smith, of Virginia, offered the following:

SUBSTITUTE FOR REPORT NO. 1, OF THE EPISCOPAL COMMITTEE.

Resolved 1. That section V. ch. II. of Discipline (page 53) be so amended as to read after ans. 11 to question 3, as follows, viz:

Ques. IV. Here may our "plan of itinerant general superintendency," be made more efficient as a system of oversight of the spiritual and temporal officers of the Church?

Ans. 1. Let the Bishops divide the Annual Conferences into districts to be called Episcopal Districts, composed of about — Presiding Elder's Districts, except the Pacific and Columbia Conferences, which shall constitute one district.

2. Let them annually appoint one of their number to each of these Episcopal Districts, whose duty it shall be, first, to visit each Presiding Elder's District composing his field of Episcopal labors for the year, and as far as practicable, acquaint himself with the spiritual and temporal condition of the Church. Second, to call together the official members of the district, in a meeting, to be called the District Conference meeting.

Resolved 2d. That the following be adopted as section IV. of Ch. II. of the Discipline, leaving the notation of the sections following this, to be changed accordingly, viz:

Sec IV.—Of the District Conferences.

Ques. 1. Who shall compose the District Conferences?

Ans. All the members of the Quarterly Conferences, composing the Presiding Elder's District within which the Conference is held.

Ques. 2. When and where shall each District Conference meet?

Ans. Once a year, at such place as the Conference may appoint, and at such time as the Bishop may designate.

Ques 3. Who shall preside in the District Conferences?

Ans. The Bishop assigned to the Episcopal District within which the Conference is held, or some other of our Bishops, and in case no Bishop is present, the Presiding Elder shall be President of the Conference.

Ques. 4. What is the regular business of the District Conference?

Ans. 1. To try appeals from the decision of the Quarterly Meeting Conferences in the case of local preachers.

2. To license proper persons to preach and to review their licenses annually, when in its judgment their gifts, graces and usefulness will warrant such license or its renewal—provided no person be so licensed unless he is recommended by the Quarterly Meeting Conference of the charge of which he is a member.

3. To recommend suitable candidates to the Annual Conferences for Deacons' or Elders' orders in the local connection—provided they are duly recommended by their Quarterly Meeting Conferences.

4. To recommend suitable candidates for admission on trial in traveling connection—provided that no person shall be so recommended, unless he comes well recommended from the Church of which he is a member; and provided further, that no person shall be recommended to the Annual Conference for admission, or for ordination, without first passing an approved examination before the Conference, on the subject of Doctrines of Discipline, and the ordinary branches of an English education; nor shall any license be valid unless signed by the President and countersigned by the Secretary of the Conference.

5. They shall supervise the finances of the District, and in order to this, each recording Steward shall forward a report of all monies expended the preceding year, and of the amounts appropriated for the current year.

WM. A. SMITH,
W. H. ELLASON.

Rev. Dr. J. B. McFerrin and Rev. Wm. Mooney, presented a preamble and the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Bishops be, and they are hereby requested, to submit the question of the change of the name of the church to the several annual Conferences at the session immediately preceding the next meeting of the General Conference, and, upon the recommendation of three-fourths of all the members of the Annual Conferences present, and voting in favor of such change, the General Conference may alter the style and title of the Methodist Church South, adopting such enactments as, in the judgment of the body, will best promote the interests of our Church and the glory of God.

Resolved, That in assuming the name "Methodist Episcopal Church South" it was not the purpose of our connection to establish a local or sectional church, but it was merely intended to mark a line of separation in the jurisdiction of the two co-ordinate branches of the "Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States," as provided for and in reality agreed upon in the "Plan of Separation" adopted by the General Conference of 1844.

Rev. Dr. J. B. McFerrin, of the Tennessee Conference, said that he highly respected and felt deeply impressed by the remarks and sentiments of the brethren who have urged upon the General Conference the importance and necessity of a change of name. He was aware of the force of the arguments offered already in favor of a change, and on the other side, of the force of the arguments of those who are opposed to a change. It is thought by a great many that a change will injure us in some portions of the work. He was clearly satisfied in his own mind that the present General Conference has no authority legally to change the name. That name was recognized by the Convention at Louisville in 1845, and was submitted to all the Annual Conferences in our connection, and with nearly a unanimous vote was adopted. He did not believe it expedient, or proper, of that we have authority now to change the name, without referring it back to the Annual Conferences and getting the concurrence of these bodies. He further believed that in three or four years matters will quiet down, and then the people will have an opportunity to investigate this subject calmly, and will then see the propriety of a change or not.

Rev. Dr. W. Smith and Rev. Dr. L. M. Lee offered a preamble and the following resolutions, as a substitute:

Resolved by this General Conference, That a convention of delegates from all the annual conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church South be called to meet in ——, on the 1st day of May, 1867.

Resolved, That the ratio of representation in such convention shall be one delegate for every — members of ministers in full connection in each conference.

Rev. Dr. W. Smith, of the South Carolina Conference, said that he was exceedingly anxious that whatever we do in regard to fundamental changes in the economy of the church should be constitutionally done, and should be so done as to prevent any future dispute or cavil. Very grave and serious doubts may be entertained as to the power of this General Conference, and those doubts may hereafter come up in some form. If we call a convention, that convention can be vested with plenary power and act upon the matter so as to leave no question as to its legality in the future. He agreed with Dr. McFerrin, that a change of the name of the Church could perhaps only be done by the action of the Church. The present name was given it by the convention, which was confirmed by the various annual conferences, and he doubted exceedingly the competency of this General Conference to change that name. There are other questions which have been suggested here, in reference to changes of Economy, which, it would also perhaps be well to refer to a convention of the church. He was in favor of many of these changes proposed, but at the same time, if done in such a way as not in any wise to injure the church, and to produce perfect harmony, and that no question may rise in the future as to their legality; and especially for the latter reason, he made the suggestion in regard to calling a convention to deliberate upon these questions. He remembered hearing a remark made by one of the most venerable members of this body upon the floor of the General Conference of 1851, and which he had borne in mind ever since, and ever should bear in mind. That remark was made by Rev. Dr. Pierce, and was this—that he had lived long enough in this world to learn, that nothing was well enough so long as it could be made better, and was in answer to that common remark—"Let well enough alone." He was in favor of progress, was anxious to see everything done wisely and well, and at the same time he was both progressive and conservative. He was anxious that everything should be done to secure the church against all improper changes, and against all dangers. There is a question as to the legality of the action of this General Conference on this subject, and he was disposed to believe that the only way in which many of those questions can be suitably adjusted will be by a convention of the Church, and for that reason he submitted that paper. There is also another consideration. At the present time the condition of the country is such that no man knows what is before us in the future. It is impossible to tell what the lapse of twelve months may bring forth; the next General Conference is too remote for the consideration of these questions, and the calling of a convention during the coming year would be the better course to conciliate all.

After some discussion, in which Revs. Kennedy, Head, Hughes and Myers took part, upon motion, both resolution and substitute were laid on the table until they should again come up in their regular order.

Rev. Dr. L. Rosser, chairman of the Committee on Missions, submitted the following report:

COMMITTEE ON MISSIONS: REPORT NO. 2.

Having considered the Report of the Missionary Secretary, your Committee would recommend to the General Conference the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That we note with gratitude to God the prosperity which has hitherto attended our Domestic and German Missions, and do hereby earnestly recommend their continuance, under such regulations as the General Conference may see proper to adopt.

2. Resolved, That we call special attention to our Indian Missions, and recommend an increased effort for their support; and that we request the Bishops to appoint a Superintendent for them, without waiting for the organization of the new Board, as the Mission is now in a disorganized state.

3. Resolved, That the continuance of the China Mission during the war, when it was impossible to communicate with the brethren in that Mission is cause of sincere gratitude to that gracious Providence which so wonderfully preserved us; and we do hereby recommend to the General Conference that it be continued, with the hope that it will be largely increased and amply sustained.

4. Resolved, That we highly appreciate and approve the long and valuable services of our worthy Missionary Secretary, Rev. E. W. Sehon, D. D., especially during the last eight years.

In regard to the resolution signed by W. H. Seat and R. Alexander, your Committee beg leave to report as follows:

In as much as the Board of Foreign Missions, provided for in our report No. 1, is not prohibited by its Constitution from the employment of Annual Conference agency in the presentation of its work, no special legislation on the subject is deemed necessary.

Your Committee also ask the attention of the General Conference to the following resolution:

Resolved, That we request the General Conference to appoint a time for Missionary meetings to be held in this city during its present session, and to direct the Committee on Public Worship to make the necessary arrangements.

Respectfully submitted.

LEO ROSSER, Chairman.

Rev. Wm. G. E. Cunnyngham, of the Holston Conference: I wish to make a few remarks in reference to the history of the China Mission, which would perhaps be more appropriate here, than at any other time. The China Mission, as is generally known by the members of this General Conference, was commenced in 1848, and has, consequently, been in existence not quite eighteen years. During that time eight missionaries have been sent to that field.—But one of whom was able to remain more than six or seven years without returning home—a necessity imposed upon them by the condition of their health, and not from choice. Not a single missionary sent to that field ever expressed a wish to return, or would have done so, except on the condition of absolute necessity. The aid furnished by the church at home for that mission was barely adequate to its support. This was not the fault of your Board, or that of your Secretary, but if there was a fault anywhere, that fault lies with the church. I am not here to complain against the church, or to represent our friends at home as wanting in sympathy for the China Mission; but I merely make the statement as a fact. Still I think there has been some disposition on the part of our friends at home to complain of a want of success there; but it is due to the missionaries there to state that they receive a bare support, and any one acquainted with foreign missionary work, must know that a mere support of the missionary is very poor and insufficient for their work.—They must have money to build churches, to employ teachers, and to carry on the general work of the mission. I have nothing more to say concerning the support of the mission, but I wish, as briefly as possible, to state what has been done.

Bishop Early here said that the speaker had not mentioned the name of the one missionary who had remained in that field for ten years. He had the pleasure of informing those who were not already acquainted with the fact, that brother Cunnyngham is the one.

Rev. Mr. Cunnyngham then continued: We have a regularly authorized M. E. Church in China in connection and cordially in sympathy with the M. E. Church South.—The church consists of thirty members; and I can bear witness that so far as I understand christian character, so far as I know anything in the experience of my own life, they are true christians—christians of the highest type. Some of them, by the purity of their lives, by their constant energy and activity as lay missionaries, have often rebuked me. We have our regularly organized class; we have a Sabbath-school, which numbered forty members in 1861 when I left there. In that Sabbath school we had a Bible class, the youngest member of which was sixty-two years old, sitting there to learn as little children the A B C of christianity; four of them were converted; three were inquirers seeking there the way of life. We had also a number of smaller Bible classes, some composed of children, some for grown persons, and some for persons from twenty-five to thirty years of age. We have love-feasts and quarterly meetings. We have translated our Articles of Faith, General Rules and the Ritual of our church. These general statements I make in answer to the questions that have been asked me again and again—"What has been done in China?" Other questions have been proposed to me concerning the character of the work and the success of missionaries in that field, which I will be pleased to answer at another time. If I am at all capable of judging of the success attending the labors of our christian brethren at home, I do most emphatically declare the China Mission a success. I believe that if every foreign missionary was withdrawn from there, it would live, as had been the case in Madagascar. I believe that we have men and women that would die for Christ, and die willingly and gladly. Some of them have been arraigned by the Government, and brought before the authorities, and threatened with instant death, unless they would retract; and not one gave evidence of an unwillingness to sacrifice his life for the cause of Jesus. In closing, I ask your sincere prayers and hearty co-operation for the prosecution of this work.

On vote, the report was then adopted as a whole.

Report No. 1 of Committee on Missions, being a substitute for Section VII of Part 2 of the Discipline, was taken up.

Rev. Dr. Wm. A. Smith, of the Virginia Conference, said he did not feel satisfied with the report—there was too much of it. He wanted more concentration of the matter. He was in favor of having as much of the subject of Missions placed in the hands of the Annual Conferences as possible. He was also opposed to having two separately organized missionary boards—foreign and domestic.

Rev. Dr. E. W. Sehon, of the Louisville Conference, said the difficulties which grew out of the old plan were so many that a committee was raised by the present Board, some three years ago, to take the whole subject under consideration, and this report is the result of their labors. One of the great difficulties of the plan was to make a proper application of the funds raised. One would give to domestic missions, but not to foreign—with another it would be the reverse, and as it all went into a common treasury there were constant complaints of the wrong application of funds. But by this plan contributions are made for specific purposes and are scrupulously appropriated according to the wishes of the contributor. In 1858, a plan somewhat similar to this was presented to the General Conference by Dr. Boring, which the speaker opposed at the time, but had since become convinced that it is the better plan. The speaker argued for some time, to show the peculiar excellences of the proposed plan, and closed with an eloquent and stirring appeal for more zeal and devotion to the missionary cause.

Rev. Dr. L. P. Green, of the Tennessee Conference, thought the plan produced too much machinery. He could not well see how two great boards, one for home and the other for foreign missions, could work harmoniously together. He could, however, understand how one great plan for foreign missions can be put in operation by this General Conference, and therefore thought the annual conferences should take up the balance and do the best they could with it. He was emphatically opposed to one of the provisions by which the wives and children of deceased missionaries are dependent upon the Society for their support. It might not be much of a burden for a few years, but in time it would probably be a very serious charge. He thought the widows and children in such cases, should be under the care of the Annual Conferences in which the missionary formerly labored. He also thought the provision giving the Board the power to publish books for missionary purposes might work much evil. He favored leaving the missionary work in the hands of the Annual Conferences.

Rev. Dr. McTyeire: Allow a brief history of the constitution now under consideration. The old Board at Nashville, which had long worked the old plan, appointed a committee of its own body five years ago, to propose a paper of this kind, to be submitted to the General Conference. It was prepared leisurely, carefully, and by men acquainted with the practical workings of the Missionary Society. The Board felt there was need of a new plan, and that no committee raised and sitting during a General Conference could perfect one. This constitution, therefore, is over four years old. It has passed through the scrutiny of your able Committee with slight changes, and comes to you with their unanimous recommendation. The opinion of missionaries working in a foreign field coincides with that of the Committee. There must be merit in the plan, and it is hoped that brethren will not lightly object to it, and on the spur of the moment insist on amendments which cannot be worked harmoniously into the instrument. The foreign work has its own arguments, its friends and its aims. The domestic work is based on kindred but different reasons; let us work them separately. It will avoid confusion and help both. At present we have two causes, and but one bag. This leads to confusion and an unsatisfactory administration of funds. You make a plea on the miseries of pagan China to obtain money, and then lay it out for preaching to the negroes in the next county. This is the vice of the system of one board. Give us two, ably officered, and we shall date a new era in missionary enterprise. The inexpediency of pressing hastily conceived amendments upon a mature instrument is seen in the two preceding speakers—two of our wisest men. Dr. Smith's objection is distinctly provided for in an article of the new constitution. Though it has been printed two days, I suspect the Doctor has not read it. [Dr. Smith: That is a fact; I have not.] Dr. Green's sagacity fixes upon two difficulties only, in the new constitution, and they happen both to be taken literally from the old constitution under which he has worked twenty years. If you turn over domestic missions to the care of annual conferences, why, it is asked, have a central or connectional domestic board? Because, through it, as an organ, the wealthy conferences can help the weaker. The stronger a conference is, the fewer calls for domestic missions, and the more for foreign missions. We would obey the Lord's command to Moses that they who gather much should have nothing over, and those that gather little should have no lack.

On motion the report was taken up, item by item, for consideration. The first item being up

Rev. W. W. Bennet, of the Virginia Conference, was opposed to the plan of two separate Missionary Boards. He thought it would much embarrass our missionary operations, involve needless expense, and is so complicated that the people cannot readily comprehend it. He could not perceive why one Board would not answer every purpose. Speaking from experience, he also thought the plan submitted would greatly retard the raising of funds for missionary purposes.

Rev. H. J. Johnson, of the Tennessee Conference, thought the plan under consideration would make no serious difference in reference to collections for missionary purposes. All the contributions could be taken at one time, and each one could specify to what particular missionary work he desired his contribution appropriated.

Rev. J. B. Cottrell, of the Montgomery Conference, said we have tried one system and found it a complete failure, and now a new plan is projected which has had eight years to cool and be looked at in the daylight of a committee. He saw nothing complicated in the establishment of two boards of missions, and favored the plan proposed.

On vote, the first item was adopted.

Rev. J. W. Glenn offered an amendment to add the words "And when, from any cause, the General Conference shall fail to meet at the appointed time of meeting, the Board shall continue in office until the next meeting of the General Conference."

On vote, the amendment was agreed to, and the article as amended adopted.

Articles 2, 3, 4 and 5 were taken up, and adopted without amendment.

Article sixth was taken up.

Rev. W. Harrington offered an amendment, to incorporate in the article the following: "The sum allowed for the support of missionaries shall be sufficient to support them in their work, as the Board may determine."

Amendment agreed to, and article as amended adopted.

On motion, the vote by which the 2d article was adopted was reconsidered.

Rev. Dr. J. C. Keener offered an amendment, to incorporate in the section the following: "And the Board shall have power to appropriate money for the building of churches, school-houses, and residences for missionaries, in any missionary field under its charge, out of any funds which may have been specially given for that purpose."

Amendment agreed to.

The article as amended was then adopted.

The 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th articles were taken up and adopted without amendment.

The 11th article, in regard to the location of the Board, was taken up.

The following nominations were made for filling the blank: A. H. Redford, Louisville; R. A. Young, Nashville; G. Jones, Memphis; W. E. M. Linfield, New Orleans; J. A. Cobb, Baltimore; W. A. Smith, Richmond.

On motion, the nominations and article were laid on the table for the present.

Article 12th was taken up and adopted.

Rev. H. N. McTyeire offered an amendment to incorporate into the report the following: "The Bishops shall be regarded as ex-officio Members of both Boards." Agreed to.

Rev. Dr. L. M. Lee offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Foreign Board be, and they are hereby instructed to project no new foreign mission until the next General Conference.

After quite an animated discussion, on vote, the Conference refused to adopt the resolution.

That part of the report referring to the Domestic Board was then taken up, and articles 1 to 12 inclusive were adopted with but slight verbal amendments.

Article 13 was then taken up and the first and second sections adopted.

The third section, providing for the taking up of separate collections during the year, was considered.

Rev. H. F. Johnson, of Tennessee Conference, moved that the word "separate" be stricken out.

Rev. A. L. P. Green submitted a few remarks in favor of blending the separate collections into one.

On the call of the motion to strike out the word "separate," it prevailed.

The resolutions were then separately and collectively adopted.

Dr. T. O. Summers moved that the report be referred back to the committee for their amendment, and it was so referred.

Rev. Dr. L. M. Lee, Chairman of the Committee on Itinerancy, asked for the transfer of some papers from that committee to the Committee on Episcopacy, which was granted.

Bishop Early gave notice that the Conference would sit to-morrow with closed doors.

After the usual announcements, the Conference adjourned, with the benediction of the Bishop.

TWELFTH DAY.

TUESDAY, April 17, 1866.

The Conference met at 9 o'clock, A. M., pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by Bishop Early.

Rev. Dr. Thomas O. Summers, of the Mobile Conference, conducted the opening devotional exercises.

Bishop Early: I am requested by Brother Burkhead, who received the intelligence this morning by telegraph, to announce to the Conference that on Sunday last David B. Nicholson, of the North Carolina Conference, died. A man of more than thirty years in the ministry, devoted to the work, of great influence, and whose death is a great loss to his friends and the church.

Rev. Dr. C. F. Deems, of the North Carolina Conference: Before the minutes are read, I would like to say a few words in regard to that great and good man, the tidings of whose death has come upon us so suddenly. There have been few men among us, who, for the last thirty years, have been more devoted to the interests and prosperity of our church than David B. Nicholson. He was a man of extraordinary natural character—a man of well-balanced mind—a man of great prudence, and a man of great piety. I have stood to Brother Nicholson in so close a relationship, and we have been want so to sympathize with one another's sorrows, within the last few years, that those ties have bound us very closely together. His present wife was an inmate of my family before their marriage, and is one of the best and most exemplary of christian ladies. The last letter received in my family, before I left home, was a long and beautiful letter from Mrs. Nicholson, describing the calm and quiet spirit of our dear brother. He was almost certain that he could not live through the summer. The last words I said to my wife, on leaving home, were: "Be sure to write to Brother Nicholson, and send him my love." The North Carolina Conference is greatly bereaved. There is no one of us who could have been taken, over whose grave sincerer tears would have been poured. I know that he died well; he lived so well, and all I wish for myself is, grace that I may be as good a man as I believe was David B. Nicholson. The North Carolina Conference affectionately and respectfully ask the sympathy of this whole body in this our great bereavement.

Rev. Dr. J. Hamilton, Chairman of the Committee on Boundaries, presented the following report, which lies on the table under the rule:

COMMITTEE ON BOUNDARIES — REPORT NO. 4.

1. The committee have had before them the memorial of the German Ministers in Texas, setting forth their condition and wants, and we learn from them and from other sources that, while they have suffered in common with the rest of the country, they have labored under some peculiar disadvantages and trials. Efforts have been made in certain quarters to induce them to leave the Church, but they continue loyal. They ask for aid in various forms, which your committee hope will be granted. We recommend to the General Conference the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That this General Conference has heard with lively satisfaction of the fidelity of our German brethren in Texas, to the Church, in a time of temptation, and of the devotion and zeal of the ministry to their work amid sacrifices and trouble, and we tender them our sympathy and promise them our fostering care, and all the material aid in our power.

2. Your committee has also had before them the resolutions of the delegates of the Kentucky, Louisville, and St. Louis conferences, asking authority to annex territory in Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, to their respective conferences, and recommend the following resolution for adoption:

Resolved, That such churches or societies as are now, or may hereafter be organized in sections of the country not under our ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and which wish to be united with us in church fellowship, may be connected with the conference most convenient to them; and that the Bishops be authorized and requested to form such churches into separate annual conferences whenever, in their judgment, the interests of the work demand such action.

J. HAMILTON,
April 16, 1866. Chairman.

Rev. Dr. D. R. McAnally, Chairman of the Committee on Books and Periodicals, presented the following report, which lies on the table under the rule:

COMMITTEE ON BOOKS AND PERIODICALS—REPORT NO. 2.

1. The report of C. K. Marshall, agent for the Church Evangelist, having been sent to this committee, and by them duly considered, they respectfully report that while they regard the matter set forth in the report of the agent as one of interest and importance to the whole Church, yet, in view of the present embarrassed condition of the publishing interests of our Church, the committee deem it inexpedient for the Church to engage in such an enterprise at present.

2. In regard to sundry papers sent to this committee, referring to the action of a convention of preachers held in Louisville, Kentucky, in April, 1864, and to the action of certain commissioners appointed by that convention, we respectfully report: That, in view of the fact that the members of that convention, representing eight annual conferences, together with the commissioners appointed by them, were acting with the sole design to protect and preserve to its lawful owners the property of the Church; and in view of the further fact that the convention and its commissioners did much towards the accomplishment of that very desirable end, the committee recommend that the General Conference approve the action and object of said convention, and also direct the agent of our publishing interests to pay the traveling expenses of the commissioners, and also the fee of the lawyer employed by the said commissioners.

D. R. MCANALLY, Chairman.

The Conference then went into secret session to consider an appeal to the General Conference, by Rev. Geo. F. Doggett, from the decision of the Virginia Annual Conference, expelling him from the ministry.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

WEDNESDAY, April 18, 1866.

The Conference met at 9 o'clock A. M., pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by Bishop Paine.

The opening devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. Dr. Samuel Watson, of Memphis Conference.

Rev. Dr. Thomas O. Summers, Chairman of the Committee on Revisals, presented Report No. 5.

Rev. Dr. D. R. McAnally, Chairman of the Committee on Books and Periodicals, presented Report No. 3.

Rev. Dr. L. M. Lee, Chairman of the Committee on Itinerancy, returned three papers to the Conference with the statement that they had first been referred to the Committee on Changes of Economy, then to the Committee on Itinerancy, and that committee is of the opinion they properly belong to the Committee on Revisals, and return them with the request that they be so referred. Referred as requested.

Rev. W. C. Johnson presented a resolution that the Committee on Revisals be instructed to inquire into the propriety of altering the Book of Discipline so that the questions now propounded to and answered by candidates for admission on trial shall be propounded to and answered by preachers proposed for admission into full communion in the Annual Conferences, as was the practice under the laws of the Church before the General Conference of 1858. Referred to Committee on Revisals.

Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall presented resolutions, that each pastor of our several churches shall, at an early period after the session of the annual conferences, call their churches together and take a subscription from every member capable, weekly, monthly, quarterly, or semi-annually, for the support and maintenance of pastors, presiding elders, missions, Bible Society, the poor, the widows and orphans of deceased ministers, and Sabbath schools, and that when it is impracticable to carry out this plan of raising church funds, such plan may be adopted as the pastor and officers may deem advisable. Referred to the Committee on the Support of the Ministry.

Rev. W. Harrington presented a resolution to instruct the Committee on Sabbath Schools to report a plan by which the pupils of the Sabbath schools shall be instructed in sacred music, and introduced into the congregations to participate in that part of divine worship. Referred to the Committee on Sunday Schools.

Rev. F. L. Roswell offered a resolution instructing the Committee on Revisals to take into consideration the propriety of striking out the 26th paragraph, section, 6, part 2 of the Discipline, and inserting a substitute proposed. Referred to the Committee on Revisals.

Rev. Wm. A. Smith, presented certain resolutions, which were referred to the Committee on Changes of Economy.

Rev. Dr. E. E. Wiley presented a resolution that the case of H. Campbell, expelled from the ministry by the Holston Conference, and an appeal made from its decision to the General Conference, be remanded to the Holston Conference, to there resume the trial de novo, or as they may see fit, the records of the former trial being lost. Resolution adopted.

WHEREAS, In view of the amount of time already consumed, without definite conclusion, upon the usual business of our regular standing committees, embracing matters of vital importance to the successful prosecution of our work, the business of the remainder of this session of the General Conference should be so conducted as to secure action upon such business, in preference to other matters that might be proposed; therefore,

Resolved, That it shall not be in order to take up from the table for consideration any other business until the following matters be disposed of, namely: That part of the report of the Committee on Episcopacy in relation to the number of Bishops needed for the general work, and the election of the same; that part of the report of the Committee on Books and Periodicals which refers to our general publishing interests and the election of editors, agents and other officers needed for the same; the report of the Committee on Missions, and the election of Secretaries and other officers connected therewith; the report of the Committee on Sunday Schools, and the elections therewith that may be called for; the report of the Committee on the Condition of the Colored Population; the report of the Committee on Itinerancy; and appeal cases from the Annual Conferences.

Resolved, further, That when the matters and measures specified in the above resolution be duly considered and disposed of, our Bishops be requested to work out all other matters proposed to be taken up for our consideration.

Rev. J. A. Cobb said that as they offered the resolution to contract the business of the session they did not propose to debate it, and he therefore moved the previous question.

On vote, the call for the previous question was sustained.

Rev. J. Hamilton, of the Mobile Conference, moved that the preamble and resolutions be laid on the table for the present.

On vote, the motion was carried.

The Conference then went into secret session and took up the unfinished business of yesterday.

From Stevens' Centenary of Methodism.

PROGRESS OF METHODISM.

Before the end of the century Methodism had planted its standards from Nova Scotia to Georgia, from the Atlantic coast to the farthest western line of emigration. It ended the century with eight Annual Conferences, or Synods, with three bishops, Coke, Asbury, and Whatcoat, with two hundred and eighty-seven traveling preachers, besides hundreds of local preachers, and with nearly sixty-five thousand church members, of whom more than thirteen thousand were Africans. In the first Annual Conferences, 1773, all the preachers save one, William Watters, were foreigners; but after the first General Conference (1784) Wesley dispatched no "missionaries" to America. All his former missionaries, except Asbury and Whatcoat, had returned to Europe, or located; but American Methodism had now its native ministry, numerous and vigorous. Besides Asbury, Coke, and Whatcoat, it still retained many of the great evangelists it had thus far raised up, Garrettson, Lee, Abbott, O'Kelly, Crawford, Burke, Poythress, Bruce, Breeze, Reed, Cooper, Everett, Willis, Dickins, Ware, Brush, Moriarty, Roberts, Hull, Losee, and others. A host of mighty men, who were yet young and obscure, had already joined these standard-bearers: M'Kendree, George, (both afterward bishops,) Roszel, Nolley, M'Gee, Smith, Gibson, M'Henry, Kobler, Fleming, Cook, Scott, Wells, Pickering, Sharp, Bostwick, M'Claskey, M'Combs, Bartine, Morrell, Sargent, Taylor, Hunt, and scores more. These were soon to be followed, or rather joined, by another host of as strong if not stronger representative men: Roberts, Hedding, Soule, Bangs, Merwin, Capers, Pierce, Winans, Kennon, Kennedy, Douglass, Redman, Thornton, Finley, Cartwright, and many others equal to them; and amid an army of such were to arise in due time, to give a new intellectual development to the ministry, such characters as Elliott, Ruter, Emory, Fisk, Summerfield, Bascom, Olin, and others, some surviving to our day, men of not only denominational but of national recognition.

The Church retained vividly the consciousness and spirit of its original mission as a revival of apostolic religion. Its ministry was remarkable for its unction and preached with demonstration and with power; its social and public worship was characterized by animation and energy; it was continually promoting "revivals" and "reformations," extending them, not only over conferences or single states, but sometimes simultaneously over much of the nation. Therefore was its growth rapid beyond parallel; the 65,000 members with which it began our century, had swelled by the year 1895 to nearly 250,000, its 207 preachers to more than 1,300.

By the year 1844, when it was divided by the secession of the South, it comprised more than 1,170,000 members, and more than 4,600 traveling preachers; it had gained, in the preceding four years, 430,897 members and 1,325 preachers, an average of 107,724 members and 331 preachers, per year. Thus, in the hour of its most gigantic strength and capacity for usefulness, when its arms could be outstretched to the ends of the world with the blessings of the gospel of peace, was the mighty Colossus broken in twain.

But the loyal Church fast recovered its strength and moved onward, so that by 1850 it reported nearly 690,000 members, 4,129 traveling and 5,420 local preachers. In 1860 it reported 994,447 members, 6,987 traveling and 8,188 local preachers; and the two bodies, North and South, enrolled 1,743,515 members, 9,771 traveling and 13,541 local preachers.

This hundredth year of the denomination witnesses in the Methodist Episcopal Church alone 60 conferences, 928,320 members, 6,821 itinerant preachers, 8,205 local preachers, 10,015 churches, valued, with their 2,948 parsonages, at $26,883,076. Including both branches of Methodism, North and South, the aggregate is 1,628,388 members, 9,421 traveling and 13,205 local preachers. Its congregations are among the largest in the country, and its terms of Church membership are among the most stringent known in Protestant Christendom. It is a moderate calculation that there are three members of its congregations to one of its communicants, including its numerous children and youth; at this rate the aggregate population, more or less habitually under the influence of its two leading Churches, North and South, can hardly be less than 6,710,000; it is more likely about 7,000,000, more than one-fifth of the population of the nation.

Adding the other branches of Methodism, there must now be in the United States 1,950,000 members and 12,000 traveling preachers religiously training, more or less, a population of 7,800,000 souls. In the whole western hemisphere, including the West Indies and British North America, there are at least 2,100,000 Methodists.

In the four Middle States, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware, "Methodism had in 1850, according to the United States census, 2,556 churches, while the four remaining evangelical and leading denominations—the Baptist, Congregationalists, Episcopalian, and Presbyterian—had an aggregate of only 3,600, showing that Methodism holds about three quarters of the popular power of evangelical Christianity in that central division of the country, where the leading state and metropolitan city of the continent are found. In the ten Southern states and the District of Columbia, the above named denominations have 4,458 churches, the Methodists 5,015, which gives Methodism an excess of several hundred churches over the combined evangelical competition; and in the eleven Western states, the comparison stands: the four denominations, 4,899 churches; Methodism, 4,863, which, with the statistics of the territories compiled since the census of 1850, will give to the youngest leading religious body in the land a relative ascendancy still greater than in the states of the South. The sum of it all is, that in New England, Methodism is rapidly gaining on the ancestral religion; that in the Middle states, it nearly balances the four great evangelical denominations; that in the states of the South, it more than balances them; that in the great West, which is soon to wield a weightier influence than all the other states combined, it has taken a still stronger position.

Anecdote of Madison.—When the debates on the adoption of the federal constitution were occupying the attention of our patriot fathers, and when wisdom, like a daily visitant, hovered over the hall where genius and virtue breathed fire into the hearts of the sages who were there assembled, Mr. Madison wished to speak, but was almost afraid, from his physical debility, to make the attempt. However, he begged a gentleman who was sitting near him to pull him by the coat when he perceived he was becoming exhausted.

Mr. Madison arose and opened his speech. His voice was feeble at first, it became stroger as he progressed; passage after passage of brilliant illuminating thought came from his almost inspired lips; every point of the great subject he touched he left for men of all future times to look upon as if he had thrown the clouds from the summits of the hills. He went on and concluded. "Why," as he sunk back exhausted in his chair, "why did you not pull me when you saw me going on as I did?"

"I would rather have laid my finger upon the lightning," was the reply.

Sacred Earth.—Tread carefully, sinner, on the globe where Jesus's blood trinkled down. Forget not Calvary. Jesus did not die in heaven, nor in hell, but he came to earth, that every hill might remind you of the hill of atonement; that every tree might tell you of the cross; that every garden might whisper, "Gethsemane." The earth is sacred now, for Christ Jesus came upon it to pour out his life for us.

Questions for Parents.—Do you pray for your children earnestly, constantly, believingly? Do you teach your children perseveringly, unweariedly, lovingly? Do you watch your children tenderly, patiently, solemnly? Do you make companions of your children, that they may walk in your ways as you are walking in the ways of God?

A Hinderance to Revivals.—An American writer in the Presbyterian Banner suggests that an inadequate support of the ministry may be one of the causes of God's withholding his Spirit from the churches. A European writer in the same journal appeals to the wonderful advance as to ministerial support among the Presbyterians of Ireland, as a token of the reality of the great revival of 1859.

Dr. Watts.—It was so natural for Dr. Watts, when a child, to speak in rhyme, that even at the very time he wished to avoid it, he could not. His father was displeased with the propensity, and threatened to whip him if he did not leave off making verses. One day, when he was about to put his threat into execution, the child burst into tears, and on his knees said:

"Pray, father, do some pity take,
And I will no more verses make."

Renting Pews.—The seats in Union Station Methodist Church in Richmond, says the Episcopal Methodist, of March 21st, were offered for rent on Monday night of last week. There was great animation in the bidding; and the only difficulty encountered was the want of pews to supply the demand. The experiment seems to have been a decided success. The rental will yield, in quarterly instalments, a revenue that will enable the stewards to meet their current expenses.

Hannah Moore says: "Idleness among children, as among men, is the root of all evil, and leads to no other evil more certainly than to ill temper." Little Willie seemed to know this, for whenever he had nothing to do he would say, "Now, mamma, I have nothing to do, I am on Satan's ground, you know."

Political Preaching.

Every practicable effort seems to be made to keep up the dissension between the North and South, principally by misrepresenting the South. Its religious condition is a theme of disparaging comment. Its broken churches, its scattered congregations, its feeble effort at reconstruction, are exaggerated, with exciting comment.

Considering how they have been plundered and spoiled of their goods, how their membership has been weakened by war, how the military, since "peace" came, has frequently interfered with ecclesiastical arrangements, the fact is, that the Southern churches have shown a marvelous power and recuperative energy—something we are disposed cheerfully to call vis medicatrix Dei. The people of the South, as a general thing, have confidence in their clergy, and are willing of their poverty to sustain the ministry.

On the other side, look at these facts, not enlisted by a Southerner. The Independent—whose lucubrations hatred of the South is chronic—two weeks ago continued a letter from a gentleman of New Haven, which gave some startling statistics pertaining to the churches of Connecticut. It is stated in his letter that there are now in that State over seventy vacant pulpits, having neither pastors nor stated preachers. The writer also makes the following statements in reference to the Congregational denomination in the same State:

"Over one fifth of all the pastors in the State were dismissed during the past year, while only eleven young men were ordained. In regard to salaries, I learn from the minutes of the General Association that three pastors have no pay; one has $100; one, $200; one, $300; nine have $400; thirty-three, $500; one hundred and four, $1,000; forty, $1,500; sixteen, $2,000; four, $2,500; and three, $3,000 a year. That the average sum paid to ministers in Windham county is $653; in Tolland county, $728; Middlesex county, $819; New London county, $848; Litchfield county, $880.

This is the state of affairs among a people whose church members have not had their houses burned, their furniture and clothing destroyed, their money and valuables stolen, their church buildings wrecked, but who have grown richer by the war every year; a people not stained with slavery, not blinded by heresy, not tainted with treason; a people wealthy, free, orthodox, learned, eminently pious, and, what seems superior to every thing else which can now be said of man or angel, loyal.

We are sorry that he that watches the signs of the times has to make this record. The clergy have mainly brought it upon themselves. The people have had enough trumpet-blowing and drum-beating, and flag-flying and freedom-shrieking in the streets every day in the week. On Sunday they have sought repose in the sanctuary. They have not found it. When the abomination that maketh desolate is set up in the holy places of the Most High, no wonder the devout, and even the intelligent thinkers who are not devout, fly to their own private places.

Why can not our clergy learn wisdom by the things they have suffered? A clergyman has a right to his political opinions, and to the free utterance thereof; he has a right to make political speeches at political meetings; to stand by his party, if he will; to write partisan articles if he choose—a right, as being in a free country. Even in this he must reflect whether the fact of so doing, or his manner of doing it, may not lead the people to believe that he is using his liberty as a cloak of maliciousness. From all such things, so far as we have observed, the most godly and prudent and useful of our clergy have always abstained. They have had their reward in the souls they have comforted and led to Christ, and in the increasing confidence of the public.

But a clergyman has no right to carry his partisanship into the pulpit. The pulpit gives him a sphere of power for good, if he confine himself in its legitimate functions. He is to lead the people in the approaches to the throne of the heavenly grace. His prayers must be such as that all men there present, be they saints or sinners, be they bond or free, rich or poor, learned or illiterate, holding the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ by whatever form of expression in human language, all together may be able out of the heart to respond, "Amen." Now, surely, there are wants and desires, there are thanksgivings and praises, there are trials and temptations, there are sorrows and joys, there are hopes and fears, so common to us all, whatever evident differences there may be in our opinions upon social and political questions, that a minister of religion who puts the world behind his back, and God's dread throne of august majesty before his face, and feels that he is a sinner pleading for and together with sinners, a redeemed sinner, offering praises to the Redeemer of sinners, in that awful communion and responsible mediatorship, should allow no feeling of bitterness to have place in his heart, and no word of the forum and the hustings and the caucus to defame and destroy his prayer.

Why should the pulpit be made the rostrum for the discussion of political and social questions? If we be told that religion has to do with every department and phase of human activity, we shall readily grant it. The proper mode of bringing it to bear upon all those subjects is the question. We agree that the principles of Christianity, heartily embraced, incorporated into the intellectual constitution, and dominant over the affections, will lead individual men into the discharge of every pious and relative duty, and thus put them in harmony with God and with society, and thus finally regenerate society. The business of the ambassador of Christ, therefore, is to labor to plant those principles sincerely in the heads and hearts of men. If he have faith in their germinal vigor, he may leave them there and go his way, secure of the fruitage in the season thereof. But if he be perpetually fumbling about the seed, and striving by repeated manipulations to place it in such position and in such relation to the soil as shall hasten the growth, he will almost inevitably destroy it.

And that is the troublesome temptation of the modern pulpit, which every minister, at times, is made to feel. Our clergy must triumph over the temptation. They need not concern themselves so much with the application of these principles to the current questions of society. These questions are ephemeral; those principles are eternal. "Preach the Word," and let the world and society answer to God how they hear. It shows a lack of faith in the power of our principles to regenerate communities when we are not willing to hang the leaven in the mass, and leave it to leaven the whole.

The New York East Conference.

The "net result" of the praying telegram of this Northern Conference has been realized in an incredibly short time. We insert the following from the New York News of the 10th and 11th of April:

The Rev. Mr. Woodruff said that at 10 o'clock on Saturday night the response to the telegram sent to the New Orleans Conference was received.

After a short discussion, the Rev. Dr. Wheedon presented the following preamble and resolutions in connection with the matter:

Whereas, The interchange of Christian courtesies between the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South and the New York East Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church has demonstrated the practicability of harmonious Christian action between our two churches; therefore,

Resolved, That the New York East Conference respectfully requests the Bishops of our two churches concurrently to appoint some future Sabbath as a day of concert of prayer, public and private, in which they shall specially invite all the congregations, families and individual members of both churches to unite, that God would pour out upon the people of all the sections of our country a more perfect spirit of love, confidence, mutual justice and national union than ever existed even in the most triumphant and united days of our great Republic, that He would shed abroad in the hearts of all Christians of all sections a spirit of harmony and peace with each other, and most especially that He would, by the blessed influence of His Holy Spirit upon all branches of American Methodism, lead us to a more pure and perfect unity than has ever existed in our past history.

Resolved, That in the concert of prayer all the Methodist churches of every name, section, or color throughout our country be cordially invited to join.

Resolved, That we request our Secretary to transmit a copy of these resolutions to the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and to present a copy to the presiding Bishop of this Conference, with the request of this Conference, hereby made, that he would lay them before our Bishops at the earliest period.

Resolved, That it is to be expressly understood that nothing in these Christian advances towards our brethren of the Methodist Episcopal Church South shall, by any possibility, be considered as indicating any want of sympathy with our Methodist brethren among the freedmen of the South, or any faltering in our steadfast purpose to do all in our power to assist them in securing their highest social, intellectual and spiritual prosperity.

These resolutions were referred to a committee of five to report.

Next day Washington Church, Brooklyn, was early crowded with spectators, who patiently sat throughout the session yesterday watching the proceedings with unabated interest.

THE PRESIDENT'S VETO.

The Rev. William C. Hoyt, Chairman of the Committee on the State of the Country, said that yesterday a report had been adopted thanking the Senate for passing the Civil Rights Bill over the President's veto. He now moved to amend that report by adding to the "Senate" and "the House of Representatives," the House having yesterday passed the bill by a considerable majority over the required two-thirds. He also moved that the Secretary of the Conference be requested to forward a copy of the report to the Speaker of the House of Representatives in addition to the one to be sent to the President of the Senate.

The action taken on Monday was then reconsidered, and the amendment adopted without debate.

THE METHODIST CHURCH, NORTH AND SOUTH.

The Rev. Dr. Wheedon, from the Committee to whom was referred the whole subject of the messages which have passed between this Conference and the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in session at New Orleans, read the following report, which was made the special order of the day at 10 o'clock:

The Committee on our relations with the Church South respectfully report:

On Thursday, the 5th of April, 1866, this Conference telegraphed an invitation to the Southern General Conference to join us in a concert of prayer for unity of heart in our nation, and for harmony in our general Methodism. On Sunday the response arrived, and prayer was accordingly offered in such of our churches as received the announcement. On Monday resolutions were offered in Conference, proposing that a similar concert of prayer should be held by the entire ministry and laity of both Methodisms, by which was indicated the length to which this Conference was inclined to go, provided it was sustained by the proper response from the South.

On examining the response received, however, we find, by the most obvious interpretation, that the Southern General Conference, to our great regret, limits the extension of the proposed prayer to religious harmony alone; thus tacitly declining any prayer with us for our national unity of heart. We suppose that most of us are willing to unite in any sincere prayer for good, as far as it goes; but we doubt whether this Conference feels a very deep interest in elaborately establishing a concert of prayer with sister churches who decline to pray for our national peace and concord. The net result of the whole is, that we stand justified, as having sought a religious unity upon the common grounds of church and country; that we have ascertained what is the difference between our two Methodisms, and that we know in what mainly consists the obstacles to our church unity.

Your committee, nevertheless, would recommend that we cherish great forbearance and consideration for the wounded feelings of even Christian men in what they consider a conquered and humiliated condition. Tender dealing and generous advances, which in the weaker party may be felt degrading, may in the victorious magnanimity. Your committee, therefore, recommend to our elders, pastors and people the cultivation of generous thought and forbearing language in regard to Southern Methodism.

We conclude with offering the following resolution:

Resolved, That it be earnestly recommended to our ministry and membership, both in private and in our public congregation, to offer frequent and special prayer for the spiritual prosperity of our brethren in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and for their attainment of such a state of heart and mind as that they can so harmonize with us as that outspoken loyalty, impartial justice to the oppressed, and equal rights for all our fellow-men may become constituent parts of their religion.

A brief but animated debate followed, and Dr. Curry considered that the report had been conceived in an antagonistic spirit. If it were adopted it would be a taunting in the face of a defeated and humiliated people. He should vote against the adoption of the report.

The Rev. Mr. Brooks also opposed its adoption, because if advances could not be made to the South without its or bids, it would be better to make no advances at all.

On motion of the Rev. Mr. Inskip, the whole subject was laid on the table, amid demonstrations of applause from every part of the house.

The Conference adjourned.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

"We noticed in our last issue," says the Price Current of Wednesday last, "that our leading staple had been in good request, but that there had been little movement in any other branch of trade. There has been no improvement since in the general market, while operations in Cotton have been on a limited scale and at easier prices.

COTTON.—We stated in our last report that after a very moderate business on Friday, the market closed heavy at 30 to 31 cents for Ordinary, 32 to 34 for Good Ordinary, 35 to 36 for Low Middling and 39 to 40c for Middling. There was no improvement on Saturday, when the movement was checked by the high pretensions of factors. On Monday the market opened under depressing influences, and the sales were consequently confined to 1200 bales, at about previous rates for the higher grades, but at an irregular decline of 1 to 1½c for the poorer qualities. Yesterday the demand continued moderate, with a very light supply offering, and the business was again confined to 1200 bales, at prices showing no falling off in better qualities, and only a slight decline in the lower grades.

TOBACCO.—The receipts are yet small, and the stock is insufficient to encourage much foreign demand. Only a few hogsheads have been sold to the city trade, at prices ruling within the range of the following quotations: Low Refused, Light, 6 to 6½; Good do., 7 to 8; Common Leaf, 9 to 10; Fair, 12 to 14; Good, 15 to 17; Fine, 18 to 20; Choice Selections, 21 to 24. Heavy 5 to 7½; Good do. 8 to 9; Common Leaf, 10 to 12; Fair, 14 to 17; Good, 18 to 20; Fine, 22 to 24; Choice Selections, 26 to 28.

SUGAR.—The stock of the production of Louisiana is small, and consists of the lower grade and some Clarified. The sales on Saturday and Monday were confined to 50 hhds at 11 to 12c for Common, 12½ to 13½c for Fair, and 14c for Choice Clarified. Yesterday the market was at a stand still, and there were no sales of the domestic product. There is a large stock of Cuba on hand, but only a jobbing demand at 12½ cents for No. 12, 13 cents for No. 13, and 13½ cents per lb. for No. 14.

MOLASSES.—The supply of the production of Louisiana is very small and very poor in quality. There have not been any sales worthy of note, and we consequently repeat our previous quotations; Common, 50 cents; Prime, slightly fermenting, 75c per gallon. Yesterday there was no movement, and not even any inquiry. There have not been any sales of Cuba Molasses. It may be quoted by the cargo at 48 to 50 cents per gallon, in lots at 51 cents, and at retail at 55 cents.

FLOUR.—We have again to note a dull market for Flour; the demand is limited, and only local, but previous prices have been sustained. The sales on Saturday and Monday were confined to 6000 bbls., all to dealers, at $4 50 per bbl for Low Common, $5 50 for Common, $5 75 to $6 for Fine, $7 33½ to $7 50 for Superfine, $8 25 to $10 50 for some on its merits, $9 50 to $9 75 for Low Extra, $10 to $10 25 for Medium Extra, $11 to $11 50 for Good Extra, and $12 to $13 per barrel for Choice Extra. Yesterday there were sales of 3000 bbls to the city trade at $5 75 for Fine, $7 for Good Fine, $7 50 to $7 75 for Superfine, $8 25 and $9 for some on its merits, $10 for Medium Extra, and $11 for Good Extra.

PORK.—There has been a better feeling in the market for this article. On Monday Mess sold at $25 to $28 50 per bbl. It has been retailing at $28 25 to $28 50.

BACON.—There is a fair retail demand, and Shoulders have been selling in a small way at 13½ cents. Ribbed Sides at 15c, Clear Ribbed Sides at 16½ cents, Clear Sides at 16c, Smoked Hams at 18 to 19c, and Sugar Cured Hams at 20 to 22c per lb.

GREEN MEAT.—The market continues very dull, and there is only a small retail business doing at 11c per lb for Shoulders, and 13c for Sides.

LARD.—The market continues very dull, and there is only a retail business doing at 19 cents per lb for Prime in tierces, and 21c in kegs. There was some enquiry on foreign account, but without resulting in sales.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.—Good Northern Butter is in light supply and in demand at fuller prices; common is plenty and dull. Northern Butter is selling at 40 to 42c; Western 30 to 40c per lb. Cheese is in good supply but not much in demand. It is selling at 22 to 28c, and English Dairy at 27c per lb.

CORN.—Good and Prime have been in light supply, and request, and the market is now bare of supply in first hands. Sales were also on Saturday and Monday of 10,000 sacks, in lots, at 81 to 82½c for Ordinary Mixed, 83c for Mixed, 90 to 95c for Yellow, 97½c for White Mixed, $1 to $1 05 for White.

OATS.—The market has been steady and firm with a good demand, and 8500 sacks were sold at 53c per bushel.

BRAN.—The market is well supplied but dull, and only 1500 sacks were sold on Saturday and Monday at $1 10, to $1 15 per 100 lbs. Yesterday there were sales of 500 sacks at $1 10 per 100 lbs.

HAY.—Good and Prime are scarce and in request, and prices have advanced $3 per ton since our last review. Prime Western sold at $30 per ton, and small lots ordinary at $28 50 per ton. Yesterday sales of good Western were made at $28 per ton.

INDIA BAGGING.—There is a small retail demand, at 26c per yard in rolls, and 27½ cents in bales.

COFFEE.—There has been a fair demand for the interior, which dealers have supplied at 21½ to 27c per lb, currency, for Ordinary to Prime lots.

WOOL.—The market continues very dull and depressed. We have no sales to report, but quote nominally 45 to 47c for unwashed and 20c per lb for washed.

SALT.—There is a small retail business doing at $1 50 per sack for Liverpool coarse and $1 50 for fine in store. The imports comprise 1062 sacks from Liverpool.

HIDES.—The market is very dull and prices are unchanged. There have been small sales at 7c per lb for Green, 7½ to 8c for Kip Skins, and 9½ to 10c for Dry Hides.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE General Conference
OF THE
M. E. CHURCH SOUTH
Convened in New Orleans, April 1, 1866.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

TUESDAY, April 10, 1866.

The Conference met at 9 o'clock, A. M., pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by Bishop Andrew.

The opening devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. Dr. E. E. Wiley, of the Holston Conference.

The minutes of the last session were read and approved.

Rev. Dr. W. M. Wightman, chairman of the Committee on Episcopacy, presented a report, which, on vote, was adopted.

Rev. Dr. D. E. McAnally, chairman of the Committee on Books and Periodicals, presented report No. 4.

Rev. Paul Whitehead, of the same committee, presented a minority report.

Rev. Dr. E. H. Myers, Chairman of the Committee on Changes of Economy, presented a report.

Rev. B. Craven, of the same committee, presented a minority report.

Rev. Dr. J. H. Linn, Chairman of the Committee on Correspondence with other Churches, presented a report.

Rev. J. Ditzler, fraternal messenger from the Christian Union church of Illinois, then being introduced to the Conference, came forward and spoke as follows: I am exceedingly pleased with the cordial welcome I have received here, and tender you my most heartfelt thanks in behalf of the church and people I represent here. As I am to leave your pleasant city to-morrow, on the Edward Walsh, I am happy to have this opportunity to once more tender you my thanks for the kind and cordial reception I have received since I have been among you as a fraternal messenger from the Christian Union Church of Illinois. The people of the South have but little knowledge of the pressure that was brought to bear upon us in the North during 1862-3-4. Utterances of the pulpit were of the most inflammatory character. I allude to no one single church or denomination, but to all as a rule, and those who preached the pure Gospel of Christ were an exception to the rule. It was common to hear ministers of the highest standing with the popular element preach murder and bloodshed, and grow eloquent and fervid in denunciation of their brethren, with whom they were formerly accustomed to kneel at the same altar. We could not endure it, and we rejoice to say that the theme of our church is only Jesus, Christ and the Resurrection. It was common to hear them speak of those who bowed at the same altar with them as deserving of being hung to the limbs of the nearest oak tree, and that it was their duty so to act that they could not go along the highway without seeing their brethren hanging at every byway and cross-road. This was the customary habit throughout the land. We concluded, therefore, that we would hold forth only the pure word of God, and determine to know nothing but Him crucified. Our success has been great. Many brethren held back for a year or two before making a public movement. We never met together in General Convention until 1865, though some of us had been preaching and corresponding in 1862. To-day we are spread through seven or eight States. Our entire body numbers twelve or fourteen thousand members. In Illinois alone we have six thousand members and seventy preachers now, and I have learned since coming here that ten more ministers are awaiting my return to join with us. Wherever we are operating we are spreading. I will tell you a few of our principles. Most of us being originally Methodists, we endeavor to introduce into our faith and practice nothing that is revolutionary or vicious to the great vital principles of Christianity. Our cabinet can return the same minister to the same charge as long as the minister and people agree. The minister shall make his own agreement with his congregation as to the amount of pay he shall receive. We also thought our articles of religion should be more restricted, and we therefore hold greater stress upon regeneration, and allowed the largest liberty of conscience. You who have never been persecuted and borne humbly upon, are not prepared to appreciate the jealousy of the people on the other side of the former line. They have been persecuted by the presiding elders and preachers of their denominations. Many men have been turned out of church for taking the Chicago Times, the Cincinnati Inquirer, and the New York News. Some have been turned out for wearing their hats at political meetings. We were keenly alive to these things, and, therefore, we introduced lay delegation as a part of our polity—not admitting them into the cabinets of the church, but into the General Council, and giving them legislative powers. We believe it desirable to set forth our principles to the world. I rejoice that Dr. Deems has proposed to raise a committee to prepare a certain document. I know that such a document would have a most happy effect throughout the whole country from New York to St. Louis. I return you, again, my sincere thanks for the kindness with which you have received us, and know that our brethren in Illinois and throughout the Northwest will rejoice exceedingly to receive as fraternal messengers one of your Bishops, and the brother you will send along with him; we will meet them most cordially. Perhaps we may be regarded as having made a voyage of one hundred years across the stream, and are not at anchor. Some may think we are veering and being driven about amid the mad billows of a revolution, but we believe the anchor has a hold in the ocean of the national heart that is firm and secure. Our General Council meets in May, but our next Council meets in September, at which we expect to meet your fraternal messengers. May God's blessing rest upon your college of Bishops, upon your common Methodism, and upon all the true Israel of God.

Rev. Mr. Shaver, of the Methodist Protestant Church of Georgia, was then introduced to the Conference and spoke as follows: Mr. President and honored brethren—For your courteous respect you will please accept my heartfelt thanks. Expecting to visit New Orleans, and knowing that your body was in session, and that I had various friends from various parts of your wide extent of work, with whom it was my privilege to work in the cause of the gospel, I could not reconcile it to my feelings without coming to see them, not expecting such a greeting as to be called forward for a public introduction to the members of your body. I am happy to meet with the brethren here, and also to see the unanimity that prevails in your counsels and in your discussions. We sympathize in common as brothers expounding the same cardinal principles of the gospel of our glorious salvation, and as such we are united on the broad basis of Christian sympathy and fraternal brotherhood; and I hope the time is not far distant when the bonds that unite us will be stronger and firmer than they ever have been, if they should not [illegible] to the union of the bodies, of one of which I am a member, and the other of which you represent. When I remember the great interests that are at stake, and the changes which you will be called to act upon during this session of your General Conference, I hope your action will redound to the honor of your church and the glorious gospel at large. As a christian man and a christian minister, I most earnestly and devotedly beseech that the blessings of the Great Head of the Church may rest upon you in all your deliberations, and guide you in your counsels and actions; and when you come forth to go to your various fields of labor, may it be with a renewed spirit for the great work in which you are engaged, of winning souls to Christ, and bringing them redeemed and sanctified to heaven. May God in his mercy bless your cause, and his favor ever rest upon you. I shall leave your room in a few minutes, to return to my home, and then I trust to be permitted, in the providence of God, to attend the session of our Conference, as a delegate, in Georgetown, D. C. I shall bear the feelings of fraternal kindness with which you have received me here, to that Conference, and I trust that, in the same spirit, I may have the pleasure of there greeting your fraternal messengers from this church to that Conference. May God in mercy bless you, and prosper your work, and enable you to gather a glorious harvest from your charges into the fold of heaven.

On motion, Rev. Dr. J. H. Linn, of the Louisville Conference, was elected fraternal messenger to the Christian Union Church of Illinois, and Rev. Dr. C. F. Deems, of the North Carolina Conference, as a fraternal messenger to the Methodist Protestant Church of Georgia.

Rev. Dr. L. Rosser, chairman of the Committee on Missions, presented report number one, with the amendments incorporated in it, which were adopted when it was up for consideration a few days since.

After considerable discussion, the report was adopted by a vote of 95 to 16.

Rev. Dr. Rosser, chairman of the Committee on Missions, presented report No. 3.

The Conference adjourned with a benediction.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

FRIDAY, April 20, 1866.

The Conference met at 9 o'clock, A. M., pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by Bishop Pierce.

The opening devotional exercises were conducted by the Rev. Robert A. Young, of the Tennessee Conference.

The minutes of the last session were read and approved.

Rev. Dr E. H. Myers, Chairman of the Committee on Change of Economy, presented report No. 4.

Rev. Dr. B. Craven, of the same committee, said that they would present a minority report to-morrow morning.

Rev. Mr. Hinkerson, of the Arkansas Conference, presented a resolution in regard to the Itinerant Ministry, which was referred to the Committee on Revisals.

Rev. H. F. Johnson, of the Mississippi Conference, presented a resolution in regard to the Ministry, which was referred to the Committee on Revisals.

Rev. W. R. Gober, and Rev. O. P. Fitzgerald, of the Pacific Conference, presented the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Board of Foreign Missions be, and is hereby instructed to establish a Mission for the Chinese in California, so soon as the finances of the Society will justify it.

Rev. W. R. Gober said the subject was mentioned on yesterday, but supposing it was not the proper time to discuss it, he now brought the subject before the Conference in this manner. There are, perhaps, 50,000 Chinese in California. Our object is to christianize that people; to offer them the gospel, induce them to accept it, and make christians of them. It seemed to him that if we can reach that people at all, and it was very clearly presented to us last night that we can and are reaching them, that the Gospel is adapted to them, that they can be induced to accept and be profited by it; that California is, at least one of the principal places in which to carry on that good work, and accomplish that object. Objections are made to attempting any missionary operations in this field, and the objection is made in the first place, upon the ground that that class of Chinese population that is found in California are not fair representatives of their race. He was not prepared to state to what extent that proposition is true. He was inclined to think, however, that, to a very great extent, they are the lower classes of their people. But even admitting that this position is true, is it really an objection to the establishment of a mission? Is it the usual course, in the experience of those who proclaim the gospel of the Son of God, to operate first upon the wealthy, the refined, the educated and the noble, and afterwards upon the lower classes? Or is the reverse of this true? He was inclined to think the reverse was true. Again, it is objected, aptly, that the influences brought to bear upon that people, in California, are so injurious and deleterious, so corrupt and vicious, as to prejudice them against us as a Christian people, and hedge up the accomplishment of the object we have in view in that particular locality. He was prepared to admit that this objection applies with entirely too much force; that it is humiliating and exceedingly mortifying, especially to every Christian and laborer of our Lord Jesus Christ in California; but is it true that that objection applies more in regard to that locality than in our own country? Does not the same class, as presented by our brother that occupied the platform last night, exist in our own country, and perhaps with influences as great against the operation of the Gospel as they do in California. The brother stated to us that the chief difficulty in the way of the success of the Gospel in China is on this very point. Is it true that the people of California are worse than any other class of countrymen? Is the stand of commercial morals lower than it is in China, in New Orleans, or New York, or any other great city of this Union? The very same difficulties that lie in the way of the conversion of the Chinese in California, lie in the way of the conversion of that people any where that you go. Is there anything that we possess that is really worthy of our urging upon them, that is worthy of their reception into their Christianity, or civilization, or institutions? He might be mistaken in his estimate. He had not paid as much attention to this point or field of California work as he might have done, although he had resided in that state for fifteen years. He had been among that people; his views of them, as a people, are not as high as are those of the brother that addressed us last night. He was glad that his views are more exalted. He was glad to hear his statements in regard to them, and his faith in them as a people. The speaker's intercourse with them, and the knowledge he had of them had not tended to impress him with the view that they were a very noble class of the human family. Their Empire may be a very flowery one, their country may be a very celestial one, but they did not impress him as being a very evangelical class of human beings. In this he might be mistaken, and he hoped he was. But if we can reach that people at all, if we can christianize them at all, it seemed to him that California is the place to commence that work. In San Francisco, Sacramento or Stockton there are sufficient members of Chinamen for a missionary to operate upon. A mission can be established there and carried on at much less cost than in China, and in addition to the proximity to the parent board and the mother Church, we have at these points congregations of white people. The missionary that may be sent there, could make himself exceedingly useful in connection with the white congregations. He could receive at least a part of his support from these societies, so as to make his labors cost comparatively little to what they would under other circumstances. The brother that addressed us last night informed us that he had spent ten years in China. His heart is in that work. He longs to be engaged in that work, but his health failed, and he is not able to go back to that sickly, debilitating climate and spend more time in that field so near his heart. He would propose to send that brother to San Francisco. He has spent his time and labors in learning their language, which is a prodigious task of no ordinary difficulty. He overcame that by great labor on his part. Is that labor to be lost, of preparing himself for that special field, other than the ten years he has spent in China? He can fill a place in San Francisco that other brethren could not fill. That climate is a healthy, rejuvenating one, and those bracing and salubrious winds would renew his youth and call forth renewed energy for the accomplishment of the great work for which he has so well prepared himself.

Rev. Wm. G. E. Cunnyngham, of the Holston Conference, said he was very glad to see Bro. Gober take so much interest in the Chinese. It was not often he was with a brother who seemed to take so much interest in that work, and he hoped that they would have a mission in California for the Chinese; but if the Conference undertakes to establish a mission for the Chinese in California, he hoped it would be for the Chinese in that State and not for the Chinese in China. He knew these men, and he thought Bro. Gober's estimate of them a just one. He was not surprised that he had very little respect for them. He knew them where they came from, in their own country, and he supposed he had quite as good an opinion of them as their own countrymen. In the first place, he thought they could do nothing in China if they were converted and should return there, because the caste there established holds them in contempt. The Chinese classify men, first, the scholars or educated men, because they say knowledge distinguishes him from the beast. The educated, therefore, stand first in the caste. The second in order is the farmer, or the man who derives from the soil a support. They say the farmer is honest from the very nature of his occupation, for he cannot lie to the seasons and the ground, for if he does it will do no good. The third in order is the mechanic, whose business is to build houses and furnish protection against the changes of the seasons, and furnish the business which educated men require. Then the fourth in order is the merchant, whom they regard as a kind of a necessary evil, inasmuch as he is necessary in exchanging the products of their soil. This agent must do this service, and they say that his way of getting paid is by shaving both sides. The very nature of his occupation makes a rascal of him. He has the decided advantage of knowing the interests of both parties, of which each party could not be so well acquainted, and he attempts to take advantage of their ignorance; and the one first qualification of the merchant is to be an expert liar, who can avoid legal detection. The fifth in order are the artists of the country. The sixth in order are the soldiers, whose business it is to destroy society and not to build it up—bring ruin and misery upon mankind, and not increase their happiness or better their condition. The merchants who live on the points, on the banks of the river, are known as "commercial rats." These men are not only under that disadvantage, but also, if they return to their own country, no matter how much wealth they have acquired, it gives them no position above what their class accords to them. With all respect for Brother Gober and California, the time was, perhaps, when it was not considered an occupation of the highest character to be engaged in mining. With tenfold more force the Chinaman goes back depreciated in the estimation of his countrymen. Suppose he tells them that he is a christian. They will say that is a foreign trick—that it is a part of his commercial stock—that the education he has acquired in this country is only an addition to his art, by which he may deceive. These are facts that came under his own observation, and not mere expressions of opinion. He hoped that if it should please this Conference to do anything for Chinese in California, it would be for that people there, and not in reference to the accomplishing of anything in China. Brother Gober had spoken of his going to California as a missionary among that people there. If he did, he would have to operate upon an entirely different class than he had been working with in China. He felt no special call in the direction of that work in California, and he hoped he might be excused from such a mission.

Bishop Andrew said that he was gratified that he made the little voluntary speech he had yesterday, against our probable success with the Chinese in California. When he was in California he had an interview with an Episcopal minister there, who had also been to China. That missionary said to him, that after an experience of many months he found that he could do nothing with the Chinese in California. He had been in China with them, and he said he had rather try to convert the Chinese in China than in California. Let us not dream of doing what is absolutely impracticable. He was perfectly satisfied from all he knew, that to send missionaries to California to convert the Chinese there, was perfect folly. We have got no money to waste on improbabilities.

After some further discussion, on voting, the resolution was adopted by 58 yeas to 43 nays.

Rev. Dr. A. L. P. Green, of the Tennessee Conference, offered the following resolutions:

Resolved, first, That the Board of Foreign Missions make out, at an early day, a full statement of the indebtedness of the Missionary Society, and divide the same among the Annual Conferences as equitably as they may be able, and forward to the Annual Conferences at their next session the amounts thus designated; and that the Annual Conferences be requested to take measures for the purpose of raising the respective amounts.

Resolved, secondly, That in taking the collections for the Foreign and Domestic Missions, the Foreign Missions shall have precedence in point of time until the debt is paid.

Rev. J. B. McFerrin, of the Tennessee Conference, offered an amendment, to the effect that the Committee on Missions now make out a complete statement of the indebtedness of the Missionary Society, and divide the said amounts among the several Annual Conferences as equitably as they may be able, and report to this Conference.

Rev. Dr. J. C. Keener offered an amendment to the amendment, to strike out the words, "as equitably as may be," and insert the words, "in proportion to the membership within said Conferences," which was accepted by Dr. McFerrin.

After some further discussion, Dr. J. C. Keener withdrew his amendment in favor of one offered by Dr. McFerrin, that the debt of the society should be equitably divided among the several conferences by the Missionary Committee, and reported to the General Conference, which, on motion was adopted.

The amendment to the second resolution was rejected, and it was adopted without amendment.

The following report was next taken up:

COMMITTEE ON RELIGIOUS INTERESTS OF COLORED PEOPLE—No. 2.

Ques. 1. What shall be done to promote the religious interests of the Colored People?

Ans. 1. Let our colored members be organized as separate pastoral charges wherever they prefer it, and their number may justify it.

Ans. 2. Let each pastoral charge of colored members have its own quarterly conferences, composed of official members as provided in the Discipline.

Ans. 3 Let colored persons be licensed to preach, and ordained deacons and elders, according to the Discipline, when, in the judgment of the conferences having jurisdiction in the case, they are deemed suitable persons for said office and orders in the ministry.

Ans. 4. The Bishop may form a district of colored charges, and appoint to it a colored presiding elder, when, in his judgment, the religious interests of the colored people require it.

Ans. 5. When it is judged advisable by the college of Bishops, an annual conference of colored persons may be organized to be presided over by one of our Bishops.

Ans. 6. When two or more annual conferences shall be formed, let our Bishops advise and assist them in organizing a separate general conference jurisdiction for themselves, in accordance with the doctrines and discipline of our Church, and in fraternal union with the same.

Ans. 7. Let special attention be given to Sunday Schools among the colored people.

The above chapter is recommended by the Committee on the Religious Interests of the Colored People to the General Conference for its adoption.

Respectfully submitted.

J. E. EVANS, Chairman.

Rev. J. E. Evans moved to proceed to act upon the report, item by item, which was agreed to.

After some discussion the first item was adopted.

The remaining items were then taken up, considered separately, and after considerable discussion, adopted with the following amendments: Insert in answer sixth after the word "themselves," the words: "If they so desire, and the Bishops deem it expedient;" and strike out all after the word "church" in the same answer, and add the following: "And having the same relation to this General Conference, as the annual conferences have to each other."

After some remarks by Rev. Dr. W. A. Smith, of the Virginia Conference, the report, as a whole, was unanimously adopted.

Rev. Bishop Andrew then addressed the Conference as follows: I am going to Baton Rouge to-morrow, and I will not be here after to-day until after the Sabbath. I do not know that I shall be back before the middle of next week—probably I shall not. In the first place, I shall have to preach up there, and then there is an old friend living not far from there to whom I owe a good deal, and, to whom the church owes a good deal more. He is sick—an old, faithful servant of God. His wife is sick, and he sends me word that he wishes very much to see me, and would come down here but he is on his bed and cannot do so. It is very likely that when I get to Baton Rouge I shall go and see my old friend, Judge McGee. If I can administer to his comfort, I shall feel bound to do so. My health is very precarious at present, and I desire to say a few things before leaving you. For thirty-four years I have been, as far as I was able, acting in the capacity of a superintendent of the church. Looking back on that long lapse of years, I see very much to regret in my life and in my official duties; yet I feel, upon close, and I think impartial examination before God, that I have tried to do the best I could. My ability was unequal to the task, but I did not put myself there. The Conference told me to take that work and do it, and I have been trying to do it as best I could. I do not know that I have been the instrument of a great deal of good, but I think I have in some instances, and for what I have done I give God the praise. During those thirty-four years my great object has been to do my work, and I have not had an easy time of it. All men have not spoken well of me, so I have not that curse to come upon me, at least. I have endeavored to so act, that everything I should do should tend to the glory of God, and the advancement of the Redeemer's cause among men. I stand before you, to-day, feeling that I have, perhaps, well nigh finished my work, although I never expect to cease my work so long as I am able to work at all. But I feel that the time has come, when, according to my conviction of duty and propriety, I am called upon to leave this active field of itinerant labor. I am not able to perform its duties, and it has been a long settled opinion with me, that after a man has passed the age of seventy years, he is no longer fit to act as a Bishop. I have acted under that conviction for years, and should have, perhaps, left before, but for the stormy state of the church. I have never been anything but a traveling preacher for fifty four years. During all of that time I have never been one day anything but a traveling preacher. Whether I have always been efficient or not, I have always been ready to answer the rallying call to the field of conflict and duty. I conscientiously believe that after a man passes the age of seventy he becomes hardly the master of himself. There is danger of his becoming a little fretful from age, and during all these years I have dreaded becoming a captious, fretful old man, and I think I had better get out of the way and let some younger man take my place. If the Conference will please, I should like to retire. Although I have been looking forward to this for some time, when it comes to the reality it is a great struggle. I can only say that I love you and love the Church in whose services I have spent fifty-four years. I have identified myself, heart and soul, and everything I have had, to carry out the great and glorious work of the Church. I rejoice to-day to see, after the stormy war that has swept over us, so large a collection of the ministers of Christ who are ready to enter upon the fields assigned them in the place of the older men, who are falling away. If it please the General Conference, let them give me some such field as they have Bishop Soule. I will work as much as I am able. I have nothing saved—nothing, I suppose, on earth; but I suppose the General Conference will continue me some allowance for my bread. I have never sought to make money—have never entered into any business to make money; my whole mind has been to forward the work that is committed to me as a minister of the Gospel of Christ. I wish you great happiness and prosperity. Pray for me, brethren. I return my thanks to the Conference for the kindness they have always shown me. I have no complaint to make neither of the General Conference, the Annual Conferences, the Circuits, or Stations. I feel thankful for every manifestation of kindness that you have shown me. Be united, brethren. It may be the last time I shall talk to you. Labor for the great work that God has called you to do, and God will prosper you. I may yet live to see this Church spread its influence far away throughout the land, and if I do not, I hope to see it in Heaven. Pray for me, and may God bless you.

Rev. E. H. Myers then moved that the request that Bishop Andrew has made to the Conference to-day, be referred for consideration to the Committee on Episcopacy. So referred.

On motion, the Conference then resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, for the further consideration of Report No. 1, from the Committee on Changes of Economy.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

SATURDAY, April 21, 1866.

The Conference met at 9 o'clock A. M., pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by Bishop Pierce.

Rev. Dr. W. M. Wightman, chairman of the Committee on Episcopacy, presented the following report, which was unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

COMMITTEE ON EPISCOPACY—REPORT No. 3.

The Committee on Episcopacy beg respectfully to report the following resolutions, as in their judgment suitable to be adopted in reference to the application of Bishop Andrew, for permission to retire from the active duties of the Episcopal office.

Resolved, That the General Conference has heard with profound emotion, the request made by our honored and beloved friend, Bishop Andrew, that he be allowed, on account of advanced years and growing infirmities, to retire from the responsibilities connected with an active participation in the episcopal administration. While the General Conference cannot be indifferent to the important considerations, and cannot but approve of the high and delicate motives which prompt this course, at the same time the representatives of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, cannot allow the the occasion to pass without expressing, as they now take pleasure in doing, the respect and affection universally felt for the venerable Bishop; the honor in which his past services are held, and the lustre which his spotless character has shed on Southern Methodism. They devoutly pray that the evening of his life may be serene, full of the consolations of that Gospel he has preached for more than a half a century; bright with the unspeakable hope of eternal life through Christ Jesus.

Resolved, further more, that Bishop Andrew be, and he is hereby released, according to his request, from active participation in the responsibilities of the episcopal office. At the same time the General Conference beg that he will, as far as his health and circumstances allow, give to his colleagues and the Church at large, the benefit of his experience and counsels, and highly appreciated visits to the Annual Conferences.

W. M. WIGHTMAN, Chairman.

The order of the day being report No. 3, from the Committee on Changes of Economy, recommending the adoption of the system of District Conferences, and the dissenting minority report from the same committee, was taken up.

Rev. Dr. W. M. Rush, of the Missouri Conference, moved the adoption of the minority report as a substitute for the majority one.

Rev. E. H. Myers, of the Georgia Conference, thought the minority report was only an opinion, and not an argument. It begins with the opinion that we consider annual conferences as not necessary—we are of the opinion they are—and one opinion is good as another. The Committee on Episcopacy have recommended that the Bishops should be requested to visit every Presiding Elder's district. It is said here that the visits of the Bishops, will be of little or no consequence. The Committee on Episcopacy say that they will be of considerable consequence. Which is right? The general tenor of the affirmative argument is that if there are evils, let them be corrected. But they do not provide any remedy. Again, they argue that there may be evils, but they do not believe in this sort of a remedy. That is their opinion—we have another opinion. We deem these district conferences expedient. They

General Conference Love-Feast.

The crowning glory of the General Conference was the Love-Feast which was held in the Carondelet street church on Sabbath afternoon.

It was conducted by the Rev. Andrew Monroe, of the Missouri Conference. The meeting continued two hours. It got better and better to the final prayer. Those who were present will doubtless recur to it as long as memory holds its charge. It was the fellowship of the saints while sitting in the very presence of the Savior—the invisible Shekinah filling the house to its utmost capacity with the glory of the Lord.

THE BISHOPS ELECT.

We congratulate the whole Church upon the excellent selection which the General Conference has made in its choice of the men who are henceforth to be, by the grace of God, the Leaders of our People. They are among the foremost men in Southern Methodism; of tried qualities, of much experience, of thorough education, of high pulpit power, speakers and writers of rare polish; they have already filled various offices in the church with marked ability.

The Rev. W. M. Wightman, D. D., is a native of South Carolina. He entered the itinerant ministry in the South Carolina Conference in 1828. He was appointed Editor of the Southern Christian Advocate in 1840; was elected President of Wofford College in 1854, and in 1859 was chosen Chancellor of the Southern University, of Greensboro', Alabama.

The Rev. E. M. Marvin, D.D., is a native of Missouri; was received on trial in the Missouri Conference in 1844. He has been stationed for some years past in and about St. Louis, and is now a member of the St. Louis Conference. During the war he removed from St. Louis to East Texas, and is at present stationed at Marshall. As a minister of the New Testament, and as a writer and defender of the doctrines of our church, he has won for himself the highest admiration among our people and preachers in the Northwest. Dr. Marvin is not a member of this General Conference, and has not been present during its session.

The Rev. D. S. Doggett, D. D., is a native of Virginia, and entered the Virginia Conference in 1829. He was elected Editor of the Southern Methodist Quarterly in 1850. As in Virginia so in all parts of the Southern Church, he stands preeminent as a writer and preacher.

The Rev. H. N. McTyeire, D. D., is a native of South Carolina, and entered the Virginia Conference on trial in 1845, was transferred the year following to the Alabama Conference, and to the Louisiana Conference in 1849. He started the N. O. Christian Advocate in 1851, and for years was the editor of this paper. In 1858 he was appointed by the General Conference to the Nashville Christian Advocate. During the last three years he has been stationed at Montgomery, Ala.

In our opinion the General Conference presents to the Bishops for ordination to the office and work of a Bishop the very best men it had, and that the Church has no better.

REV. JOHN POISAL.—We take great pleasure in commending to our friends throughout the South-west the Rev. John Poisal, as the representative of the Merchants of Baltimore. Our Southern people can rely with entire confidence upon his statements. We have known him for more than twenty years.

The Episcopal clergy of Washington, have determined to build three new churches in their city. We see it stated that the Hon. Caleb Cushing has contributed $2,000 toward their erection. Mention is also made that St. James College will be opened in the Fall.

THE MISSIONARY MEETING.

This meeting was held in the Carondelet street Church on the evening of the 20th inst., Bishop Kavanaugh presiding. The Rev. Dr. Deems opened the meeting with appropriate religious services.

The Rev. W. G. E. Cunnyngham, who was ten years a Missionary of the M. E. Church South in China, addressed the meeting. We are not excessive when we say that his speech was more exactly what a Missionary speech ought to be than any we ever remember to have heard. Exact, full, philosophical, it addressed itself to the common sense of the audience, and conveyed a most satisfactory estimate of the nature and importance of the work in the distant field represented. We much regret that we cannot give a verbatim report of his interesting speech, but only a very partial one. He said:

The difficulties with which the Missionary meets are numerous, and of a kind to try his patience and courage, as well as his ingenuity. The strong national egotism of the Chinese would be enough to make them despise us; but, superadded to this, is the deep conviction in their minds that all foreigners are mercenary and cruel. The first representatives of the Christian name who visited their coast were unfortunately the worst specimens of our countrymen. The conduct of the East India Company, and subsequently of the British Government, in their commercial transactions, did much to prejudice the whole Eastern world against us.

They sometimes ask the Missionary hard questions, and make the most of his answers. For example:

"What induced you to leave your own country, and come to this?"

"In order to preach the Gospel to your countrymen, to teach them to live so in this life that they may be happy in the next."

"Ah, that is very kind! But did it never occur to you that your own countrymen might need your benevolent services quite as much as we do?" etc.

Many difficult questions are propounded concerning the origin of all things, nature of spirit, right and wrong, future state, etc. If the answer is not satisfactory, they will perhaps suggest that a teacher who cannot answer questions might improve his own knowledge by exchanging positions with those whom he proposes to teach.

Our native preacher, LIEU SEEN SANG, whom it pleased God to take to himself the past year, was a man of no ordinary capacity, and a most sincere and earnest Christian minister. He did much for the cause of Christ, during a ministry of fifteen years. There is no one in that field who can take his place—not one who can lift his battle axe or bend his bow. As a preacher he was clear, fluent and forcible. With an oriental imagination, and a heart all on fire, but few in any country surpassed him as an effective preacher. Not only the native church in China, but the cause of Protestant missions generally has suffered a great loss in his death.

There is a regularly organized M. E. Church South at Shanghai, numbering about thirty members. I doubt if any society of the same number in this country surpasses them in earnestness and consistency as Christians and Methodists. I believe if God should remove every foreign missionary from that field, the church would still live.

The Chinese appreciate the simple Gospel, though they may not embrace it. All attempts to compromise with them have failed. They admit the sublimity and purity of its doctrines, and readily concede its claims, if proved to be divine, upon all men. The "rock of stumbling" with them is the atonement—a vicarious substitute. The unity of God, creation, providence, future rewards and punishments, they accept; but the death of Christ they promptly reject, until the Spirit of God illuminates them. We see in those who have been brought into the fellowship of the Gospel the same experience that we require as an evidence of conversion in this country.

The Rev. J. A. Duncan, of the Virginia Conference, was then introduced, and responded substantially as follows:

MR. PRESIDENT: I am indisposed to disturb the pleasant feelings generated by the address to which we have just listened. I thank our honored brother for that speech. I thank God that the M. E. Church South is represented in China. Bro. Cunnyngham, who has labored in that distant field with so much fidelity and self-sacrifice, occupies an enviable position to-day. Sir, if I may be allowed to change one word in a little stanza I once learned, and appropriate it to my purpose on this occasion, I would in respect to that brother say:

"I'd rather my life's story had such an episode
Than all the gorgeous glory Napoleon's history show'd,
For when, on earth, war's banner no more shall be unfurl'd,
The Chinese toad hosannas shall shake the upper world."

Sir, we will not give up the mission in China. Though it is distant from us and costly, it is our share in the great and glorious work, and by the blessing of God we will sustain it.

The speaker then said the address to which we have listened had suggested an important question: Do we appreciate the Missionary cause?

He discussed it as God's work, in which, by gracious invitation as well as solemn command, we were called to co-operate most heartily and to the full extent of our ability. He referred to the inspiring motives that moved us to this great work—the faith it demanded—the blessing to ourselves of this blessing to others—the greatness of the benevolence it developed—that we were never so like God, the giver of every good and perfect gift, as when we give.

The speaker then took up the question of the present poverty of the Church, and showed that all that God demanded was that we do our best; break the five loaves and two small fishes we have, and leave it to God to bless the small means we employ to feed the thousands that famish for the bread of life. Take care that when God sends the corn by our hands to feed our brethren we do not consume it by the way. He gives us the grand privilege of doing something, and let that be well done. In this noble cause. We are poor, but we can yet give our two mites. He hoped that the South, though stricken and sorrowful, and poor, would, like the widow, cast her all into the treasury of the Lord; and if Jesus blesses the gift when she gives all that she possesses, she may have cast into the treasury more than the rich. The speaker said we must show Macedonian liberality. The grace bestowed on the churches in Macedonia should be illustrated by us. They were in great affliction, and yet the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded into the riches of their liberality, and gave all in their power, and were even willing to give beyond their power. They first gave themselves to the Lord. Here is an example for us. The speaker warmly appealed to the audience to give from principle—give in faith, and God would bless the work.

The collection was feebly managed. The meeting was not too long, and was, on the whole, the best we ever attended.

BIBLE MEETING.

Among the episodes of the General Conference, the meeting of the Southwestern Bible Society, on the evening of the 19th instant, in Dr. Palmer's Church, was one of the most interesting. It was addressed by Rev. Dr. Whiteford Smith. In his own felicitous manner, and with eloquent words and thoughts, he stirred the large audience of Bible Christians, while he set forth, in high eulogy, the Holy Scriptures as suited to the moral and social wants of the whole world.

After the doctor, the Rev. Dr. P. P. Neely read an address on the influence of the Scriptures on society, and the possible condition of society in the absence of the Scriptures, as shown in the French Revolution. It was a striking and powerful argument, concrete and inductive, characterized by great propriety, modesty, and beauty of style. Probably the greatest commendation we could make of the whole speech is to say, that the Rev. Dr. J. P. Newman, of the Northern Methodist Church, says that the speaker deserves, on account of it, to be consigned to the Dry Tortugas. We have no right to object to the Doctor's seeking "dry places," but we rather protest against his sending anybody else that way.

The collection was taken up by the Rev. J. P. Richardson. The result we have not heard.

The defect in the meeting was its length. Length is a fault that pervades the whole. If it could be confined to the last part, to which it properly belongs, it would be comparatively a slight matter; but the mind of the hearer who has been held in duress runs back and avenges itself upon the whole performance, and heavily discounts all its merits, from the very first word to the last.

MILLENARIANISM.—The London letter of the Presbyterian Banner states that while a large number of the evangelical clergy of England and Ireland hold the doctrine of Christ's premillennial advent, that doctrine is rejected by the ministry of the Free Presbyterian Church, Scotland, with the exception of Wood of Elie and the two Bonars; by the Synod of the Presbyterian Church and the Scottish Establishment of England, with the exception of Dr. Cumming in the latter; by the Wesleyan body, with the exception of Dr. Ethelridge; and almost unanimously by Congregationalists and Baptists. Grant, in his recent work against the doctrine, "The End of All Things," quotes among the distinguished divines who were no Millenarians, Foster, Hall, Ryland, and Fuller.

COLORED CLERGYMEN.—The Protestant Episcopal Convention of South Carolina has authorized and requested the trustees of its diocesan Theological Seminary to search out and take by the hand such colored persons as may be desirous of preparing for the sacred ministry, of whose moral and spiritual fitness they may be satisfied, and to provide for their education under the approval of the Bishop. The object is to furnish the large number of freedmen in that State with pastors and teachers of their own race, to educate and minister to them in holy things; and also to train up colored missionaries for Africa, to whose inhospitable clime their peculiar constitutions are alone adapted.

COLONIAL SEES.—Miss Burdett Coutts, who has endowed the three Colonial Sees of Capetown, Adelaide, and New Columbia, has written a letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury asking that something be done to remedy the evils arising from the late decision of the Judicial Committee as to the status of the Colonial Sees; for, by present appearances, those endowments may revert to her or her heirs.

SPANISH MOVEMENT.—Recent intelligence from Spain shows that the Progressive party will be satisfied, in church matters, with nothing short of complete destruction of the Catholic Church, the abolishment of all orders of monks and nuns, and the abandonment of all convents, while the Liberals would not go so far, but would be satisfied with "a reformation of the church."

necessarily increase the machinery of the church, but if we find that the old machinery will not do, we want to bring in the new. By this plan there will be more bishops and more church officers. What do we make bishops for? Our great work is to preach the gospel, and we make them for that purpose. Now they preach only along the railroads, as a general thing, but we want them to preach to the people throughout the entire country. Another argument is, that we can save so many thousand dollars by not adopting this plan. It is not going to cost you any more to support a man because he is a bishop than if he were a presiding elder or a preacher. Again, "no new business of any consequence is proposed," they say. He thought the plan would make an increase of business in various ways, and according to the provisions there will be enough to do. The objection that the holding of these district conferences is impracticable, except in certain cases. He thought it not tenable, and that the contrary was the fact. The speaker then considered the obligations made in regard to the administration of discipline by the district conferences, and thought the obligations would not be sustained in the practical working of the plan.

Without coming to any vote on the subject under discussion, the Conference adjourned.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

MONDAY, April 23, 1866.

The Conference met pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by Bishop Early.

The opening devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. Dr. J. H. Linn, of the Louisville Conference.

Rev W. H. Anderson and Rev. N. H. Lee, of the Louisville Conference, offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the venerable and honored Dr. Lovick Pierce is hereby respectfully requested to address this body, on any subject, connected with the history and polity of our beloved Methodism, at such time as may be most agreeable to him.

The business before the Conference when it adjourned on Saturday—the consideration of the minority report, from the Committee on Changes of Economy, in reference to District Conferences—was taken up, Rev. Dr. B. Craven, of the North Carolina Conference, having the floor.

Rev. Dr. B. Craven then spoke in favor of the minority report, and Rev. Dr. Hamilton followed in opposition thereto.

Rev. Dr. A. A. Means, of the Georgia Conference, said he arose with much diffidence to address this body. All those circumstances, which he need not now refer to, had kept in the background in the legislative assembly of our church, which he had been permitted to attend, yet he had been long identified with the interests of Methodism. He had been folded to the bosom of the church forty years ago, and derived nourishment from her during the remainder of his life to the present time. He stood before the Conference to-day not as forty years ago, with raven locks, unblanched cheeks, and clear vision, but his hair was now tinged with the frosts of many winters, his eyes were dim with age, but his heart had known no declension in his attachment to the interests of Zion, and had never failed in doing its duty in the great work before him. When he slept with his fathers he trusted he should sleep with the great tower of Methodism still standing, her columns still upright and undisturbed by the storms that have swept around her. Thirty-five years ago he found her tempest-tossed. There was mutiny on board. She rocked to the storms, but she still kept her prow to the polar star. Some took lifeboats and left her, but she still continued on with the same holy vigor, with her crew coming out enlarged and beautified from the smoke of war with the same old ground economy. Often I would be glad to see some changes. I thought they might be harmlessly made. He came to this Conference with that hope, but when he saw that as the announcement is made, that change after change is desired of every description, he shrank from incurring the large responsibility and feared that calamities would follow so much change. He would to heaven that he could see new life infused into our church, but he found too much change is wanted. He thought we attributed too much of this so-called stagnation to defects in our system of economy. After four long years of war has ravished our land, desolated our homes, and consumed our buildings, and unsettled everything, we would now take upon ourselves the great task of laying a new foundation of Methodism. Suppose there is some stagnation in our church. Why stagnation? Is that the proper term for it? Stagnation generally implies those places where the inactive state of the water in connection with vegetable and animal matter, is sending forth a malarious influence. With our church it is not so. It is true the heat of war may have evaporated some of the crystal current, but it still comes from the same fountain. Brethren, wait a little longer, and the overflow of the rill with its nourishing waters will make glad the surrounding plains. Do not attempt to regulate the whole movements of the old ship when the storm is beating, and the whole rigging seems strained, and she is struggling amid the waves: let her alone, and God in His wisdom will bring her through all right. Take the old machinery and try and see if it cannot be put in repair without much fundamental change, and go to work to make it more efficient, and God Almighty will bring us safely through all tempests.

Rev. W. Harrington, of the Mississippi Conference, said he thought speeches as speeches out of place in deliberative assemblies. He conceived that one difficulty that lies in the mind of most men in regard to legislation is this: They do not regard the legislation of the church in reference to proposed changes as only before us as experiments. From the very nature of the case, all legislation of this kind must be experimental. The legislation which this proposes to submit, and upon which the church has been acting, is beyond that thing; and from various parts of the country we find there are memorials in favor of the Conference for change. If we will keep in view this fact, that all legislation of this kind must, from the very nature of things, be an experiment, and then if you will add to it the other consideration, that where the experiment proposed has probable reasons in its favor—the mere negative of that experiment ought not to be considered. Such he believed to be the case before us. There have been shown very palpable reasons in favor of change. There are given, on the other hand, mere negatives, a mere dissent, a mere expression of opinion, as has been shown by those who have occupied the floor, in criticising the majority report. It is said by one that the system is impracticable. But how do we know that it is so, until experience has proved it? Is it so because they believe it to be so? But, sir, it is not impracticable. The system proposed has a parallel in sister churches. It has been tried, and so far as the working of the ecclesiastical machinery is concerned, proved a power to these sister churches.—You take the Presbyterian Church, and what is the Presbytery, but a district conference by another name. And it is said here that there is not enough zeal within the Church of God, in the hearts of the Methodist laymen, to induce them to visit these District Conferences. Hence, they say, they are impracticable because the membership of our Church will not attend them, and yet the membership of the Presbyterian Church and the Episcopal Church go to their synods and presbyteries once or twice a year, and attend to the duties of the Church; and he was unwilling to say that the brethren of the Church with which he was connected have not the zeal of our sister Churches. Again, it has been objected to because it brings the Bishops to attend these meetings. The Episcopal branch, as it is now organized, he believed to be inefficient, not from any inefficiency of those who hold the office, but from the plan that the church has given them to operate upon.

After some further discussion, on motion the whole subject was laid on the table for the present.

Rev. Dr. H. N. McTyeire of the Montgomery Conference, introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this General Conference that lay representation be introduced into the Annual and General Conferences.

On vote this resolution was adopted by 89 ayes to 48 noes.

On motion, a special committee was ordered, composed of one delegate from each annual conference, to be selected by the delegates from each annual conference respectively, to bring in a plan for lay representation, in accordance with the resolution just adopted.

Baltimore, N. Wilson; Virginia, W. A. Smith; Western Virginia, S. Hargiss; North Carolina, B. Craven; South Carolina, A. M. Shipp; Florida, S. P. Richardson; Montgomery, H. N. McTyeire; Mobile, J. Harroll; East Texas, J. W. Tullis; Texas, R. Alexander; Rio Grande, J. Boring; Pacific, W. R. Gober; Georgia, J. W. Glenn; Arkansas, J. M. Steel.

The Conference then adjourned.

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

TUESDAY, April 24, 1866.

The Conference met at 9 o'clock A. M., pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by Bishop Kavanaugh.

Rev. L. M. Lee, Chairman of the Committee on Itinerancy, presented three reports. Reports Nos. 1 and 2 lie over under the rule, but after some discussion the report No. 3 was adopted.

Rev. J. E. Evans, Chairman of the Committee on the Religious Interests of the Colored People, presented a report.

COMMITTEE ON THE RELIGIOUS INTERESTS OF THE COLORED PEOPLE.—REPORT No. 3.

Your Committee have had under consideration the communications referred to us from the Bishops of the African M. E. Church, and also the address of the Delegate of that Church to this General Conference. These papers present the friendly greetings and christian regards of that church to the M. E. Church South; not also make the request that the General Conference shall give such direction in regard to the houses of worship occupied by Colored Congregations, who have left or may leave the M. E. Church South, and join that Church, as shall secure the property to said Church.

Your Committee have also had under consideration the memorials touching the property question, from the Colored people of Vicksburg, Miss., and Lexington, Ky., be, and they are hereby referred to the Quarterly Conferences, having jurisdiction in the case, with the request that they give them special consideration.

Resolved 4. That our members and friends be advised to encourage the circulation of the Holy Scriptures among the colored people.

Respectfully submitted,
J. E. EVANS, Chairman.

On motion the report was taken up.

Rev. T. W. Dorman, of the Mobile Conference, said that the resolution seemed based upon the consideration that there is but one denomination among our colored people. That is not so. There are two—the African Methodist Episcopal Church, and the African M. E. Zion Church. If we recognized the African M. E. Church alone, we do it to the disparagement of the African M. E. Zion Church. The latter have two large congregations in Mobile. It is not for us to question their right to Episcopacy, but it is for us to settle the question, they being of the Methodist family, whether they have not the same claims upon us as the African M. E. Church. They have not presented these claims. They have had no representative here but they have congregations in Mobile, and there has been some effort on the part of others to disturb them in the possession of their property. If we pass that resolution, recognizing only one organization among the colored people, we are doing that to the disparagement of others who have equal claims. He hoped the resolution would be amended by inserting after African M. E. Church, "and other organizations of the M. E. family."

Rev. W. H. Potter, of the Georgia Conference, thought a large number of the colored people belonged to our church, and why should we turn them away? The reason given is that we desire to discourage schisms and factions minorities. He could not conceive of any more certain method of encouraging schisms and factions minorities than by the adoption of that report. If you assure them that if they obtain a majority in the congregation, that they can then carry with them the "property" of the church, you give them at once a property reason to exert all their energy to insure a majority that way. Why should we deed away this property? He saw no reason for any such action.

Rev. J. E. Evans moved that the resolutions be taken up in their order, which was agreed to. The first resolution was then taken up and adopted.

The second resolution was then taken up and read.

Rev. T. W. Dorman moved to amend by inserting after the words "African Methodist Episcopal Church," the words "other Methodist Colored organizations."

Bishop Paine said he would like to know if we have a right to give away property. Can we give the Quarterly Conferences the right to deed away property? He was not a lawyer, but he thought such a thing could not be done.

Dr. Samuel Watson said he hoped the whole matter of transferring church property would be deferred for the present at least. He gave as an illustration the history of the formation of the colored people in Memphis into a separate Quarterly Conference, and after an experiment and attempt to unite with some other church, they came back to the M. E. Church South completely cured.

Rev. W. W. Bennett, of the Virginia Conference, referred to a case in the city of Richmond where the colored people had united with the Bethel Church, and their experience was that the discipline of that church was more strict than that of the M. E. Church South; they got dissatisfied and sought a new relation. He thought the churches were much the same all over the country, and that in time we would gather them mostly into the fold of the M. E. Church South. We have established a plan of relationship with these churches, and he thought that was all the action necessary to take at the present time. He believed that the colored people would come around us and find that we are their true friends.

Bishop Early referred to an interview he had had with President Johnson in regard to a restoration of church property, and gave an account of his interview with the President on this subject. He thought the property in the hands of the colored people belonged to us as much as any other property, and no distinction was made in restoring it.

Rev. J. B. McFerrin referred to the African Church in Nashville, stating that there were several different denominations, and if the amendment is adopted that is before us the African Zion M. E. Church would claim church property in possession that of right belongs to us.

Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, of the Louisiana Conference, offered the following as a substitute for the resolution under consideration:

Resolved, That without more exact information regarding the wishes of the colored members of the M. E. Church South, the General Conference is disinclined to accede to the memorial of the Bishops of the African M. E. Church concerning the transfer of the Church property, claimed in part or in whole, by the members of the M. E. Church South.

Rev. W. E. M. Linfield said his motive in offering this substitute was to return a respectful answer to those who have memorialized us on the subject. Our colored brethren are scattered, and no action has been taken in regard to the absent members. Many of them will probably turn up and claim all the rights they had in the church before the war.

Rev. J. Hamilton said no resolution of this body can nullify and set aside a law already passed in the forum. We have already passed a law in regard to colored members, and he thought there was no necessity for any other action in regard to the matter. If they leave the church, of course they leave the property in our hands.

Rev. W. Harrington, of the Mississippi Conference referred to a conversation he had had with the pastor of our church in Vicksburg, and he understood from him that there was a disposition on the part of some of the leading members of the colored M. E. Church, formerly connected with our church, and now united with other churches, to return to the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He thought it prudent for us to be careful in our legislation in regard to this matter, not to offer inducements for the colored people to disconnect themselves from us, but we should rather do the opposite.

Resolved, 2d. That all applications for property, which may be made by colored congregations, are hereby referred to the Annual Conferences, within whose bounds the property lies, and the Annual Conferences are hereby empowered to entertain and decide upon all such applications, to transfer the titles, if they shall deem it advisable, to the parties applying.

On motion of Rev. Dr. W. Smith of the South Carolina Conference, the amendment offered by Rev. Dr. Keener was laid on the table.

Rev. Dr. Thomas O. Summers offered an amendment to Rev. Mr. Linfield's resolution, to the effect that this Conference has respectfully considered the request of the Bishops and delegates of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, but do not see their way clearly to grant the request for the transfer of church property.

The amendment was accepted, and on vote the resolution was adopted as amended.

The preamble was then taken up, and after some modifications, adopted.

The report as a whole, was then adopted.

On motion, Report No. 4, from the Committee on Books and Periodicals, and the minority report in reference to the same matter, were read.

Rev. Dr. J. C. Keener moved to take up the majority report. Agreed to.

On further motion it was ordered that the report be considered item by item. The first item was taken up.

Rev. A. H. Redford moved to amend by striking out the words "at the city of Nashville, Tenn.," and that the space be left blank for the present. On vote the amendment prevailed.

Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall said that the operation of a publishing house was very different from that of a manufacturing one. It was attempting to manufacture that has run us ashore. He wanted the brethren to remember if they voted for a manufacturing establishment, that it is a different thing from a publishing one. He knew a book manufacturing house in New Orleans that did not publish anything. They did not publish but they manufactured for other people. For instance, a man wants to manufacture a book. He goes to a book-maker and says, "For how much will you make the book?" He replies, for so much. He then goes to a publishing house and makes an agreement for having the imprint of that house placed on the book. Books are manufactured in Louisville that are printed in Boston. They are made in Louisville and sent to Boston to be published. The report says that we shall have no establishment for the purpose of manufacturing and publishing books. If we adopt that as it stands, it will provide for the establishment of a house for both manufacturing and publishing books. In his opinion we should not manufacture books, only publish them. If we can get books manufactured elsewhere cheaper than we do the work ourselves, let us do so, and publish them without manufacturing. He felt confident we could do so, and was therefore opposed to longer continuing the book concern as a manufacturing establishment.

Rev. J. F. Key, of the Florida Conference, said he held in his hand the report of a sub-committee of the Committee on Books and Periodicals, a sub-committee appointed for the purpose of examining the papers submitted to that committee, for the purpose of reporting upon all the material facts to the Committee on Books and Periodicals. This paper contains facts that he thought it would be profitable for the General Conference to know. (The paper was here read by the secretary.) He was not prepared to vote for the report, for the following reasons: We have made the experiment of manufacturing and publishing books for twelve years, and we now come here to hold an inquest to decide whether, after the experience we have had, and the fortunes that have befallen us we are warranted in a further continuance of this institution. According to the exhibit made by the Agent in 1858, we had a capital of $350,000. He supposed, therefore, that we started with that capital in 1851. Twelve years elapse, the General Conference calls for an exhibit, and the agent reports the balance of assets on hand at $117,000. These were the conclusions that the sub-committee drew from the facts before them. Suppose you go more minutely into the operation and you will find the agent's report in 1858, the fact that $101,000 were used to the credit of various periodical publications. Is it safe for this General Conference to have such an accumulation on its hands, and be saddled with this debt? Let the past twelve years teach us some wisdom in this respect. To-day we find the condition of the house as follows: Real estate $50,000, stereotype plates $10,000; engines, types, presses, $30,000; and other items, making a total of $175,000. Take from that, your liabilities of $58,000, and you have $117,000 that you may work upon. But what is it, where is it, and how will you get it out to make it available? You have the largest amount in real estate, and we want books. The whole church is bare of books and is looking about for some agency to supply them. We are told that we have property over and above liabilities, amounting to $117,000 at Nashville, and yet we can not turn out books for want of money. What is necessary to manufacture a book? You want paper, presses, types, type-setters and money. Our type and other publishing apparatus is not in order. We have not money, and our people are awaiting books at once. How can we fill that demand in the present condition of the publishing house? He did not know how much it would require to put it into operation, but he would like to find out. We can, however, supply this want of the Church at once by converting the assets of the publishing house into cash—that is, putting the money into the hands of a publishing agent, and he can go to work at once, and books might be making within a week after the adjournment of this General Conference. He thought the Church could publish cheaper by contract, and supply herself more economically, and the agent can better understand what he is doing as a publishing agent than as a manufacturing one. He felt as much as any one the force of our failure in this direction. He wished that we could report our publishing institution flourishing to-day. He felt mortified at the result, but he thought that a mere question of pride should not cause us to continue in what is found to be a fruitless effort.

Rev. Dr. A. L. P. Green said that us had as this concern is, it is not quite as bad as it seems to be. He pronounced the concern a success after all that has been said. It has absolutely succeeded when you take everything into account. First, consider the capital that we have worked upon. The amount with which we started was $68,000 on the books, as near as he could recollect. These subscriptions were never worth anything. In the next place, there was about $21,000 capital that was appropriated to the payment of lawyer's fees, and the expenses of traveling agents. In the next place, we paid quite an amount to several papers established throughout the church; about $20,000 went that way. In addition to that, we had to pay, every year, a portion of the Bishops' salary. In addition to that, by an action of the Conference, a tract scheme was introduced, by which we lost about $30,000. By some sort of machinery there was lost, at Richmond, about $21,000. If you will subtract these amounts you will find there was a small capital left at Nashville to work upon. Then you must have a Quarterly Review, which was perpetually involving the concern in debt. We made an error in supplying so many editors and agents for the work to be done. In the next place, the object for which this concern was established is this, that it did furnish the books and periodicals called for. It furnished more than we wanted. It furnished wagon loads of tracts we never could dispose of, and between $35,000 and $40,000 were destroyed by federal occupation, and with all this the concern is to-day solvent and with fifty thousand dollars could be placed in working order, which is better than ninety-nine-one-hundredths of a hundred establishments in the south of that magnitude have done. It is ruinous for any such concern to stop. It can go on but it cannot stop. It owes about $56,000 at present. He thought more than half that in such a condition that it might be kept off for a year or more. The concern is sued in two or three instances for an infringement of copyright, and lawsuits are pending. Liens are upon it, and as soon as you attempt to change it, the mortgages will be foreclosed. The most valuable of the assets is the real estates valued at $57,000. Next in value are the books and stereotype plates. If the latter were forced into market he would like to know what they would bring at auction. He doubted if the whole concern should be closed out at a forced sale whether it would pay the debts. But with a hundred thousand dollars we can get on very comfortably and easily. Without arriving at any further action in the matter under discussion, the Conference adjourned.

NINETEENTH DAY.

WEDNESDAY, April 25, 1866.

The Conference met at 9 o'clock, A. M., pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by Bishop Paine.

The opening devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. J. R. Pickett, of the South Carolina Conference.

The minutes of the last session were read and approved.

Bishop Andrew took the chair.

Rev. Dr. Thos. O. Summers, Chairman of the Committee on the Centenary of Methodism, presented the following report, which, on motion, was adopted:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON THE CENTENARY OF AMERICAN METHODISM.

The Committee appointed to consider the resolution of the Louisville Conference in relation to the Centenary of American Methodism, report:

That various dates are assigned for the origin of Methodism in America. According to some authorities, there were societies of Methodists organized in the country in 1760. The Discipline states that in 1766 Philip Embury and Robert Strawbridge, local preachers from Ireland, began to preach and form societies in New York and Maryland. In 1769 Messrs Boardman and Pilmoor were sent over by Mr. Wesley, as the first regular Methodist preachers on this continent.

In the Pastoral Address of the British Conference of 1820, written by Richard Watson, speaking of the spread of Methodism in this country, it is said: "Such has been the glorious result of little more than half a century, and of that feeble commencement of the work which took place in 1766." As John Emory was in attendance at that Conference as a representative of American Methodism, it is likely that this date is derived from him. But in the Pastoral Address of 1824 Mr. Watson says, "This vast work has arisen from God's blessing on the labors of two preachers sent out by our venerable founder from this country in the year 1769, and may well lead us to exclaim, 'What hath God wrought!'" This would seem to indicate that the British brethren dated the origin of American Methodism from 1769; accordingly, some think that 1869 would be the proper Centenary year.

The General Centenary of Methodism was not dated from 1729, when Oxford Methodism began, nor from 1737, when, in the language of Mr. Wesley, "God thrust them out to raise a holy people;" but in 1739, when the forming elements crystalized into "the United Society."

There is one date, however, which is undisputed, and it marks the great historic event which gave organic form and permanency to Methodism in this country, to wit: the combination of the Wesleyan Society elements into a regular ecclesiastical body, recognized as the Methodist Episcopal Church in America, of which the Methodist Episcopal Church South is a living representative.

As the circumstances of our church and country do not favor any demonstration of such a nature as usually characterizes centennial celebrations, and as no definite date can be assigned for the origin of Methodism in America in its inchoate character, as a Wesleyan society, like that of 1784; which marks its organization as a duly constituted Episcopal church, the committee do not recommend that any formal centennial celebration take place until 1884. Nevertheless, as Methodism, in its rudimentary character, began its operations during the decade which ended in 1769, and as this is probably the only General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, which will be held during the present decade, the committee recommend the Conference to adopt the following resolutions:

Resolved, That this Conference, representing the ministers and members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, recognize with profound gratitude to Almighty God the amazing success which has attended the progress of Methodism in America, originating in movements, so small, informal and unpromising, about a hundred years ago.

Resolved, That this Conference pledges the Church that it will, by God's help, reproduce on a larger scale, with more promising appliances, the zeal, energy, and success, of former times, so that when the Centennial Celebration of our proper ecclesiastical organization shall be held in 1884, the Methodist Episcopal Church South may exclaim with greater emphasis than ever, "What hath God wrought!"

Respectfully submitted.

THOS. O. SUMMERS, Chairman.

Rev. Dr. E. H. Myers, Chairman of the Committee on Changes of Economy, reported back certain papers of the Conference, with the request that they be referred to the Committee on Revisals. Referred as requested.

Rev. E. H. Myers, Chairman of the Committee on Changes of Economy, presented a report, which was adopted.

Rev. Dr. H. N. McTyeire, chairman of the special committee to provide a plan for Lay Representation, presented the following report:

REPORT OF THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON LAY REPRESENTATION.

The Committee charged with the duty of bringing in a plan for electing lay representation in the Annual and General Conferences, submit the following:

To the Annual Conferences.

After the word "service," in answer 1, question 1, section 3, chapter 2, page 48 of Discipline, insert: And four lay representatives, one of whom may be a local preacher, from each Presiding Elder's District, to be chosen annually, who shall participate in all the business of the Conference, except such as involves ministerial character and relations: Provided, that no one shall be a representative who is not twenty-five years of age, and who has not been for six years, next preceding his election, a member of the church.

To the General Conference.

Substitute for answer 4 to question 1, section 2, chapter 2, pages 42-3 of the Discipline:

The General Conference shall be composed of one clerical member for every twenty-five (eight) members of each Annual Conference, and an equal number of lay members, one fourth of whom may be local preachers, to be appointed as follows: The clerical members shall be elected by the clerical members of the Annual Conference; provided, that such representatives shall have traveled at least four calendar years from the time that they were received on trial, and are in full connection at the time of holding the Conference. The lay representatives shall be elected by the lay members of the Annual Conference; provided, that such representatives be twenty-five years of age, and shall have been members of the church for at least six years at the time of holding the Conference. No Conference shall be denied the privilege of two lay delegates.

2. The ministers and laymen shall deliberate in one body; but upon a call of one-fifth of the members of the Conference, the lay and clerical members shall vote separately, and no measure shall be passed without the concurrence of a majority of both classes of representatives.

Number the 2d paragraph as 3, and the 3d paragraph as 4.

Pages 43-4 of Discipline, fixing a quorum for General Conference, substitute "a majority" for "two thirds."

Resolved, That this plan for the introduction of lay representation into the Annual and General Conferences be submitted to the several Annual Conferences, and upon the approval of three-fourths of all the members of the Annual Conferences, present and voting, the plan shall become the law of the Church; provided, the same shall have passed this Conference by a two-thirds vote.

H. N. MCTYEIRE, Chairman.

Rev. Dr. J. C. Keener presented the following as a substitute:

SUBSTITUTE OF J. C. KEENER FOR REPORT ON LAY REPRESENTATION.

In view of the diversity of interests and conditions which affect our Church, spreading over so large an extent of country, some parts thickly and some sparsely populated, rendering that policy altogether practicable and desirable in one conference which may be wholly impracticable in another—

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South judges it best to refer the whole subject of Lay Representation to the several Annual Conferences, to be introduced or not as said conferences, and in such form and in such proportion as they may severally determine; Provided, that no Lay member of an Annual Conference shall vote upon the passage of the Character of any minister; and, also provided that the ratio of its representation in the General Conference shall not be changed thereby.

Resolved, That the Discipline be amended in chapter ii, section 3, question 1, page 48, after the words "itinerant service," as follows: "And such lay men as (the preachers composing) an Annual Conference may determine to admit; provided, that its ratio of representation in the General Conference shall not be changed thereby; and, also provided, that no lay member shall at any time vote in conference upon the passage of the character of an itinerant minister."

Rev. H. N. D. Wilson also presented the following as a substitute:

N. H. D. WILSON'S SUBSTITUTE FOR REPORT ON LAY REPRESENTATION.

WHEREAS, In the judgment of this General Conference, while the duty of governing the Church, in accordance with the rules laid down in the Holy Scriptures, is devolved upon the Ministry, they should call to their aid intelligent and pious laymen in this important work; and

WHEREAS, The help we have heretofore received from them in Class Meetings, Quarterly Conferences, and to some extent in Annual Conferences, together with their invaluable services in our institutions of learning and the general financial interest of our Church, clearly indicate to us, the advantage that may be derived from their presence and deliberations in our Annual and General Conferences. Therefore,

Resolved 1st. That the following words shall be inserted in the Discipline, page 48, Chap. II., Sec. III., Quest. 1st, Ans. 1st, after the words "itinerant service:" also four Laymen, or three Laymen and one Local Preacher, from each Presiding Elder's district, who shall be elected annually by the District Steward's Meeting of said District.

Resolved 2d. That the following words shall be added to the Discipline, page 43, Chap. II., Sec. II., Ques 1st, Ans. 1st.: Also two Laymen or one Layman and two Local Preachers from each Annual Conference, elected by said Conference.

On motion, the report and substitutes were laid on the table for the present.

Bishop Andrew, in the chair, said that when a report was brought up it sometimes looked to him as though every member only wished to see if he could not find some defect in it. You do not seem to have much respect for the opinion of your committees. It is of course proper to amend, but it should be done deliberately and prudently. You are like all other deliberative bodies. There are a good many brethren here who have never been to a General Conference before, and it may be they think they should now distinguish themselves by making speeches. There may be an attempt to make speeches for notoriety. He did not suppose it is so, but it might be so. Of course you have a right to speak, but we might not to be bored with unnecessary speeches. It might be a good plan, he had thought sometimes, to have a sort of corps of speakers, and place the whole matter in their hands. He had noticed sometimes that the brethren seemed to think, in their addresses that the other brethren have no capacity for drawing conclusions. They argue on little matters that all are able to comprehend, and dwell on minute points that are within the comprehension of every brother without a laboral explanation. You sometimes argue a matter, and by the time you get through, the best thing you could do is to lay it on the table. You argue matters perhaps two or three days, and the final result is to lay it on the table for the present. He wanted to ask how many things the Conference had perfected since you have been here. You have now been here three weeks. A good many things are on the table. There they are asleep, and perhaps they will sleep there a good while. He thought perhaps we are doing too much speech-making. If after bringing forward a measure, you make merely a few observations and then sit down, it will probably have a much better effect, and will be getting along with business much more rapidly than by making prolonged and elaborate speeches.

Rev. A. Monroe, of the Missouri Conference, presented the following:

WHEREAS, It is important for the General Conference, to have information of the time of its adjournment, in order to make the necessary preparation to return to their homes, and

Whereas, it is desirable, for obvious reasons, not to consume more time in the deliberations of our Conference than is strictly necessary, and

Whereas, it is customary with deliberative bodies to fix a time for adjournment, therefore

Resolved, That the Bishops be and are hereby requested to present to the Conference, after to-day, only such business as in their judgment is of the greatest importance to the church.

Resolved, secondly, that next Wednesday, the second day of May, is hereby fixed as the final day of adjournment of this General Conference.

After some discussion, the preamble and resolutions were laid on the table.

Rev. H. H. Montgomery, of the Mississippi Conference, moved that the report of the Committee on Boundaries, in reference to the boundary line between the Mobile and Mississippi Conferences, be taken up, and recommitted to the Committee on Boundaries. On motion the vote was lost.

Report No. 3 from the Committee on Books and Periodicals, which was under consideration when the Conference adjourned yesterday, was then taken up.

Rev. Dr. J. B. McFerrin said that the affairs of the Publishing House seemed to be very much entangled in the minds of many of the brethren. They did not seem to exactly comprehend its present condition. The Methodist Episcopal Church South completed its organization at Petersburg in 1846. At that time it was resolved to have a publishing agency, and Rev. John Early, now Bishop Early, was the principal agent. We had Depositories with sub-agents at Charleston, Louisville and Richmond. This agency was conducted by Dr. Early until 1854, when the Conference met at Columbus, Georgia. A little before this Conference met, the whole question of litigation between the North and the South with regard to the church property had been settled, and the amount of money coming from the North to the South was nearly paid, in cash or in notes running on a series of years. In 1854 the fund of the Book establishment was $275,000, according to the Journal. $64,000 of this amount was in old debts due to the book concern within the limits of New York, $20,000 were invested in the various Advocates established under the old order of things at Richmond, Charleston, Nashville and other places—making both sums $84,000. The cost of suits and the apportionment to commissions for services amounted to $20,000 more. The brethren about Cincinnati started a paper which was brought down to Louisville, and proved a failure. The General Conference ordered its publication, and it proved an expense of $6000. The last General Conference ordered the General Book Agent to pay $5000 to relieve the Memphis Christian Advocate. The General Conference also ordered $2000 to be paid for the relief of the California Christian Advocate. We have paid for the support of the Bishops, out of this fund, $13,000 from 1851 to 1858, and from 1858 on $9100. The whole amounting, in round numbers, to $170,000 paid out of the capital of $275,000, we had, to begin with, leaving $105,000. There are $170,000 spent in outside enterprises altogether, and there is still more. Under the direction of the General Conference you inaugurated a tract society that [illegible] $35,000 under and above receipts for the purposes of the Tract Society. We owed at Louisville [illegible] in 1861 for Richmond, not $10,000. The publication of the Sunday School Visitor, at Charleston, cost $2,865; the Home Circle cost $3,156. We paid the Christian Advocate $1,175. The General Conference spent in publishing journals and such like matter, $1,050. $233,000 is the total amount thus expended. The failure of the Methodist Publishing house has not been the result of the operations of that house at all. These facts and figures show that nearly all the capital of the concern has been taken away and appropriated to other ends by order of the General Conference. In addition to this we have had more than a hundred thousand dollars owing by our friends and enemies, and it is a marvelous thing that, under all the circumstances, the Publishing House has the breath of life in it at all. Some imprudent steps have, perhaps, been taken by the Publishing House. Very short editions should be worked. The mistake has been made in issuing too large editions. Since 1858, however, no large editions have been published. The question now is, whether you can keep up this institution or whether you had better dissolve it. He thought if the General Conference should keep gnawing at it as they have in the past, they had better swallow it up at one gulp. He believed that by proceeding upon proper principles of economy, with a man experienced in the business at its head, we could do well. He did not know as we could publish cheap as they could in Boston or New York, but we can publish cheap enough. There is want of unity and harmony in the Methodist Church South, in supporting our institutions. You can not start a paper anywhere that prospers and does a good business without other papers starting up in the same neighborhood to its injury. The Nashville Advocate was doing well, when papers of a like character sprang up all around it. Now every Conference must have its own Advocate. He believed that when the war broke out, that, to take the subscriptions for the whole of them in the South, there would be no more than there ought to be for one large well conducted weekly. The Southern people should have some pride to sustain their own institutions, even at a slightly greater cost than at which we can get books manufactured elsewhere. The speaker reviewed the state of the Depositories, and argued that the most of them had proved failures. If you will all rally around your Publishing House, you can sustain it, but if you do not, you will not sustain it. You have now everything there ready to go into operation, and with a few thousand dollars, and by united and harmonious action, it may prove a decided success.

In reply to interrogatories, Rev. R. Abbey, Financial Secretary, announced that during the four years he had held that office, it had netted $9,730 above expenses.

Bishop Pierce took the chair.

Rev. Dr. A. H. Mitchell moved the previous question, which was agreed to.

On vote, the first item was then adopted.

The remaining items, up to the fourth section, were then adopted without amendment.

The first item of the fourth section, in regard to "periodicals and editors," was taken up, read, and adopted.

On motion, the blank locating the Publishing House was filled with Nashville, Tenn.

The preamble was then agreed to, and on further vote, the report as a whole was adopted.

On motion, it was agreed that when the Conference adjourned, it adjourn to meet at 6 P. M., to-day, for the purpose of electing a book agent, and transact any other business that the Conference might see proper.

Report No. 4, from the Committee on Episcopacy, was then taken up.

Rev. Dr. W. A. Smith, of the Virginia Conference, said the General Conference he had attended for several sessions, in past years, had adopted a similar report, if he was not greatly mistaken. You will find in the reports for 1854 and 1858 what has been the result. Year after there has been a complaint that our people did not see our Bishops—that our episcopal system is not efficient. What is that owing to? To want of fidelity or honest industry on the part of our Bishops? That cannot possibly be so. It is unquestionably owing to what we call the accidents of their condition. The Bishops have not sufficient support.

Bishop Pierce, in the Chair, said he was not a sensitive man, and as some of the remarks of the speaker bore a personal bearing upon the bishops, he desired to say a few words. It is true there has been no direct accusation against the Episcopacy, but the range of remarks on this subject might make a false impression in reference to the fidelity of the bishops to their work. It is true that the inuendoes as to our inefficiency are excused and palliated on the ground that it is impossible for us to compass the wide ground over which we are obliged to wander. The inference seems to be, that while we are not doing everything that is desirable, we are doing all we can do. For one I never ask leave to plead not guilty to a charge of inefficiency if it be made in a censure we do not circulate among the preachers and people as we ought to do, but if not it is no fault, personally, but the fault of our system. For himself, he begged leave to say he was never idle. He had never turned aside from his business as a preacher to attend to any private claim. He never subordinated ministerial duties to anything else. Within the past three months he had been in several presiding elder's districts, and attended four annual conferences, to oversee the temporal and spiritual interests of the church. He was also, in addition to his other duties, accustomed to respond to all calls for dedications, lectures, speeches, and anything and everything that the church called upon him to do, and he, therefore, begged to be exculpated from any insinuation of inefficiency, if predicated upon the claim that the Bishops do not work. He worked, not at home, but far from home. He sustained Dr. Smith in his remark, that if you expect the Bishops to do more, you must give them a better income. He could not do more on the income he is allowed.

Several of the members here assured the Bishop that their remarks were not intended to cast any reflection on the efficiency of the Bishops personally, but merely had reference to the Episcopal system.

Rev. Dr. J. C. Keener, of the Louisiana Conference, spoke at some length in favor of the original report.

The previous question was then called for, and, on vote, the call sustained.

The question recurring on the adoption of the substitute presented by Dr. Myers, it was lost by 54 ayes to 86 noes.

The first resolution was then adopted.

On vote the word "six" designating the number of bishops, was stricken out of the second resolution.

Motions were then made to fill the blank with two, ten, four, three, one, seven and five. On vote the blank was filled with four. The report as a whole was then adopted.

The Conference then adjourned.

EVENING SESSION.

The Conference met at 6 o'clock, pursuant to adjournment, Bishop Pierce in the chair.

On motion of Dr. Craven, it was made the special order of the day to-morrow (Thursday) morning to devote one hour in prayer, and at 10 o'clock enter upon the election of Bishops, Book Agent, and other General Conference agents.

Rev. J. E. Evans submitted a report on the religious interests of the colored people, which was adopted.

COMMITTEE ON RELIGIOUS INTERESTS OF COLORED PEOPLE—No. 4.

We recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That to promote union and harmony among the colored people our Bishops be, and they are hereby authorized to confer with the Bishops of the African M. E. Church South, upon the basis adopted by this General Conference for a separate organization for the Colored People; and that they report the result to the next General Conference for their action.

2. Resolved, That whenever entire churches and congregations shall have voluntarily left us and united with the African M. E. Church, the Trustees be, and they are hereby advised, to allow them the use of the houses of worship heretofore solely occupied by them, as before they left our church.

Respectfully submitted.

J. E. EVANS, Chairman.

Committee Reports.

COMMITTEE ON CHANGES OF ECONOMY—REPORT No. III.

The Committee on Changes of Economy beg leave to make their Report No. III, on the subject referred to them of holding annually a conference in each Presiding Elder's District. The Committee have deliberated closely on the subject, and after much pains taking, have thought it best to recommend to the General Conference that such district conferences should be established. The difficulties in the way of such meetings seem to the Committee local and temporary, such as pertain principally to the conferences on and near the frontier, where the districts cover a large territory and where there are not many facilities for travel. But these difficulties are constantly diminishing, and it is hoped that in a few years there will be no great hindrance to holding these district conferences in every section of our Church. Meanwhile, there is no large a section, where it is believed that such conferences can easily be held, and that they will prove of so great benefit by bringing the preachers, traveling and local, official members and others over a large district into contact with a Bishop every year, or, where this is impossible, once in two years, that the Committee feel that few measures before this body will have so important an influence upon the Church as the holding such conferences—with such allowance for difficulties alluded to as a sound discretion would make. This plan would be making the Bishop, as it were, pastor of the office-holders in the Church throughout a conference; and it seems impossible to doubt the value of an arrangement that may effect this desirable result.

The Committee therefore recommend the the following section be introduced into the Discipline, after the section on Annual Conferences:

On District Conferences.

1. There shall be held annually, wherever practicable, in each Presiding Elder's District, a District Conference, at such time as the Bishop and Presiding Elder may agree upon, and at such place as the District Conference may select.

2. The District Conference shall be composed of all the Preachers of the District, both traveling and local, and two laymen elected by each quarterly conference.

3. A Bishop, or in his absence the Presiding Elder, shall preside in the District Conference; and if both be absent, a traveling preacher shall be elected by that body to preside.

4. The Conference shall elect a Secretary, who shall keep a record of its proceedings, which record he shall bring or send up to the session of the Conference.

5. It shall be the duty of the Conference,

(2.) To license proper persons to preach and to renew these licenses annually, when in its judgment, their gifts, grace and usefulness will warrant it, provided that no person be licensed unless he be recommended by the Quarterly Conference of which he is a member; and to recommend local preachers who are applicants for orders as Deacons or Elders, to the Annual Conferences for election, provided that such local preacher be recommended by his Quarterly Conference; and to recommend suitable persons to be admitted on trial in the Annual Conferences, provided that the candidate be first recommended by the Church of which he is a member; and provided further, that the applicants and candidates shall pass an approved examination before the District Conference on the doctrines and discipline of our Church, and on the ordinary branches of an English education; —nor shall any license be valid unless signed by the President and Secretary.

(3.) If the Bishop or Presiding Elder should fail to hold the District Conference in any district, the duties specified above in (1) and (2) shall be performed by the Quarterly Conference.

5. It shall also be the duty of the District Conference, to inquire particularly into the condition of the several circuits and stations in the District.

(1.) As to their spiritual state and the attendance upon the social meetings of the Church.

(2.) As to their financial system, their contributions to Church purposes and the condition of the houses of worship and parsonages.

(3.) As to Sunday Schools, and the manner of conducting them; and as to missions within the District; as to where new missions should be established, or what missions should be raised to circuits or stations.

When practicable, let the pastor report in writing, on the matters specified in the above items.

6. The District Conference shall elect annually by ballot four representatives of the Church in the District as members of the ensuing Annual Conference, one of whom may be an ordained local preacher. They may be selected from the Churches at large in the District, provided that no one be elected who is not twenty-five years of age, and who has not been six years a member in good standing in the Church.

A certificate of election, signed by the President and Secretary of the District Conference, shall be his voucher of membership in the Annual Conference.

7. At least three days, including a Sabbath, shall be allowed for the holding of each District Conference; and prominence shall be given to the public religious service, such as preaching, prayer meetings, love feasts and the administration of the sacraments.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

COMMITTEE ON CHANGES OF ECONOMY—REPORT No. IV.

The Committee on Changes of Economy had referred to them the subject of bringing the laity of our Church into more intimate association with the ministry, in all our Church courts. There has been, for years past, a constantly growing sense of the importance of this measure, and there have been referred to this Committee sundry papers, asking this Conference to devise a plan on which it may be introduced in our system. Besides several resolutions from individuals, there have been before us Dr. Green's Memorial, resolutions of Duplin, (N. C.) Quarterly Conference, and others from the Kentucky and Virginia Conferences to this effect.

The Committee have proceeded on the idea, after full investigation, that any direct delegation from individual charges or from their Quarterly Conferences, in the Annual Conference, would render that body so unwieldy, that it would hinder, rather than benefit its working power; as the Conference, already large, would be nearly doubled. The idea that has presented itself to the Committee most forcibly is, that the Church Councils need representatives of the zeal, piety, intelligence and wisdom of the churches of particular sections of the work, rather than delegates from every congregation or charge. They have endeavored to work this into a plan which they now present to the General Conference.

It may be well to state briefly the outlines of this plan.

There is one member from each congregation added to every Quarterly Conference, viz., the Secretary, annually elected by the General Church Meeting.

The fourth Quarterly Conference elects from the members of the church or churches within its jurisdiction, two representatives of the charge to the District Conference.

The District Conferences elect annually, four representatives of the churches in the District, to be members of the ensuing Annual Conference.

The Districts perhaps, have an average of 12 to 16 traveling preachers. Four representatives from each District will give one to every three or to every four preachers—increasing each Annual Conference one-fourth or one-fifth beyond its present number. This leaves it a manageable body. These members, taken from the Church at large in the District, are closely associated with the traveling preachers in all the business of the Annual Conferences, except that they cannot vote when the character and conduct of the preachers are under arraignment, and of course, have no voice in the stationing room.

To obtain delegates to the General Conference, members of the Annual Conferences elect one in every thirty of their number to the General Conference—one half of whom are to be chosen from among the traveling preachers, the other half from any members of the Church, under certain limitations, within the entire Conference territory. By this plan, in the lower church courts, which are not legislative but administrative, there is a large infusion of the laity—quite sufficient to give a wise and healthful direction to the administration of church affairs, yet not equaling the ministry in number; while in the legislative body—the General Conference—the two classes of members are about equal in number, the only difference being that where an Annual Conference does not send an even number of delegates, the odd member is given to the clerical delegates.

A provision, too, is introduced as to the decision of questions in the General Conference, that will allay the alarm some entertain that the two classes of delegates may favor opposite policies, and that the laity, instead of the ministry, may at length come to govern the Church. By providing an easy method of requiring a concurrent vote when desired, before a measure can be considered as passed, all difficulty at this point is avoided."

This is the outline of the plan embraced in the changes which the Committee now propose that the General Conference shall make in the Discipline.

In answer to Question 1, Sec. 4, Chap. 2, page 54: After the words "together with," insert "the Secretary of the Regular Church Meetings and—"

Question 5. When and how shall representatives to the District Conference be elected?

Ans. At the fourth Quarterly Conference of each year, let two representatives, who shall be laymen, be elected by ballot to the next District Conference; provided that such representatives shall be 21 years of age, and shall have been, for four years members in good standing in the Church.

6. The District Conference shall elect, annually, by ballot, four representatives of the Churches in the District, as members of the ensuing Annual Conference, one of whom may be an ordained local preacher. They may be selected from the churches at large, in the District, provided, that no one be elected who is not twenty-five years of age, and who has not been six years a member in good standing in the Church.

Ques. 2. What directions are given respecting the election of delegates to the General Conference?

Ans. Let the members of the Annual Conference elect them under the following provisions.

1st. The election shall be by ballot.

2d. One-half of the number elected shall be from among the traveling preachers, provided that no one be elected, except he shall have traveled four years, and is a member in full connexion at the time of the holding of the Conference.

3d. The other half of the number elected may be from among the members of the Church at large, within the Conference, provided, that they must have the same qualifications, as to age and Church membership, as are required of members of the Annual Conference; provided, also, that one in four of the number may be an ordained local preacher.

4th. Where the number of delegates to be elected cannot be thus equally divided, let the majority be elected from the traveling preachers, yet so that the division may be as nearly equal as possible.

On page 48, Answer to Question 1, sec. 3 chap. 2, part 1st, after the words "itinerant service," insert "and the representatives from the District Conferences, who shall participate in all deliberations and decisions except to vote on the trial of preachers, and on the passage of character.

Ans. 1. The General Conference shall be composed of one member for every thirty members of each Annual Conference, to be elected as the Discipline may direct; provided, that no Conference shall be allowed fewer than four representatives.

Page 43, change "two-thirds" to "a majority."

Insert as paragraph 5, and change notation:

5. In conducting the business of the General Conference, whenever one-fifth of the members present shall call for a separate vote of the traveling preachers and of the other delegates, it shall be so taken, and in such case no measure shall be considered as carried, except by the concurrent vote of both sections of the Conference.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

MINORITY REPORT FROM THE COMMITTEE ON CHANGES OF ECONOMY.

The undersigned members of the Committee on "Changes of Economy," and being a minority of the same, having in committee carefully examined the subject of District Conferences, together with various resolutions and memorials touching the same, and differing from the majority both on the general proposition, and on the specific plan recommended, desire to express the grounds of their dissent.

We are of the opinion that District Conferences are wholly unnecessary to the efficient working of Methodist Economy.

1. Because there is no existing evil for which they propose any better remedy, than can be found in our present organization. If there is stagnation in the Church, and we do not assert the contrary; if there is carelessness or inefficiency in the Quarterly Conferences, or neglect or incapacity in those who have charge of the spiritual and temporal affairs of the Church; we submit that the annual visit of a Bishop to some one point of each district, to remain there a few days, preach to a comparatively small portion of the people, and base all his advice and action upon reports from the very same persons that need corrections if any do, is a remedy utterly too small in its extent, and too uncertain in application. Then we already have remedies for these evils, so far at least, as they can be controled by legislation. If pastors neither can nor will move the churches, nor administer discipline correctly, then is Methodism a failure in spite of all legislation. If Presiding Elders neither can nor will properly superintend a single district, and successfully build up the Church of God, then a Bishop, who is only an elder with another office and name, cannot in three, or six, or ten days accomplish what his brother and his peer in all ministerial essentials, cannot do in a whole year. If the preachers will keep their ordination vows, doing their duty to God and man, [illegible] there are improvements that can and ought to be made, we do here they can be effected in a better way than by District Conferences. If more care and a higher standard should be had in licensing and renewing the license of local preachers, let the rule and the standard be established by the General Conference, and the Presiding Elders will be abundantly competent to execute them.

If a more competent tribunal is necessary for the trial of erring local preachers, a very simple disciplinary arrangement will remove the difficulty. If more care should be had in reference to candidates for admission into the traveling connection, the Conferences can easily fix such tests, standards and examinations as will remove the possibility of imprudence or imposition. Every desirable improvement can be made by simpler and better means. The organization of the Church is not so much in fault, as the life that should vitalize what we already have. Hence we conclude that District Conferences are unnecessary, and if so, they should not be established. The laws and rules of Methodism were adopted according to her wants, and the leadings of Providence, and such hypothetical legislation is not only dangerous generally, but essentially contrary to the genius of our Church.

In the second place we believe these District Conferences are inexpedient for several practical reasons.

1. They necessarily increase the machinery of the Church. By this arrangement, there must be many more Bishops, more Church courts and more offices and officers. This should be avoided. The great work is to preach the Gospel, save souls. We want as few executive officers as possible. It is the natural tendency of governments, both civil and ecclesiastical to multiply offices and officers, and such multiplication is no slight symptom of decay and death. In the present instance we are proceeding upon a badly sustained hypothesis to the establishment of a law, that will necessitate the creation of from six to ten additional Bishops and an increased expenditure of from $25,000 to $40,000 per annum.

2. No new business of any consequence is proposed; hence the official business of District Conferences will be taken from the present jurisdiction of the Quarterly Conferences. The Quarterly Conferences will have little left. They have scarcely enough now to give them interest. In the proposed plan they will become utterly insignificant, and the Presiding Eldership will come to nothing. The two cannot live together, one will consume the other. If District Conferences prevail; Presiding Elders will cease, and we shall have an actual if not a formal diocesan Episcopacy; especially if the term of the pastorate should be considerably extended.

3. The holding of these District Conferences is impracticable except at particular times, and in special localities. Many districts have few places where they could be entertained, some perhaps have none. They must be held during every season of the year, but the local preachers and lay delegates are generally business men. They cannot leave their affairs, and go from fifty to a hundred and fifty miles, and stay three days just when it may be necessary for the Bishop to make the appointment. Difficulties innumerable and perplexities without remedy will arise on all sides. Very many of the difficulties of Quarterly Conferences are occasioned by insufficient or false information; and these will be vastly augmented in District Conferences where the jurisdiction is greatly enlarged, and the representation smaller and more uncertain.

4. If District Conferences are established, and the Bishop of the district presides therein, then will the same officer preside in a lower and higher court of the same jurisdiction during the same year. If the District Conferences have neither judicial nor executive authority, then will all reasons for their establishment be at an end. If they have such authority and the Annual Conference has no appellate jurisdiction over them; then will local preachers in their last appeal be subjected to the decision of a court in no way superior to that having original jurisdiction. So that in any event, we think that these Conferences will in no way promote justice, equity and an impartial administration of Discipline.

We therefore respectfully submit the following resolution as a substitute for those reported by the majority.

Resolved, That at this time it is not expedient to adopt the system of District Conferences.

COMMITTEE ON BOOKS AND PERIODICALS, REPORT No. 3.

1. The communication of R. Smithson, asking for such action on the part of this Conference, as may enable the Christian Union Church to avail themselves of the benefit of our Hymn book, by the alteration of the imprint and preface.

After carefully considering the whole subject, the Committee recommend that the General Conference grant to the agent of our publishing interests, the privilege of issuing an edition of our Hymn book, bearing the imprint and introduction of the Christian Union Church, with the distinct understanding that the said agent so contract with the agents or representatives of said Christian Union Church, as that the right of our church shall be duly and properly guarded.

2. In regard to the Book agent, the committee, after a careful examination of his report made to this Conference, beg leave to say that said report, as it embraces the transactions from 1858 to 1862 is complete and satisfactory, while the report on the transactions of the Publishing House from April 1862 to April 1866, owing, as the acting agent, Rev R. Abbey, says, to circumstances which he could not control, is unsatisfactory—and this Committee recommend that the General Conference appoint some person or persons to make a settlement with R. v. R. Abbey at the earliest period practicable.

The Committee recommend that section (VIII) eight, Part Second, of the Discipline, pages 292 to 305, inclusive, be stricken out, and the following inserted:

1. Publishing House.

I. There shall be a book establishment at the city of Nashville, Tennessee, for the purpose of manufacturing and publishing books to be called "The Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and to be under the control of the General Book Agent, and a committee, to be called the Book Committee, all of whom shall be elected by the General Conference.

2. The object of this institution shall be to advance the cause of Christianity, by disseminating religious knowledge and useful literary and scientific information, in the form of books, tracts and periodicals.

II. Duties of the General Book Agent.

2. The general book agent shall have charge of the funds, stock, fixtures, and real estate, and all other property of the Publishing House, and of the Depositories and periodicals belonging to the General Conference; and he shall be responsible to said Conference for the prudent use and safe management of the same, under the general direction of the Conference. He shall make an yearly exhibit to the several Annual Conferences and give a full account of the progress of the business to the General Conference. He shall publish only such books and tracts as are approved by the Book Editor, and in case of difference between the Book Editor and the Book Agent, the matter shall be referred to the Book Committee. He shall supply as far as practicable the demand of the Church for books, tracts and periodicals, availing himself of all the facilities of the establishments for their publication, at the cheapest rates; and in all investments for the manufacturing of books he is required to govern himself strictly by the principles of economy. He shall sell the books for cash or short credit, but in no case shall he grant credits where in his judgment it will endanger the interests of the Publishing House. He shall make no investments in grounds, houses or permanent fixtures without the authority of the Book Committee.

III. The Book Committee.

There shall be a Book Committee of nine, five of whom shall be residents at Nashville, Tennessee. They shall, whenever consulted, give advice to the General Book Agent on all matters connected with the Publishing House. They shall fix the salaries of the Agent and Editor at Nashville, and during the intervals of the General Conference, they and one or more of the Bishops shall have the power to fill vacancies in their own body, in the agencies, and in the Editorial Corps at Nashville.

IV. General Conference Periodicals and Editors.

The General Book Agent shall be authorized to publish a weekly periodical or newspaper to be called the "Christian Advocate," and a child's paper to be called "the Sunday School Visitor," said Editor to be elected by the General Conference. It is provided that if the business of the Publishing House shall increase so as to require additional Editorial labor, the book Committee, with the General Book Agent and one of the Bishops, in the interval of General Conference, shall have the authority to elect an additional Editor or Editors, who shall come under the same rule as to salary with the General Book Agent and Book Editor. It is further provided that should the General Book agent and Book Committee find it necessary and expedient to publish a monthly periodical, they may engage in such publication upon the recommendation of three or more Annual Conferences and the College of Bishops.

V. But should any of the above named periodicals, except the Sunday School Visitor, after a fair experiment, fail to meet expenses, the Book Agent shall be authorized to discontinue the publication of the same.

VI. Proceeds of Publishing House.

The proceeds of the Publishing House shall be appropriated to no other purpose, than its own legitimate business.

VII. Depositories.

(1.) The Depository at New Orleans shall be continued under the superintendence of an Agent to be appointed by the General Book Agent.

(2.) Any Conference, or two or more Conferences unitedly, may establish an Agency or Depository for the sale of our publications, provided the business with the Publishing House be conducted upon strictly business principles. And the General Book Agent is authorized to suspend operations with an Agency or Depository that does not meet its payments promptly.

VIII. Conference Relations of Agents and Editors.

IX. Other Church Papers.

The editors for such papers as have been or may yet be established by Annual Conferences as their organs, shall be elected by the General Conference, whenever such is the desire of those representing such papers.

Respectfully,

D. R. MCANALLY, Chairman.

COMMITTEE ON REVISALS—REPORT No. 5.

In regard to the plan of taking four collections in one, proposed by Lovick Pierce, the committee respectfully report that, as the Conference has already taken action in regard to missionary collections, the committee do not recommend the plan proposed. In regard to the resolution of B. Craven, on changing circuits; the resolution of W. G. Veal and A. Davidson, on abridging the Ritual; the resolution of W. H. Bobbitt and L. S. Burkhead, and of A. M. Shipp and H. A. C. Walker, on the studies, nature and ordination of local preachers the committee doubt the propriety of making the proposed changes.

In regard to the memorial from Woodville, on expulsions from the Church; the resolution of W. M. Rush and C. F. Vandeventer, on the assumption of the Baptismal Vows by persons baptized in infancy; the resolutions of B. Craven, on "eating congregations, the committee report that the changes proposed are provided for in previous reports submitted to the Conference.

In regard to changes proposed in the paper presented by Thomas O Summers, the committee recommend the omission of the clause referring to ordination on page 71 of the Discipline, chapter ii, section 8, question 2, answer 1, and the insertion in the answer to question 1, section 9, after the word "bishop," these words: "Provided that no one shall be so elected and ordained, who has not been one year in the regular itinerant work, except such as may be selected by the bishop for the missionary work." Also, that in the answer to question 3, section 9, the words "two years" be substituted by the words "one year."

The committee recommend the changing of the title of section 11, chapter 2, to the following: "Of the reception of ministers from other churches," the omission of the first question and answer 1, conforming the notation of the rest to this omission. Also, the insertion at the close of what will then be the answer to question 1, these words: "Provided that the bishop, at his discretion, allow such ministers to exercise their functions as deacons or elders, until the session of the annual conference." Also, the changing of the word "denominations" in "churches," in the last question in that section.

The committee recommend the Conference to adopt the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Book Editor be and is hereby instructed to conform the next edition of the Discipline to the foregoing changes.

Respectfully submitted.

THOS. O. SUMMERS,
Chairman.

COMMITTEE ON REVISALS—REPORT No. 6.

In regard to the resolution of S. H. Browne, proposing an amendment to the note in the 23d Article, and the instruction of the Conference in regard to the history of said note, the Committee report that the note was inserted in 1820. Dr. Emory says it was "added especially to meet the peculiar case of the brethren in Canada, against whom unfounded suspicions had been created, because the M. E. Church, of which they were then a part, was regarded as a foreign ecclesiastical authority." In 1858 our Conferences substituted the words "any foreign government" for the words "the British or any other government." The clause rejecting obedience to the powers that be, manifestly refers to the Apostle's instructions in Romans xiii, and is to be interpreted accordingly. The Committee do not think any amendment necessary.

In regard to the resolution of W. C. Johnson and S. Watson, asking that the questions now propounded to candidates for admission on trial in the Annual Conferences be instead propounded to preachers on their admission into full connection, as was the case before 1848, the Committee recommend that the change proposed be made in the Discipline.

In regard to the resolution of N. H. D Wilson and L. S. Burkhead, the Committee concur with their request that the Discipline be amended on page 127, chap iv, section 1, ans. to ques. 3, and on page 113, chap iv, section 3, ques. 3, ans 1, by inserting, after the words "bring the accused and accuser face to face," the following: "When the crime is alleged, to have been committed in the absence of any other party or parties competent to give testimony, the statements of both the accused and the accuser shall be taken, and the committee before whom the case is brought for trial shall give both statements what ever weight they deem them entitled to in rendering their verdict for guilt or innocence."

In regard to the resolution of J. C. Keener and E. E. Wiley, asking for a rule interdicting the appointment of preachers who have not traveled one year to the charge of a circuit or station, the Committee do not recommend the proposed rule.

In regard to the addition of the words "and when present, to administer discipline," to ans. 2, page 64, proposed by J. M. P. Dickerson and J. M. Steel, the Committee recommend that the addition be made.

Also, on page 66 the insertion, as ans. 3, the next answer being numbered 4th, the following: "To procure at the fourth Quarterly Meeting full statistics for every charge, to be reported at the Annual Conference in case the preacher in charge shall fail to make his report."

The Committee do not deem it expedient to insert in the Discipline the questions in examination of character in Annual Conferences proposed by S. H. Browne and W. H. Fleming.

The Committee have carefully considered the papers presented by the venerable Lovick Pierce, and recommend that that on the Duties of Preachers be referred to the Book Editor, for incorporation, in whole or in part, in the Preachers' Manual; and that the paper on the Relations of Preachers be transferred to the Committee on the Support of the Ministry. In regard to the paper on the Organization of Circuits, they recommend the Conference to adopt the following resolution:

Resolved, That the appointments on circuits should be so arranged as to secure Sunday services at as many places as possible.

In regard to sundry papers on Trials and Appeals, the Committee recommend the Conference to adopt the following emendations of the Discipline:

On page 52, after the first paragraph insert: "When any traveling preacher is located, he shall be amenable to the Quarterly Conference of the charge last filled by him, until he shall present his certificate of location to some other Quarterly Conference."

On page 124, substitute for the present the following:

CHAPTER IV.—CHURCH TRIALS.

SECTION 1.—Of the Trial of Bishops.

"When a Bishop shall be under report, or be accused of imprudence or immorality, three traveling Elders shall call upon him," etc., as at present.

Page 126, instead of question 2 and answer, insert:

When a Bishop shall cease to travel at large among the people, without the consent of the General Conference, he shall not thereafter exercise the Episcopal office in our church.

SEC. 2.—Of the Trial of Traveling Preachers.

When any traveling preacher is under report of being guilty of some crime expressly forbidden in the word of God, if it be in the interval of the Annual Conference, let the presiding elder, in the absence of the Bishop, call as many traveling ministers as he shall think fit, at least three, and, if possible, bring the accused and the accuser face to face; and cause an exact record of the investigation, signed by the president and secretary, to be transmitted to the Annual Conference, at which his case shall be fully considered and determined.

At the 10th line from the bottom of page 127 strike out the last paragraph, and insert:

If the accused be a presiding elder, any three traveling elders or deacons of his district shall bring him up before the proper presiding elder of any other district, who shall appoint a committee of five elders, four within the bounds of the Annual Conference of which the accuser is a member, and also preside at the investigation.

When the accusation is preferred during the session of the Annual Conference, it shall first be referred to a committee of three traveling elders, whose duty it shall be to bring forward all the charges preferred, in proper form, and also to report to the Conference such cases as they judge necessary to be tried. If the Conference differ in judgment from the committee, a new committee may be appointed to inquire into the facts and report. And all cases referred to a committee of not less than nine nor more than thirteen, who, in the presence of the Bishop or a chairman, whom the President of the Conference shall appoint, and one or more of the Secretaries of the Conference, shall have full power to try the case; and their decision shall be final, save only the right of appeal: Provided, always, that the accused shall, upon good grounds alleged, be allowed to challenge five in a committee of nine, or seven in a committee of thirteen, and in the same ratio. And the said committee shall make a faithful report to the Secretary of the Conference, in writing, and deliver up to him the whole record of the case, with the decision rendered.

Page 128, strike out question 4th, and insert:

When a traveling preacher is under report of indulging improper tempers, words or actions, "he shall be reprehended," etc.

When any traveling preacher shall be under report of holding and disseminating, publicly or privately, doctrines which are contrary to our Articles of Religion, "let the same process be observed as in case of gross immorality," etc.

Page 129, strike out question 7, and on page 130 strike out the answer thereto, down to and including the word "case" in the 7th line, and insert:

When a traveling preacher is under report of being so unacceptable, in efficient or secular as to be no longer useful in his work, "the Conference to which he belongs shall investigate the case," etc.

"There shall be a committee appointed, consisting of one delegate from each Annual Conference, who, in the presence of a Bishop and one or more of the Secretaries of the General Conference, shall have full power to try the case; and their decision shall be final. And the said committee shall make a faithful report to the Secretary of the General Conference, in writing, and deliver up to him the whole record of the case, with the decision rendered. But any member of the committee may be excused from serving on any appeal when he has been a member of the committee that first tried the case.

Page 135, strike out section 11, the heading following and question 2, and insert:

SEC. 3.—Of the Trial of Local Preachers.

When a local preacher is under report of being guilty of some crime expressly forbidden in the word of God, "the preacher having charge," etc., making this the first paragraph in the section.

When a local preacher is under report of being guilty of improper tempers, words or actions, "he shall be reprehended by the preacher having charge," etc.

Page 138, strike out Section III and the heading following, question 1st and answers thereto, question 2d and answers thereto, and on page 142, 3d line from the bottom, strike out question 3d and all of answer 1st down to "him," 8th line from the bottom of page 143, and insert:

SEC. 4.—Of the Trial of Members.

When a member of the church is under report of being guilty of some crime expressly forbidden in the word of God, the preacher having charge shall appoint a committee of three discreet members, who shall investigate the report, and if they judge a trial to be necessary, they shall appoint one of their number to prepare a bill of charges and specifications, and also to prosecute the case. Upon the presentation of such bill of charges, the preacher shall appoint a committee of not less than five nor more than thirteen, who shall have full power to try the case; and if the accused be found guilty by a majority of the committee, and the crime be such as is expressly forbidden in the word of God, let the preacher declare him expelled. Nevertheless, the preacher may, at his discretion, bring the case before the whole church for trial.

A copy of the charge and specifications shall be delivered to the accused a sufficient length of time before the trial to enable him to make all necessary preparations for his defense; and in the case of trial before a committee, he shall be allowed, upon good reason alleged, to challenge two in a committee of five, and in like ratio for any other number.

The preacher in charge shall preside at the trial, and decide all questions of law appertaining to or growing out of the case.

The Committee recommend the Conference to adopt the following resolutions:

Resolved, That a special committee of — be appointed by this General Conference to rearrange the Book of Discipline, and to report their rearrangement to the next General Conference.

Resolved, That the Book Editor be and is hereby instructed to incorporate the foregoing emendations into the next edition of the Discipline.

Respectfully submitted.

COMMITTEE ON CHANGES OF ECONOMY—REPORT No. 5.

The Committee on Changes of Economy beg leave to off er their Report No. 5:

There have been many papers before the Committee respecting the Extension of the Pastoral Term. Some are in the form of resolutions, suggesting the action the Committee should take; some are from conferences—as the South Carolina Conference, Virginia, Kentucky, and Mobile Conferences, each of these conferences which referred Dr. Green's Memorial to this body. Some propose an indefinite extension by removing all restrictions as to time from the Discipline; others propose an extension of the time to three or four years, as the rule, and an extension in advances from year to year, in such cases as some peculiar conditions. The Committee have considered the various propositions before them, and report to the General Conference that it is their opinion that the Pastoral Term should be extended.

On all the changes in the rule proposed on this subject, we think that the simple removal of all that relates to an allowable term of service on any one appointment, is the simplest and best method of reaching the end in view. On this plan, [illegible] power to every one of his flock. If he should think the preacher, too, by the plan proposed would have full liberty of action. Whatever they may do, the Church can trust them; and with the great responsibility on them their freedom should be unrestrained by law.

In view of these facts, and others that are obvious without recital, the Committee offers the following resolution, proposing an amendment of the 11 restrictive:

Resolved, That, in paragraph 2 of answer to question 3, section 3, chapter ii, part 1, page 58, of the Discipline, after the words "Annual Conference," at the end of the section to stand out from "provided" to "in case," inclusive; and that in paragraph 3 of same section, page 61, all after the words "if necessary," be stricken out.

E. H. MYERS, Chairman.

COMMITTEE ON CHANGES OF ECONOMY—REPORT No. 6.

The Committee on Changes of Economy beg leave to make their report, No. 6:

As the subject referred to this Committee was "relative to ascertaining the expediency of so increasing the number of Bishops that there would be one for each Conference. That the Methodist Conference asks; provided, however, that every four years the General Conference may change them. Dr. Green's memorial proposes one for each Conference. The South Carolina Conference asks that the number be largely increased—the Virginia Conference that the General Conference so strengthen the Episcopacy as to enable the Bishops "to travel through the connection at large, to oversee the spiritual and temporal interests of the church—the duty which the Discipline prescribes to them." The Committee on Episcopacy, have recommended that the Bishop visit annually each Presiding Elder's District in the Conferences assigned him. If a Bishop does this work well, his district should not be too large, and he should have convenient travel. The first he cannot do without removing his residence every year. This indicates the propriety of assigning to him the same district for some years consecutively. The Bishops themselves suggest that the Pacific Conferences should be under the care of a Bishop residing there for the next four years. Here the District system is recommended for a part of our field; no principle is retracted if it be applied to all of it. To authorize it is to plan for the highest efficiency of our workmen; and it is our duty also to give us many workmen as may be necessary to render our plans efficient. In order to test the sense of the Conference on this important subject, the Committee would lay upon your table for future action the following resolutions:

1. That in the judgment of this General Conference our entire field of labor ought to be divided into Episcopal Districts, each District composing two or three Annual Conferences, the number being determined by the number of Presiding Elders' Districts within their bounds, the extent of the territory embraced, and the facilities of travel.

2. That the number of Bishops ought to be increased, until there is one effective Bishop for each Episcopal District.

3. That each Bishop ought to reside within the bounds of his District, or immediately adjacent thereto; that he should be assigned to the District for four years, at the end of which time, in order to keep up the "Itinerant General Superintendency," he should be shifted to or removed to another District by the General Conference. He should also report to each Conference annually the state of the church and his labors for the year in that Conference, which report should be entered in the journal.

The Committee further propose that the Conference now pass the following resolution, in order, that this Conference may have before it sufficient information to guide it to a wise decision in the premises:

Resolved, That the College of Bishops be respectfully requested to report to this body a plan to Episcopal Districts, each District comprising two or more Annual Conferences.

Respectfully submitted.

E. H. MYERS, Chairman.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE General Conference of the M. E. CHURCH SOUTH

Convened in New Orleans, April 4, 1866.

TWENTY-FIRST DAY.

FRIDAY, April 27, 1866.

The Conference met at 9 o'clock A. M., Bishop Early in the chair.

The minutes of the last session were read and approved.

Bishop Kavanaugh took the chair.

Rev. Dr. L. M. Lee, Chairman of the Committee on Itinerancy, presented Report No. 5, recommending the adoption, by the Conference, of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the act of the Holston Conference, in locating Rev. W. F. Parker by, and the same is hereby declared to be illegal, and the said Conference is hereby ordered to restore the name of W. F. Parker to the roll of its members.

Rev. Dr. E. E. Wiley, of the Holston Conference, moved to amend by striking out the word "illegal." Agreed to.

Rev. J. N. McTeer, of the Holston Conference, moved as a substitute for the report, that the petition of W. F. Parker be granted. Motion lost.

Rev. Dr. W. Smith, of the South Carolina Conference, moved to insert the word "inhuman" where the word "illegal" had been stricken out. Motion agreed to.

After some discussion, on further vote, the Conference refused to adopt the report.

The Secretary read the following communication:

The ladies of the several Methodist Churches in New Orleans, most respectfully request the pleasure of the company of the Bishops and of the Delegates in attendance upon the General Conference, together with the members of their families who may be in the city, to an entertainment in the open air on next Saturday, at one o'clock, in the City Park.

This invitation is prompted by the Christian desire to mingle freely in converse with the beloved pastors of the church from different parts of our extended territory before the close of the labours of the General Conference.

In behalf of the ladies,

MRS. E. J. ELLIS, Secretary.

New Orleans, April 26, 1866.

On motion the invitation was unanimously accepted by a rising vote.

Rev. Dr. L. M. Lee, chairman of the Committee on Itinerancy presented report No. 6, recommending the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That in view of the disturbed state of the Church and the great difficulties in the way of the removal and comfortable maintenance of our ministers in many parts of the church during the late war, the act of the bishops in continuing ministers more than two years, and deacons more than four years in an appointment, is recognized as a necessity, and approved as a prudential arrangement for the time.

On vote the report was adopted.

Rev. Dr. Thos. O. Summers, Chairman of the committee on Revisals, presented the following report, which lies on the table under the rule.

COMMITTEE ON REVISALS—REPORT No. 7. In regard to the resolution of J. Sharp, and H. A. C. Walker, asking that the first restrictive Rule be made more definite in reference to standards of doctrine, the committee do not concur with the proposal. They do not think it advisable to adopt the resolution of R. K. Musgrave and H. J. McElroy, in regard to statistics—nor the suggestion of A. L. P. Green as to the roll of membership, nor the resolution of Levi Pearce in regard to training applicants to preach—nor the resolutions of T. W. Bennett in regard to ordination of local preachers—nor the resolution of J. E. Edwards on publishing General Conference resolutions in the Discipline—nor that of T. C. Johnson in regard to the examination of licentiates and deacons in their studies, by presiding elders—nor those of J. H. Montgomery in regard to making permanent preachers and trustees members of Quarterly Conferences, and in reference to Secretaries of Quarterly Conferences.

In regard to the resolution of J. S. Key, the Committee do not concur, but they think it important that the secretaries of Annual Conferences should be specially careful in reference to statistical records.

The Committee beg leave to transfer the resolution of T. L. Boswell to the Committee on the Support of the Ministry.

They report that what in the resolutions of J. E. Evans and E. H. Myers, has not been anticipated by previous action, is expedient.

They do not recommend the proposal in the resolution of C. F. Deems, and A. M. Shipp, to omit Sec. 1 and 2 of chap. i. part 1 of the Discipline, but they do recommend that the Book Editor be instructed, on the adoption of this Report, to substitute "Church" for "society," where it occurs in the Discipline as representing the idea of "Church."

In regard to the resolution of J. S. Kenady, asking for the insertion in the Discipline of a Form for Dedicating Churches, they recommend that the Committee on Re-arrangement of the Discipline, called for by previous action, be instructed, by the adoption of this Report, to prepare such Form.

The resolution of H. F. Johnson, in regard to ordinations, has been anticipated by previous action.

In regard to the resolution of B. Jones, they recommend that after the word "five" on page 254 of the Discipline, there be added the words, "who shall elect their own Chairman, Secretary, and Treasurer."

They ask leave to transfer the resolution of J. W. Glenn to the Committee on the Relation of Baptized Children to the Church.

They do not recommend the appending of proof texts to the Articles of Religion, as proposed in the resolution of A. Davidson.

Previous action precludes the necessity of reporting to the paper, on questions in Annual Conferences, submitted by E. H. Myers.

In regard to various papers on the business of Quarterly Conferences, the Committee recommend the Conference to adopt the following amendment of the Discipline.

On page 57 of the Discipline, after Acts 6 to Ques. 4, insert: Let the following order of business be observed in the Quarterly Conferences:

After the opening services let the roll be called, and the following inquiries be made:

1. Are there any complaints or appeals?

2. Is there a written report of the number and state of the Sunday Schools, and of the pastoral instruction of children?

3 Are there any recommendations: (1.) For license, to preach or exhort? (2.) For admission into the Traveling connection? (3.) Of Local preachers for Deacon's or Elder's Orders?

4. Are there any applications for the renewal of license?

5. What is doing for the cause of missions?

6. What is the general state of the Church?

Let the answer to this question embrace, in a written report, the number baptized, or in any other way added to the Church; died, withdrawn, and expelled during the present quarter.

7. What amount has been raised the present quarter for the support of the ministry, and how has it been applied?

8. What amounts have been raised for other benevolent enterprises of the Church?

9. Is there any miscellaneous business?

10. Where shall the next Quarterly Meeting be held?

This report completes the action of the Committee on all the papers referred to them. They ask the Conference to adopt the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Book Editor be, and is hereby instructed to conform the new edition of the Discipline to the changes proposed in this report.

Respectfully submitted,

THOS. O. SUMMERS, Chairman.

New Orleans, April 16, 1866.

Rev. Dr. D. S. Doggett, Chairman of the Committee on Education, presented a report, which lies on the table under the rule.

On motion, a report from the Committee on Sunday Schools was taken up.

Rev. Wm. Rush, of the Missouri Conference, moved that the resolutions in the report be taken up seperately. Agreed to.

The first resolution, proposing the abolishment of the association known as the Sunday School Society of the M. E. Church South, was taken up.

Rev. Dr. L. D. Huston, of the Kentucky Conference, said the religious character and training of children should be the foremost interest of our church, and he wished it to go forth as the deliberate sense of this General Conference. If any brother can name any other interest which he thinks should take precedence of this one, let him name it, and let him discuss it. He held that the religious character and training of the children of the church and of the Sunday School, was the foremost interest in this or any other Christian Church. He contended that it was the duty of the Church to provide for the children of the church juvenile literature that should be more attractive than any other juvenile literature in the world. He contended that it was the duty of this church to provide for our children a religious literature so attractive that the child with money enough to buy one of your books, will pass a candy shop in order to buy it. He contended also that it is our duty to place this interest in the hands of the very best man you can, select from the whole connection, whose duty it shall be for the coming four years to devote his whole heart and labors to this one interest.

Rev. Dr. J. E. Edwards, of the Virginia Conference, said he accorded with Dr. Huston fully in the opinions he expressed, with a very slight modification. Twelve years ago this Sunday School Society was started, and we are unable to find anything that it has accomplished in that time. In Nashville, in 1858, the matter was under consideration, and we appointed a General Agent, and since that the Society has done nothing. The committee that has had this subject under consideration, thought, perhaps, that it was better to abolish the Society, and while they have not proposed any central point from which to operate, it was, in the minds of the committee, that that question should be settled by the General Conference. The committee thought that the best way to bring the whole subject before the Conference, was by proposing the abolition of the whole Society. He thought every member of the General Conference would concur with him that this is one of the most important interests of the church that we have under consideration. It is the pleasure of the General Conference to adopt this resolution, and the abolishment of this Society, he hoped they would make some suggestion by which we can have a central point around which to rally.

Bishop Pierce said that he was in harmony with Drs. Huston, Edwards, and others in regard to this subject, that it was one of primary and vital interest to the church. He did not think there was any other field afforded so promising and so profitable and one that will more certainly yield fruit to the glory of God, than this one. He thought the recommendation of the committee to abolish the Sunday School Society a wise one, for, according to representation, it has been only an incumbrance in the prosecution of the Sunday School work. All the legislation of the church ought to go on the idea that the training of the children is one of our great primary objects, and no church is properly organized upon gospel principles that does not incorporate in itself some mode by which at least this primary work of the church is to be done. He thought the abolishment of this society a wise measure in view of all the facts in regard to its organization and history.

Rev. H. F. Johnson, of the Mississippi Conference, said he was before offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Report of the Committee on Sunday Schools be recommitted, with instructions to report a plan for the organization of a Board for the publication of Sunday School Books, and the collection of funds."

Rev. B. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference, said the purpose of this resolution is to harmonize the action of this body. We wish to get this society out of the way, in order that we provide better means for accomplishing the work of our Sunday School interest. We desire that the children shall contribute their own money in the Sunday School, by which these books are to be published and paid for, and we also wish to send those publications where children who are not able to contribute may have the privilege of reading them. If they will give us but the means, we will send out books that will send their healing waters all over the land. But we must have a fund to accomplish this result. This fund we cannot get by means of this society, and we, therefore, wish to have it discontinued, in order that we may provide some better means.

Rev. Dr. J. E. Edwards, of the Virginia Conference, said he was opposed to re-committing this report. The Committee has done the best it could, and if we bring in another report it would probably cause just such another discussion. There is one central idea in regard to this matter, and that is wrong. We do not intend to cast any imputation upon our book agents and editors in what we have said. But they have not had the money at their command to publish as they ought to have done. He moved to add to the resolution the following: "and that annual conferences, by such agents as they may severally adopt, shall collect and forward funds to the book editor or book agent, to be employed by him, as a special fund—and for no other purpose—for enriching, illustrating, and cheapening our Sunday School literature."

Rev. Dr. A. Rosser proposed that a committee of three be appointed, to consist of Dr. Summers, Dr. Huston, and any other person that may be elected, to take this subject into consideration, and devise some plan in regard to this matter, and bring it in to-morrow.

Rev. Dr. T. O. Summers said he had conferred with the Chairman of the Committee several times, with the Book Agent, and also with Dr. Huston, very often in regard to this matter. It was unnecessary for him to speak of the interest he had taken in the children all the time. It was unnecessary for him to say that he had been laboring, writing, and preaching, to aid that work. He however desired to say a few words in regard to the history of the Sunday School Society and its operations. Your appointed a Sunday School Society, and perhaps it was well for you to do so, but you did so without making the necessary arrangements for working the machinery of it. It was then argued that there would be large contributions to that society that would enable the Book Agent to publish and compete with other like institutions of our country. Those contributions never came into our treasury. It would be humiliating to enumerate the small amounts that came into our treasury. It amounted simply to nothing, and he did not suppose we gave two hundred dollars in all for manuscripts we published for Sunday School Books. He had read through many and many a book manuscript that was indigenous, and sent him, which he desired to publish because it grew up in our own country, but he did not have the means to even pay for the manuscript. You wanted books illustrated and printed in nice style when we had not the means for doing it. You called for books to be illustrated with wood-cuts, which illustrations alone would cost a large amount. The book agent had not the capital to invest in these publications. The American Sunday School Union has an income of one, two, or three hundred thousand dollars a year, gathered from all parts of the United States. This society, with this large revenue, is able to publish books in such a shape as will give them universal circulation. If you had given me a hundred thousand dollars, as you ought to have done, I would have been able to publish books of that sort. He sent to England, and got a list of little infant publications issued by the religious Tract Society of London. He got them at the mere cost of the books for there is no copyright attached to them. You ask why we do not publish this or that book. The answer is, because they are copy righted. There are hundreds of books in the catalogue of the American Sunday School Union that are copyrighted, and we cannot publish them at all. Then you require costly engravings, and we had no money for that purpose. The books we published were mostly reprints from English publications. He thought that the Methodist Episcopal Church South, has published the richest catechism in the world. The speaker here gave a detailed history of the compilation and publication of the catechisms that have been issued by the publishing house. He thought there was but one addition necessary in this direction to make the list complete, and that is a catechism on the Discipline that has been suggested. The speaker said that there were some things which could not well be ventilated on this Conference floor, in reference to this question. There are ways and means of securing Sunday School literature, which it would not be proper to express here. He thought we could secure the end in view, if you will give them a little money, and they would then be able to make both ends meet.

Rev. A. H. Johnson withdrew his resolution.

On vote, the amendment proposed by Rev. Dr. Edwards was agreed to, and the resolution, as amended, adopted.

The second resolution, proposing a ritual for Sunday Schools, was taken up, and after some discussion adopted by 60 ayes to 46 noes.

On motion, Rev. Dr. Wightman, Rev. Dr. Summers, and Bishop Andrew, were appointed a Committee to prepare a ritual for that purpose.

The third resolution, providing for the publication of a series of catechisms, was taken up and adopted.

On motion, Rev. Dr. T. O. Summers was appointed to superintend the publication of the series.

The fourth resolution, to resuscitate the Sunday School Visitor forthwith, was taken up, and adopted.

The fifth resolution, recommending that the children of Sunday Schools should be regularly instructed in sacred music, was taken up and adopted.

The sixth resolution, instructing the Book Editor in regard to the publication of Sunday School Books, was taken up and adopted.

The seventh, and last resolution, urging upon parents the importance of giving their children Sunday School instruction, was taken up and adopted.

The report as a whole was then adopted.

Rev. Dr. A. H. Mitchell moved that when the Conference adjourn, it adjourn to meet again at 7 o'clock, this evening. Motion agreed to.

Rev. Samuel Register, Chairman of the Committee on Infant Church Membership, asked leave to withdraw the report he had submitted from the Committee.

Rev. W. M. Rush, of the Missouri Conference, moved that the request be granted.

After quite an animated discussion, on motion of Rev. Dr. E. H. Myers, the motion was laid on the table.

Report No. 1, from the Committee on Changes of Economy, in regard to the name of the Church and the substitute offered for the same, were then taken up.

The call for the previous question on the adoption of the first resolution under consideration having been sustained, on yesterday, the question at once occurred on the resolution whether the title of the church should be changed. On vote the resolution was adopted.

On motion of Rev. W. M. Rush, the session was prolonged until the Conference should finish this matter under discussion.

Rev. Samuel Register then made quite a lengthy address, in favor of changing the name, the publication of which is unavoidably delayed until our next issue.

The question then occurring on the resolution providing that the same shall be submitted to the annual conferences, and approved by a three-fourths vote, before it shall be declared adopted. The resolution was passed.

The following names were then then proposed: Rev. Dr. E. H. Myers, Methodist Church; Rev. Dr. L. D. Huston, Methodist Episcopal Church in America; Rev. L. Rosser, Southern Methodist Episcopal Church; Rev. W. H. Anderson, Southern Methodist Church; Rev. S. S. Roszell, Wesleyan Episcopal Church; Rev. S. Hargiss, United Methodist Episcopal Church; Rev. P. P. Neely, Episcopal Methodist Church; Rev. Dr. J. A. Duncan, Methodist Episcopal Church; Rev. E. T. Jones, Methodist Church South.

The first vote stood as follows: Episcopal Methodist Church, 52; Methodist Church, 45; Methodist Episcopal Church in America, 11; Methodist Church South, 9; scattering, 4.

No one name having received a two-thirds vote, it was declared there was no election.

All the names were then withdrawn except the three highest, whereupon a second vote was had with the following result: Methodist Church, 59; Episcopal Methodist Church, 52; Methodist Episcopal Church in America, 15.

There still being no selection, a vote was had on the two highest names with the following result: Methodist Church, 71; Episcopal Methodist Church, 59.

There still being no selection, Rev. J. B. McFerrin moved that the Conference unite on the name Methodist Church.

On vote the name Methodist Church was then adopted by 111 ayes to 21 noes.

The Conference then adjourned with a benediction.

EVENING SESSION.

Conference met at 7 P. M., pursuant to adjournment, Bishop Kavanaugh in the chair.

The question as to the name of the Church was called up, pending the discussion of which the Conference adjourned.

TWENTY-SECOND DAY.

SATURDAY, April 28, 1866.

The Conference met at 9 o'clock, A. M., pursuant to adjournment, Bishop Early in the chair.

The opening devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. W. R. Branham, of the Georgia Conference.

Dr. Smith, of Virginia, arose to explain. He was cut off, he said, by the decision of the chair—and properly so perhaps—when on the occasion of electing suitable persons for Episcopacy, he was proceeding to explain himself for having nominated Rev. J. A. Duncan for California. I will now, with the indulgence of the house, give the explanation in a few words. The nomination was made on my own individual responsibility. But it seems, Mr. President, that however sincerely done on my part, that my nomination was, and perhaps still is, considered to have had a damaging effect, both on the nominee and upon others. This I very deeply regret, that is I regret that it should be so considered by any one. It was certainly not my purpose to afflict any one. And allow me to say, sir, that I have far too much respect for the members of this House to allow myself to think that any man who had made up his mind, in the fear of God, as I trust all did who had made up their minds, to vote for the brother named by me, was induced by the simple fact of a public nomination to change his vote. If in this I am mistaken, I should only regret it the more. But I am quite sure that I am not mistaken. Yet be this as it may, I take it for granted that all concerned will accept this explanation and these assurances.

Rev. Dr. E. H. Myers, presented the following resolution:

Resolved, That after the bishops have presented to the several Annual Conferences, the ordicance changing the name of the Church, and taken the vote upon it, as it passed this Conference with the name "Episcopal Methodist Church," they shall then take the sense of the Conference as to which of the following names they would prefer, viz; "The Methodist Church," "the Methodist Episcopal Church," "The Methodist Episcopal Church South," and that when the Bishops have aggregated the vote on these names they shall declare that name adopted which has received three-fourths of all the votes cast in the Annual Conferences.

Rev. Nelson Head, of the Virginia Conference, moved to lay the resolution on the table. Agreed to.

The Following additional votes were then recorded in regard to the proposition adopting the name "Episcopal Methodist Church:" ayes, N. Wilson, N. Head, A. M. Shipp, L. Pierce, J. W. Glenn, J. Atkins, N. H. Lee, and W. M. Prattman; noes, O. R. Blue, G. Jones, W. H. Anderson, A. H. Redford, and J. M. Steele.

The Secretary announced the entire vote to be 94 ayes to 43 noes.

The part of the report from the Committee on Missions, in reference to the Foreign Missionary Board, was taken up.

On vote, the blank designating the location of the Foreign Board was filled with Baltimore.

Rev. S. Register, of the Baltimore Conference, moved that the vote for Secretary of the Board be taken by ballot. Agreed to.

The following was the result of the ballot: Rev. Dr. E. W. Sehon, 95; Rev. John Poisal, 37; Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall, 1.

Rev. Dr. E. W. Sehon having received a majority of the votes cast, was declared duly elected Secretary of the Foreign Missionary Board. The report was then laid over for the present.

Report No. 1 from the committee on Boundaries was taken up. The report recommends that the Georgia Conference have permission to divide at such time as it may deem best, and that part of Georgia now embraced in the Florida Conference be receded to the Georgia Conference; that that part of the Kansas Conference south of the Missouri river be annexed to the St. Louis Conference, and the remaining portion be annexed to the Missouri Conference.

On motion of Rev. J. Anderson, the report was so amended that the part asked to be receded shall not be so receded until after the Georgia Conference shall have divided.

On vote the amendment was agreed to, and the report as amended adopted.

Report No. 2, from the Committee on Boundaries, was then taken up. The report recommends that the territory embraced in the Oregon, Jacksonville, and Idaho Districts, be set off from the Pacific Conference, and called the Columbia Conference; that the East Texas Conference have the privilege to divide at such time as it deems best; and that the Rio Grande Conference be re-annexed to the Texas Conference; and that the Texas Conference, so constituted, be permitted to divide by a line to be agreed upon by its members.

The first two items, in regard to the Pacific and East Texas Conferences, were taken up and adopted.

Quite a discussion sprang up in reference to the last item of the report, participated in by Rev. J. Hamilton, Rev. R. Alexander, Rev. A. Davidson, and Rev. J. W. Whipple, when, upon vote, a substitute for the report, presented by Rev. A. Davidson, was adopted, fixing the following as the boundary line between the Texas and Rio Grande Conferences: It shall begin on the Tresplassins Bay, and run with the east line of Jackson county, with the east line of Tavaen county, with the east line of Gonzales county, with the east line of Cauldwell county, and thence with the east line of Hays county, until it intersects the line dividing the Texas and the Texas Waco Conference at the mouth of the Sardanalis, leaving Mountain City in the West Texas Conference.

Rev. R. Alexander moved that the conference west of that dividing line be called West Texas Conference. Agreed to.

Report No. 3 from the Committee on Boundaries, recommending that the request that the part of the State of Mississippi now in the Mobile Conference be annexed to the Mississippi Conference be not granted, was taken up.

Rev. H. H. Montgomery moved to amend the report by striking out the word "not."

After considerable discussion, participated in by Rev. Dr. J. Hamilton, Rev. W. Harrington, Rev. T. W. Dorman, Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall, Rev. W. E. M. Linfield and Rev. P. P. Neeley on vote the amendment was lost.

The report was then adopted.

Bishop Andrew said he desired to make a few remarks before the adjournment of the Conference. It has been thought by some that at an early day next week we shall have no quorum in this house. He did not know whether it was true or not. He knew that about this period, there is a great propensity to leave the Conference. Things do not go just to suit all, but he hoped they would set a better example than by leaving until the proper time comes. You have come here at a great expense, the most of you, and the country are looking to you with a great deal of interest for important results. You had better stay from home a few days longer, than to leave any important work unfinished. If you leave anything undone, it must remain undone for the next four years, and the church is so much injured. Stay until your work is done. Do not run off. The eyes of this community and the eyes of the church are upon us. Important interests depend upon your future action. You owe it to God, you owe it to the church, you owe it to your reputation and conscience, to stay and do your work, to stay until your work is accomplished. He loved home as much as any body, but had been very little at home since last October. He had just returned from a trip to Baltimore when he came here, and had been about three months away from home. But it was his intention to stay here until the voice of duty told him to go away, and he hoped all would do the same.

The Conference then adjourned with a benediction.

TWENTY-THIRD DAY.

The Conference met at 9 o'clock A. M., pursuant to adjournment, Bishop Andrew in the chair.

The minutes of the last session were read and adopted.

Bishop Pierce took the chair.

On the question in reference to the change of the name of the church, the vote of Rev. J. M. P. Hickerson was recorded "no."

Rev. B. Jones and Rev. S. Anthony changed their votes, on the same question, from "no" to "aye."

Rev. C. C. Calaway, reserve of the Mobile Conference, was recognized as delegate in place of W. M. Wightman.

Rev. R. Alexander, of the Texas Conference, presented the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the entire German work in Texas shall be connected with the Texas Conference, and that the Chairman of the Committee on Missions is requested to address them a communication in answer to their memorial.

The report of the Committee on Boundaries, under consideration when the Conference adjourned on Saturday, was taken up.

The item recommending that the petition be not granted, asking that the Arkansas river be made the boundary line between the Arkansas and Ouachita Conferences, was read, and after some discussion by Rev. J. M. Steel, Rev. Andrew Hunter, Rev. E. T. Jones and Rev. A. R. Winfield, the item of the report was adopted.

The item recommending that the geographical lines limiting the boundaries of the M. E. Church South be abrogated, was adopted.

The report was then adopted as a whole.

The report from the Committee on Boundaries was taken up, recommending, in reference to a communication from the German ministers and members in Texas, that we tender to them our sympathy, fostering care, and all the material aid in our power; and recommending, in reference to memorial asking that territory in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, be annexed to our annual conferences, that such churches or societies as are now or may hereafter be organized in any section of country not under our ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and which wish to be united with us in church fellowship, may be connected with our annual conferences and formed into separate annual conferences when the Bishops may deem proper.

Another report from the committee on Boundaries was then taken up.

The first item, recommending the division of the Texas Conference, and that the new conference thus formed be called the North West Texas Conference, was adopted.

The second item recommending that between the Western Virginia and Baltimore Conferences the original western boundary line of the Baltimore Conference be established, and also a minority report recommending that the Alleghany Mountains be established as a boundary line between the two Conferences, were taken up. A discussion of considerable length ensued, Rev. W. Keanedy, Rev. W. W. Bennett, and Rev. S. Hargiss, contending for the minority report, and Rev. E. R. Veitch, Rev. N. Wilson, Rev. Bishop Early, Rev. J. H. Linn, and Rev. S. Register, arguing in favor of the majority report. One of the principal arguments used by those in favor of the majority report, was that it is impossible to designate a definite boundary line by the Alleghany Mountains. These mountains are frequently scattered in spurs and ridges, over a width of sixty or seventy miles, interspersed with fertile and settled valleys. Those in favor of the minority report argued that although such is the geographical conformation of the country, these spurs and ridges are

Total Misconception.

The Mississippi Index and other papers are making statements to the effect that steps are being taken to unite "the Northern and Southern branches of the Methodists."

We are glad to see that an intelligent and forcible correction of this great error has been furnished by Prof. B. F. Larrabee.

It all grew out of a telegraphic proposition to pray together, and a hearty and speedy repentance of the same by the New York East Conference.

THE ADJOURNMENT.

At two o'clock on Thursday, the 3d instant, the General Conference brought its session to a close. The venerable Bishop Early was in the chair. The Secretary read up the minutes. The President gave out—

"Draw near, O Son of God, draw near;
Us with thy flaming eyes behold!"

In full sweet chorus the strong voices of many ministers of Christ blended the grand prayer of the hymn, and sent it upward on the wings of love to the throne of the Heavenly Grace. Then followed the prayer; and such a prayer, of fullness, of earnestness, as included all that we needed and wished, by Dr. Lovick Pierce. His long and illustrious life, the thought that, possibly, we should not again hear his voice, made that breathing of prayer doubly precious. Then came the benediction; and the session of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, so marked by important themes and legislation, and equally characterized by harmony and good christian fellowship, ended, as it began, amid blessings and hopes which mingle with the thought of all that is good on earth, and all that is glad in Heaven.

Nineteenth Anniversary of the N. O. Methodist Sunday Schools.

On Sunday evening, at 4 o'clock, the Carondelet Street Church was filled—the body of the house chiefly with Sabbath-School children, the galleries with interested spectators. Nearly all the schools of the city and suburbs were present. The exercises were conducted by the General Superintendent, W. H. Foster, Esq., whose successful labors in building up our Sunday Schools, are well known and appreciated. Rev. Dr. Sehon opened with prayer, and the exercises were continued by addresses and singing by the children and pupils of the schools. The opening address was elaborate, and ably rendered. The valedictory was a composition of great merit, and gracefully delivered. Dialogues, speeches and singing kept up the interest of the audience for two hours, when the meeting was brought to a close with the benediction by Bishop Kavanaugh. This anniversary demonstrates to the friends of Methodism that our churches are rapidly recovering from the dispersion of the last two or three years. There is life and vigor left, and we are recovering the ground lost by forcible expulsion from our churches during years past. The part taken in the exercises by the German schools was particularly interesting. Their speeches and dialogues gave novelty and variety, and the melody of their unequaled singing will long linger in our memory. For nineteen years our schools have had this annual re-union. None can estimate the good done. The great work is going on encouragingly, and the field expands and is whitening to the harvest.

The Next General Conference.

The next session of the General Conference is to be held at Memphis, Tennessee, on the first Wednesday in May, 1870.

ACTS OF GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The action of the General Conference may be summed up in the following items:

1. The name of the Church it was resolved to change to EPISCOPAL METHODIST CHURCH, provided that three-fourths of all the members of the several Annual Conferences shall concur therein.

2. Lay Representation—four laymen, one of whom may be a local preacher, (to be elected by the District Stewards or in such way as the Annual Conferences may direct,) to each Presiding Elder's District in the Annual Conferences; an equal number of laymen and clergymen as representatives to the General Conference, excepting the number be odd, then the advantage of the odd number to be given to the clerical portion—the lay-members of the Annual Conference to elect the lay representatives to the General Conference, and the clerical members to elect the clerical representatives. Upon the request of one fifth of the General Conference, the laymen and the clergymen can form two distinct houses, when a concurrent majority will be necessary to pass any law. This action, however, is subject to the same confirmation and approval of three-fourths of all the preachers in the several Annual Conferences.

3. The limit of the Pastorate has been extended from two to four years.

4. A system of Church meetings was adopted, to be held once a month if practicable, otherwise once a quarter—to be presided over by the preacher in charge. The object of it is to put the membership more thoroughly in connection with the various enterprises of the Church.

5. The probationary system has been abrogated—members are to be received formally by the preacher in charge, according to the form of the baptismal service, or some other form in an appendix to the Discipline

6. Class-meeting is placed upon the same footing with prayer-meeting, and is no longer a test of membership.

7. The missionary society is divided into a Domestic and a Foreign Missionary Society, with distinct Boards, Secretaries and Treasuries—the former located at Nashville, and the latter at Baltimore.

8. Everything in the Discipline in regard to the men and women sitting apart in the church, has been taken out.

9. The whole matter of the quarterage has been merged into a real support.

10. Every thing advisory in regard to dress is taken out; and so too all that part which requires preachers to consult the presiding elder upon the delicate subject of matrimony.

11. No traveling preacher can be proposed to an Annual Conference for ordination, except he shall have passed an examination before the Conference Committees to their satisfaction in the prescribed course of study.

12. It is recommended that, for the present, a Biblical Chair be established in connection with each of our Colleges, for the theological education of young preachers.

13. Several important changes in the boundaries of Conferences were made, for which we refer to the report of the Committee on Boundaries; and Northwest Texas, the Columbia, the Mobile, and the Montgomery Conferences were formed. The name of the "Rio Grande" Conference was changed to West Texas, and that of the "Ouachita" Conference to Little Rock The Kansas Conference was divided between the Missouri and St. Louis Conferences. The St. Louis, the Missouri, the Baltimore, the Virginia, the Georgia, and the East Texas are permitted to divide during the next four years, if they shall deem it expedient and desirable so to do.

14. The vote on licensing preachers and recommending persons for ordination, is to be taken by ballot in the Quarterly Conferences.

15. The colored members of the Church are to be formed into their own Quarterly and Annual Conferences, the latter at the discretion of the Bishops, with a view to their ultimately forming their own General Conference. Meanwhile the Bishops of our Church are authorized to confer with the Bishops of the African M. E. Church, with a view to a union between our Colored Churches and that Church. It is also recommended that day-schools and Sabbath-schools be formed among the colored people whenever practicable.

designated by different names, that the Alleghany Mountains proper form a distinctive and continuous range, are the dividing line between the water courses, and there is no geographical difficulty in designating them as the boundary line.

On vote, the minority report was rejected and majority report adopted.

The remaining items of the report were adopted without discussion, and recommended that the original boundary line between the Baltimore and Virginia Conferences be re-established; except the neck of Virginia, which should belong to the Virginia Conference, and that the Virginia and Baltimore Conferences have permission to form three or more annual conferences out of their territory before the next General Conference, should they deem it necessary.

Rev. W. Harrington presented a resolution, that it is the sense of this General Conference, that it is expedient that the boundaries of the annual conferences should be conformed to State boundaries, and whenever a State is too large, it shall be divided into two or more conferences, and that the several annual conferences represented here, be, and are hereby instructed to take such steps as to accomplish this end, at the sitting of the next General Conference. The resolution lies on the table under the rule

Rev. Dr. E. H. Myers presented an article as a prelix to the chapter on Boundaries, providing that the boundaries of annual conferences shall be fixed by a committee of the General Conference, consisting of two delegates from each annual conference. Lies on the table under the rule.

On vote, the name of the Onachita Conference was changed to that of Little Rock Conference.

Report No. 2, from the Committee on Books and Periodicals, in reference to the publication of the Church Evangelist and the paying the expense of commissions to the Convention at Louisville, was taken up and adopted.

Report No. 3, from the Committee on Books and Periodicals, granting the request of the Christian Union Church that they have the privelege of printing a hymn book from the stereotype plate of the M. E. Church South hymn book, and in regard to the report of the book agent, was taken up and adopted.

On motion of Rev A. H. Redford, the Book Committee were empowered to settle with Rev. R. Abbey, Financial Secretary.

Bishop Paine took the chair.

On motion of Rev. Dr. W. A. Smith, report No. 1 from the Committee on the Support of the Ministry was taken up.

Rev. J. E. Evans moved that the report be taken up item by item.

Rev. J. B. Smith moved that the report be laid over until to-morrow, in order to give members an opportunity to more carefully examine it. On vote, the latter motion prevailed.

On motion of Rev. J. E. Evans, Report No. 2 from the Committee on Changes of Economy was taken up. The report has reference to the reception of members into the church, with a form therefor, and the regulations with regard to social meetings.

Rev. J. E. Evans moved that the report be taken up item by item. Agreed to.

The first item, providing that candidates for admission into the church shall be examined by the pastor and a committee, was taken up.

A minority report on the same subject, differing mainly from the majority report that an examining committee is optional, was also taken up.

Rev. Dr. Thomas O. Summers said he had studied this subject about as closely as he had been able to study any subject. He had had it on hand a number of years, and he had heard what members have said and proposed at various times in reference to the matter, and he was afraid that we are going to have something complex in the book of Discipline. He wanted everything brief, rather a directory than anything else, taking it for granted that the preacher will know how to do it with general directions. You cannot put down in the Discipline a law that will do for every time and every place. The precise form you must leave to the minister, and the simplest thing you can put in will be the best. The Rev. Dr. here read a form that had been adopted by the Mobile Conference in regard to this matter, which he presented as a substitute.

Substitutes were also presented by Rev. P. P. Neely, Rev. H. F. Johnson, Rev. Dr. J. B. Walker and Rev. J. C. Keener.

Rev. Dr. A. L. P. Green said he greatly preferred the report of the minority to the report of the majority, but he did not feel exactly satisfied with anything that has been presented on this subject. He believed that if we were not more careful, we would be driven in a direction we ought to avoid. The condition of admission into the church, as he understood it, was a sincere desire to flee from the wrath to come, and be saved from sin. He held that the experience of grace never has been a condition of membership into our church, and she hoped never would be. He thought that the glory of Methodism largely enlisted in this very condition, and that it was one of the most important principles adopted by Mr. Wesley, this same condition. He thought we ought to guard and protect it. He was opposed to a probationary state, either long or short; he was opposed to a committee to examine persons who wished to be members of the Church. It has worked badly in other Churches and he did not want any such element in ours. He wanted our system adapted to the whole human family. He did not think there was one case in a hundred thousand where a person offering himself to the Church would not be accepted. He joined the Church when he was nine years of age, and knew nothing about doctrine or discipline. He simply knew that he wanted to serve God and get to Heaven, and get into the Church. He did not want complex machinery which the people would not understand. He wanted it just as simple as we can work it, so that when a person comes for admission into the Church it may not prove a stumbling block to him. He wanted it impressive, so that they could feel that they have come among us, and that when they are inside the church they can never get out unless they are turned out. He thought there was no necessity for having much machinery in it; simply let the preacher take them in when they come for admission.

Rev. G. W. D. Harris, of the Memphis Conference, said he was pleased to hear brethren allude to simplicity in the church. He was also much in favor of brevity, when the great ends at which we are aiming can be compassed. The very shortest route, if it can be made an ascertained fact that it is a safe one, is, in his opinion, the better one—not in some, but in all cases. It seemed to him that with a slight amendment the Discipline could be adapted to the accomplishment of all brethren desire in reference to this matter. Instead of asking how they shall be admitted on trial, ask how they shall be admitted into the church; exchange all in your Discipline that relates to trial, and adapt your Discipline to this change by a little different wording, and he believed it would be as good and short a form as could be adopted.

Rev. J. Hamilton moved that the different plans proposed be all referred to a special committee of five, to be appointed by the chair.

Rev. Dr. W. A. Smith said that one of the restrictive rules says you shall not alter our general rules. One of our general rules says that the only condition for admission into this society is a desire to flee from the wrath to come, and to save your soul. When you make this a condition for children, servants and other persons that know nothing in the world about theology, requiring them to state that they believe in the doctrines of the Methodist Church South, you establish a condition of membership not recognized in our general rules.

Rev. Dr. E. H. Myers said that both Dr. Green and Dr. Smith are entirely mistaken. Their arguments are founded upon a misapprehension. The question asked is, "Do you approve of the doctrine and discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, so far as you comprehend them?" This report received the close attention of the committee for three nights. It is the result of a compromise between different opinions. When it came up for final action, it was almost unanimously approved, and he thought that if these measures are defeated, they will be defeated by the friends of the measure, because they will not be satisfied with any other compromise that can be made. He was therefore opposed to any further reference of the matter.

Bishop Pierce concurred in the idea advanced by Rev. Mr. Harris, and thought a few amendments to the Discipline all that is necessary, so as to conform its reading for the reception of members directly into the church without previous trial. The Bishop here read the Discipline as he suggested it should be amended.

Rev. Dr. D. R. McAnally moved as a substitute for all the plans presented, the adoption of the Discipline in reference to this matter, as read in an amended form by Bishop Pierce.

On vote, the motion of Rev. J. Hamilton, to refer to a special committee, prevailed.

Rev. P. M. Pinckard moved that when the Conference adjourn it adjourn to meet again at 7 o'clock, this evening. Agreed to.

The second section of the report in reference to social meetings was taken up. That part of the report in reference to regular meetings and love feasts was taken up and adopted; with a few slight verbal amendments. The part of the report in reference to class-meetings was then taken up.

Rev. W. H. Parks, of the Georgia Conference, moved to lay the whole of that part of the report on the table.

Rev. Dr. Lovick Pierce, of the Georgia Conference: I have always been the devoted friend and advocate of class-meetings, just as long as I believed that they could be made valuable to spread Methodism in this country. I should give up my hope in class-meetings, comparatively speaking, as I gave the wife of my first and only love to her grave. I came here settled in my own opinion upon this point and this fact, that anything that was as elementary and necessary in the organism of Wesleyan Methodism as class-meetings has been, and the observance of it a condition of membership, that to change it, to say nothing of striking it out, would be to move both dangerous and radical. My opinion therefore was, after a careful examination of this matter, that I could not vote for anything as radical in its nature as the removal of class-meeting from Wesleyan Methodism as a term of membership. Now if you will remove this elementary law, that made the observance of class-meeting a term of membership, and leave it in that book as a privilege, the ground of action would be to release every Methodist in the Church South from any obligation to go to class-meeting at all. You cannot separate the two things to save your life. I therefore had rather see everything in the book on class-meeting stricken out, and church meetings, as a grand organization of the church adopted, and our people expected to attend them monthly or more seldom, as might be, and the attendance upon them made a term of membership, as was formerly the case with the class-meeting. You thus lose the name but not the end and correct the opinion many people have got into, that the church has no right to make the observance of anything of this sort a term of membership. God never made the church without giving to it the inherent right to take care of itself, and as soon as the people are at liberty to do what they desire in this respect, you destroy this internal element, this self-preservation of government. But painful as it is to me to do it, after all I have seen and heard, I will vote for brother Parks' motion, in this case, rather than return from this General Conference, to be told by the Methodists in Columbus—we won't go to class meeting; we have got the privilege, but we have ordained, that if a brother Methodist not only refuses to go to class meeting, but speaks against them, he is acknowledged by this act of the General Conference as much entitled to the benefit of the Church as the leader of the class meeting. Although I love the class meeting, I tell you, just as surely as you do this thing, just so surely will you tear the Methodist Church into a thousand fragments and fractions in twenty years, because you cannot do a thing of this sort to save your life, without creating in the Church a strong class-meeting party and a strong anti-class-meeting party, and the Church will be torn by these internal parties. Let your class-meetings go, and then you will have those Church-meetings that will be the vital affirmative power, such as the class-meeting formerly was; and when our people take it into their heads that they can go and take care of the Methodist Church, and stay at home when they please, and be as acceptable in one issue as the other, let them know that they have made a mistake. We have the right to fix this fastening on this point to hold together those things that pertain to the internal piety and policy of the Church.

Rev. Dr. A. H. Mitchell said he had heard it said, time and again, that great men often differ. It is no wonder then that a great man and a small man should differ. It was exceedingly embarrassing for him to say anything in opposition to what the venerable brother who has just spoken has said. But in some places we have held class meetings, and he thought profitably. He thought we should still continue class meetings as a privilege.

Rev. Dr. L. Rosser said that however the members of this solemn and responsible body of representatives may look upon this subject; whatever may be the indifference of some, whatever may be the vain hopes of others, he could not permit that institution to tremble in the balance, even lie suspended on the one hand by a permitted neglect, and on the other by a vague hope of better and brighter times. I could not permit, in regard to this institution, even a brother to question its undiminished value in its elementary nature, in its practicability and in its prospective importance. There is not a brother in this body who venerates with more sincere devotion the father of our Bishop, than I do. And if there was a man on the American Continent whom he would have expected, while the bright sun of mortal life is sinking in the west, to extend his hand to sustain the perpetuity of this institution, it is the hand of his venerable father in the gospel. When he looked over the broad field of innovation, when he saw coming into the arena the professional man, the man of humble disposition, the bold man, and men of all dispositions, to make a foray upon this institution, he felt in his inmost soul a shudder for the consequences. He felt conscious that the most important investigation for us, as one hundred and fifty representatives of nearly four thousand travelling preachers and five hundred thousand christians, is that of this institution. In his mind changes indicated decay. They are ominous of death, and this question is not for us to consider with puerile temerity and a cowardly spirit, because these blessed class-meetings are now closed by almost common consent. When we look upon this country, and see that the class-meeting is considered with so much indifference, so much superficiality, and so many bold and hazardous attacks made upon it, he was compelled to show that the whole opposition to the institution proceeds upon the hypothesis of arbitrary power.

The Conference then adopted a motion to adjourn, with the understanding that Rev. Dr. Rosser should have the floor at the next meeting.

Bishop Pierce announced the following as the special committee to take into consideration the various propositions in regard to the reception of members into the church: Rev. D. R. McAnally, Rev. A. Hunter, Rev. J. F. Key, Rev. W. M. Rush, and Rev. G. W. D. Harris.

The Conference then adjourned with a benediction.

EVENING SESSION.

The Conference met at 7 o'clock P. M., pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by Rev. J. E. Evans.

Bishop Pierce took the chair.

Rev. Dr. J. B. McFerrin moved that the number of Vice Presidents be increased from two to four, and the number of Managers from nine to eleven, in the Board of Foreign Missions, and also Domestic Missions. Agreed to.

Rev. J. B. McFerrin presented for the Domestic Board the names of Rev. Dr. Thomas O. Summers and Rev. A. H. Redford, as additional Vice Presidents; and Rev. Mortimer Hamilton and Rev. G. W. Smith, as additional members of the Board of Managers.

On vote, the nominations were confirmed.

Rev. Dr. E. W. Sehon presented the following nominations for the Board of Foreign Missions:

On vote, the nominations were confirmed.

Rev. Dr. C. F. Deems and Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall presented the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted, by a rising vote:

Resolved, That the Bishops and delegates, from the several Annual Conferences present at the General Conference, do hereby tender the respectful expression of their thanks to the ladies of New Orleans, who, with such pains-taking and success, contributed to their pleasure, by the entertainment enjoyed by the Conference at the City Park, on last Saturday afternoon, an occasion which shall be held in perpetual and pleasant memory.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to transmit a copy of these resolutions to to the ladies from whom the invitation was received.

The business before the Conference when they adjourned this afternoon was resumed.

Rev. Dr. L. Rosser having the floor, continued to speak for some time.

The discussion was then continued by Rev. J. T. Hughes, of the Tennessee Conference, Rev. Dr. Thos. O. Summers, and Rev. Wm. P. Radcliffe, after which, on vote, that part of the report in reference to class-meetings was adopted as a whole.

On vote, the adoption of the first item was reconsidered, amended by adding "that the members be earnestly advised to attend the class" and on further vote adopted.

The remainder of the report was then considered, and after the usual amount of discussion and a number of minor amendments, the report as a whole was adopted.

The Conference then adjourned, with a benediction.

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

TUESDAY, May 1, 1866.

The Conference met at 9 o'clock, A. M., pursuant to adjournment, Bishop Pierce in the chair.

The minutes of the last session were read and approved.

Rev. Dr. L. M. Lee, Chairman of the Committee on Itinerancy, presented his report No. 7, containing the result of the examination of the Annual Conference Journals, under the general heads: I. Defective Conference records; and II. Improper Conference Action. The report concludes as follows:

In view of all these facts, and to order if possible, to secure uniformity, accuracy, and completeness in these important Church records, your Committee recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That the Secretaries of the several Annual Conferences be, and they hereby are instructed to record in their Journals, respectively, all the acts of the Conference, of every kind whatever, in the consecutive order of their occurrence, especially of all complaints, charges and specifications, with the decision in all such cases; and, also, of all resolutions, reports of committees, statistics, memoirs of deceased ministers, and the appointments of preachers and whatever else out is into and constitutes a complete historical record of each Annual Session.

2. Resolved, That the General Annual Conferences be, and they hereby are instructed to require their Secretaries to conform their Journals to the plan indicated in the preceding resolution.

3. Resolved, That the Bishops be and they hereby are instructed to supervise the Conference Journals, to direct the Secretaries to the requirements of the General Conference, as to the manner of keeping their Journals; to supply the Secretaries with copies of their decisions on all questions of law submitted to them in an Annual Conference; and to affix their signatures, in all cases, to the Minutes of the Conference over which they preside.

4. Resolved, That the General Book Editor be required to have this report printed, and copies of it sent to each of the Annual Conferences, at their next ensuing sessions.

LEROY M. LEE, Chairman.

Rev. E. E. Wiley moved that the report be adopted as a whole.

On motion of Rev. Dr. W. Smith the first resolution was amended by inserting after the word "occurrence" the words "or in an appendix."

On vote the report was then adopted.

Rev. Dr. D. R. McAnally, Chairman of Special Committee, presented the following report in regard to the admission of members into the Church:

Ques. How shall persons be received into the church?

Ans. 1. When persons offer themselves for church membership, let the preacher in charge inquire into their spiritual condition and see that they are acquainted with the moral discipline of the church, and receive them into the church when they have given satisfactory assurance of their desire to flee from the wrath, to come and be saved from their sins, also of the genuineness of their faith and of their willingness to keep the rules of the church.

2. When satisfied on these points, let the preacher bring the said rules before the congregation, whenever practicable, and baptize them, if they have not been baptized, and, if they have been, propound to them the questions and receive the answers contained in the baptismal service, reserving for the third question and answer.

The remaining questions and answers of the report are the same as presented in the original report.

Rev. N. Wilson, of the Baltimore Conference, said that his decided preference, after our experience of forty-five years, was in favor of the mode of receiving members on probation. We cannot do away with this old Wesleyan mode without detriment to the interest of the Church, both as regards her membership and ministers. If we receive members into full membership at once, we shall be under the necessity of being very coy and cautious as to whom we receive. How can we ascertain who are to turn out valuable members, and who otherwise. The effect will be to keep many persons out of the Church that ought to be admitted, and we cannot tell perhaps, until after the expiration of six months, who are worthy of being trusted with the character of Church membership until they have been tested and tried. If we abolish the probationary system with regard to members, we should also do so for the ministers, and we would thus exclude some of our best men from the ministry.

Rev. Dr. D. R. McAnally, said that this plan does not propose to abolish the probationary system in fact. The onus rests upon the preacher, and he can receive them into the church when, in his judgment, they met the requirements laid down. The responsibility rests upon him, and he can admit them immediately, in one week, in six months, or in twelve months. The committee took the view that the Church is not a democracy, or an aristocracy, but is the kingdom of Christ of which His word is law and His ministers His embassadors to carry his word to those in darkness, and receive members upon the conditions that He has specified.

Rev. Dr. Thos. Madden, of the Tennessee Conference, said that after an experience of nearly sixty years in Methodism, and in the M. E. Church, he felt that he was authorized from that experience to say something upon what he believed to be a vital question. With his brethren he entered his demurrer to the whole of this from beginning to end. It would be well for all of us to consider that we had better let well enough alone. Have we done anything upon the former plan, have we achieved anything from Satan's kingdom, have we any Methodist Church in the United States at all? You all reply in the affirmative. Upon what ground were you received into the Church? Upon the old probationary ground. When he looked over this assembly of holy men, he was led more fully to be established in the opinion that we should not adopt this experiment. How did you and the Bishops get into the Church? Through the probationary plan, you have grown mighty and powerful in numbers, talent, influence, and wealth; as a church, and the world is deluged with Methodism. And upon what principle? Upon your old probationary principle. The simple question is asked, "Have you a desire to flee from the wrath to come, and to be saved from your sins?" and the timid response you have heard a thousand times, when, with all delicacy and tenderness, you had to nurse the glowing spark, which the least want of care would have extinguished. How have you acted when you have been asking in a public meeting for those to come forward who desire to enter the Church? Have you thrown obstacles in the way of the timid? Certainly not, but you have appealed to all that is refined and noble in the spirit and nature of those before you, and then thrown the doors open to receive them into the Church with but the one condition, that they desire to flee from the wrath to come, and to be saved from sin. If the desire has been kindled to flee from the wrath to come, do you send them home to study their discipline? No; but you extend to them a helping hand, and gather them into the Church. We may be too lax, but at the same time we may be too rigid. Let us learn wisdom from the experience of the past, and not change without good reason the long cherished customs of the Church.

Rev. Dr. L. Pierce said that the best arguments he had made in sixty years of an itinerant ministry are arguments that have grown up from the facts. He had often heard members take the ground that it is our best policy to let well enough alone. These are beautiful words, but he had come, in the experience of years, to hate the use of the term on account of the unfortunate application of it. He believed that the church can be bettered by some changes, and his philosophy is, that there is nothing that is well enough if it can be made to work better. This idea of probationary membership was a perfect dream, so far as anything substantial is concerned. When he commenced his work, these persons alluded to were taken hold of as seekers, and the idea of their being members of the church, in any sense such as we now consider and refer to membership, was not thought of. But in those golden days these seekers were taken in and converted into sound, scriptural Christians. The Discipline worked well then, and would now, if we continued to do now as we did then. But when our membership increased from fifteen and twenty to a hundred, and when our preachers preached every day and every night, little by little they came not to hold class meeting at all. That would have ruined a preacher in the time of his early experience. The damage that has come upon the church from probationary membership has come from this consideration mainly, and you come to the conclusion, with great regret, that this state of things will never be superinduced again in and upon Methodism as it was originally, and that it will have to be met by other modifications; and he was not willing, in this matter, to say that it is best to let well enough alone. It has been aimed at, more or less, that we should get clear of calling these persons members of the Methodist Church. At the same time it has been the desire of all parties to get them into our bands, to have a sort of a watchman over and about them until they shall be ready for admission into the church; and if you can do this, and work it well, you will gain all that you have lost, and, in his opinion, more. We must have a church that will present to the world a commanding, moral, spiritual front. He had known, within the last twenty years, during these great revivals, of people being begged into the church not less than six times. He had known these people come up in streams and give their hands to the preacher. He was asking for members, and they so understood it. They did not examine into our peculiar movements, and within thirty days after these meetings subsided, half of them would be found in the theatres, gambling-houses, cockpits and dens of infamy. Persons knowing of their conversion see them in these places, and they remark that they have seen some of our Methodists here and there, and the result has been very damaging to us. He did not like everything in the plans presented, but, under all the circumstances, he was inclined to give his hearty assent to the last report. He did not want such persons to be known as members, but only as seekers of religion.

Rev. Dr. W. A. Smith said he very much liked the report of the Committee, and thought it a great advancement and great improvement. If he adopted the idea of letting well enough alone, he should lift up both hands for it, because it is so much better than the former plan. But he feared that that plan might superinduce many of the evils under which we have labored. When an experienced minister comes to take a member in under that plan, he will do it well and with solemnity. But when certain inexperienced young men come to take members into the Church on that plan, it would not work so well. He thought there was an evil to be guarded against in that direction. With the plan proposed by brother Neely, he was, however, of the opinion, that the most inexperienced young preacher would receive members into the Church in an impressive manner. If in order, he wished to have that plan submitted as a substitute for the report.

The Chair decided that it would be out of order to present the plan as a substitute in that manner.

The previous question being called for, on vote, the call was sustained. The report of the special committee was then adopted.

The remainder of the report of the Committee on Changes of Economy, of which the report of the special committee formed a part, was then taken up and adopted.

On motion of Rev. Dr. W. A. Smith, the plan for the reception of members into the Church, presented by Rev. P. P. Neely, was ordered to be appended to the Discipline with the privilege of using it if desired.

A report from the Committee on Itinerancy, recommending that the Discipline be so changed as to require that all votes in the Quarterly conferences to license preachers, to recommend preachers for admission into the travelling connection, or for deacons or elders' orders, shall be taken by ballot, was taken up and adopted.

Bishop Andrew took the chair.

The report from the Committee on Itineramcy, recommending that, on page 55 of the Discipline, the question in Quarterly conferences, "Are there any complaints?" be amended by adding, "against the official conduct of members of the Quarterly conferences," was taken up. After quite a prolonged discussion, participated in by Rev. J. B. Jones, Rev. J. Hamilton, Rev. L. M. Lee, Rev. O. R. Blue, Rev. Guilford Jones, and Rev. R. A. Young,

Bishop Andrew said that he was requested to ask leave of absence for the delegates from the East Texas Conference after to-morrow. Leave was not granted.

Bishop Andrew: I have a few words to say, and I commence with the usual apology of speakers, that I do not make many speeches and have not taken up much time of this Conference, therefore I may be allowed to make a few remarks whether you heed them or not. I have been a little surprised at the course of business in this Conference. The requests of leave of absence is a foreshadowing of what will come to pass soon. You can can say that brethren shall not go, but if they deem the occasion urgent they will go any way, and don't you see that there is a great probability of your being stopped in the transaction of business for want of a quorem. Yet, on every matter that comes up, brethren feel themselves called upon to illuminate every little point, and after discussing a matter three or four hours, instead of finishing it, you lay it on the table for further consideration at another time. It seems to me that brethren seem to think they must find fault with everything that comes up. I think that last night I heard some of the most captious questions I ever heard in any deliberative body in my life. Every brother seemed bound to bring to some objection, or ask some question, when the fact is that a great many of these matters you have discussed so much, are in the Discipline already. There is business before you that must be accomplished or the church is injured, and yet every little matter brought up is debated just as though you had seven months before you for discussion. I appeal to you whether this is right. There is a great deal of wisdom and ability to illuminate subjects among you, but had you better not let some of your illumination go until another time, and let us go to the consideration of business that seriously demands your attention. I do not want to interfere with your arrangements, but do stick to business that demands your attention. Let all these minor matters go for the present, and when you get through all your important business, you can then take them up afterwards if you see fit. But I do pray you now to do that business which is imperatively demanded of you.

The reports from the Committee on the Support of the Ministry were taken up.

Rev. Dr. W. A. Smith asked leave to withdraw that part of the report in reference to the support of the Bishops. Leave granted.

Bishop Paine took the chair.

Rev. Dr. J. B. McFerrin presented the following plan for the support of the Bishops:

1. The allowance of the Bishops for salary and traveling expenses shall be estimated by the Committee on Episcopacy of the General Conference, and they shall divide the amount between the Annual Conferences according to the adults of the several Annual Conferences.

2. The Annual Conferences shall be allowed to adopt their own plan for raising said fund, to be called "The Bishops' Fund."

3. The fund so called shall be paid over to the Board of Stewards of the Annual Conferences. The chairman of the said Board of Stewards shall pay the amount collected to the Bishop presiding at the Annual Conference, and take his receipt, and forward the same, or copy thereof, to the General Book Agent.

4. At the annual meeting the Bishops shall report to the Book Agent the amounts paid to them by the several Annual Conferences, to be divided between all the Bishops in proportion to the amount estimated for the support of each Bishop.

5. Those Bishops who are on the "retired list," or who are unable to do full work, shall share in the collections, in proportion to the amounts estimated, with those who are actively engaged in the work as effective superintendents.

6. The division of the funds collected by the Annual Conferences in the interval of the Bishops' annual meeting, shall be divided between effective Bishops and those on the "retired list," by such methods as the College of Bishops may decide among themselves.

Rev. Dr. W. A. Smith presented a plan for the support of the Bishops, as a substitute for the one submitted by Dr McFerrin.

Rev. Dr. A. L. P. Green and Rev. Dr. J. C. Keener also presented plans to the Conference for the support of the Bishops. A general discussion followed, after which the plan presented by Dr. McFerrin was adopted, without amendment.

The remainder of the report is reference to the support of the ministry, was then taken up, considered item by item, and after much discussion, adopted, with a few minor amendments.

On vote the adoption of the sixth item of the report was reconsidered, and amended, by adding the following: "Provided, that, as it is an ordinance of God, that the preacher of the Gospel shall live of the Gospel, Stewards should feel themselves solemnly bound to afford competent support to those who are appointed to labor among them."

On further vote, the item as amended was adopted. The report as a whole was then adopted.

According to a previously adopted resolution, the Conference then adjourned, to meet again at seven o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The Conference met at 7 o'clock, pursuant to adjournment, and was called to order by Bishop Paine.

The minutes of the last session were read and approved.

Report No. 5, of the Committee on Changes of Economy, was taken up. The report recommends that the pastoral term be one year, with the power with the Bishops to return preachers as many terms as may be deemed desirable.

Rev. P. A. Peterson offered, as a substitute for the report, that "three years" be substituted for "two years," in the paragraph in reference to the pastoral term, as it now stands in the Discipline.

Rev. Dr. J. E. Edwards offered, as an amendment to the substitute, to insert after the words "three years successively," the following: "Unless upon the representation of the Quarterly Conference of the circuit or station, or from other satisfactory sources of information, it shall appear that for the good of the Church his services are demanded for a longer time than three years."

An animated discussion followed, participated in by Rev. A. H. Redford, Rev. P. M. Pinckard, Rev. Dr. J. E. Edwards, Rev. Dr. W. Smith, Rev. N. Head, Rev. A. R. Winfield, Rev. P. A. Peterson, Rev. J. B. Smith, Rev. Dr. E. H. Myers, Rev. J. B. Cottrell, Rev. Dr. J. A. Duncan, Rev. W. M. Rush, and Rev. J. Anderson, when Dr. E. E. Wiley moved the previous question, which on vote was agreed to.

Rev. John Poisal, reserve, was recognized as a delegate in the place of Rev. W. G. Eggleston.

Rev. Dr. J. E. Edwards withdrew his amendment.

On vote the substitute offered by Rev. Dr. P. A. Peterson was rejected.

Rev. Dr. A. L. P. Green spoke in reference to the report, after which Rev. H. A. C. Walker called for the previous question. On vote the call was sustained.

On motion, it was ordered that the vote be taken by ayes and noes. The following is the result of the vote: Ayes 72—Noes 59.

The report was declared adopted.

The Conference then adjourned with a benediction.

TWENTY-FIFTH DAY.

WEDNESDAY, May 2, 1866.

The Conference met at 9 o'clock A. M., pursuant to adjournment.

The opening devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. B. H. Spencer, of the Missouri Conference. None of the Bishops being present, Rev. J. E. Evans, of the Georgia Conference, presided.

Rev. Dr. E. W. Sehon, of the Louisville Conference: I wish to make a few personal remarks, and ask the indulgence of the General Conference that I may change a vote. In 1846 I originated a resolution in the General Conference asking an extension of the pastoral term to four years. In 1850, with others, I asked for the same extension. In the discussion here I have favored the longest term proposed for the extension of the pastorate, and when we could not get the extension desired, then I voted for the report as presented; I however voted with some doubt. I rise this morning honestly to state that doubt, feeling convinced that I voted wrong. I therefore wish to change my vote from "aye" to "no."

The leave to change was granted.

Rev. J. A. Cobb, of the Committee on Education, presented a minority report from that committee.

Rev. J. Hamilton moved that the report lie on the table for the present. Motion agreed to.

Bishop Paine took the chair.

The following additional votes were recorded on the question of extending the Pastoral Term: Ayes, S. Haggiss, S. H. Baldwin, and L. D. Huston; noes, W. Kennedy, Lovick Pierce, J. W. Glenn, James McLemban, N. H. Lee, Joseph Rand, and J. M. Steel. The total vote now stands—ayes 74, noes 67.

Bishop Paine: The Conference has propounded to the Bishops the question of what constitutes two-thirds of the General Conference, as referred to in the sixth restrictive rule, and give their decision as follows: Two-thirds of the Conference are two-thirds of a legal quorum or more present and voting on any question. This is the unanimous opinion of the Bishops, with, I believe, but one exception. The question has been asked, whether in getting the vote of two-thirds of the General Conference you are not required to get two-thirds of all that are legally elected. We answer, no. Such is not the rule in the Senate or House of Representatives of the United States, or any other deliberative or legislative body, so far as we are aware of, in the world. The law decides what shall constitute the bodies of parliament and of congress, and by parity of reasoning what constitutes your body. It is supposed that the language used in your constitution is used in its ordinary acceptation in such cases. Such has been the uniform practice of all deliberative and legislative bodies.

On the question of changing the name of the church to "Episcopal Methodist Church," Rev. Guilford Jones, Rev. M. S. Andrews, and Rev. J. N. McTyer changed their vote from "no" to "aye." On the same question, Rev. Dr. Thomas Madden recorded his vote "aye."

Bishop Paine announced, that so far as this body is concerned, the question is decided in favor of the change, and that it now goes to the annual conferences for final decision.

Rev. P. A. Peterson offered the following preamble and resolution, which was seconded by Rev. S. Register:

WHEREAS, The vote of the General Conference on the extension of the pastoral term is so nearly divided, and

Whereas, The change proposed is one fraught with vital consequences; therefore

Resolved 1st. That the action of the General Conference repealing the law of limitation, and leaving the term of the pastorate to the discretion of the appointing power shall not take effect unless approved by a majority of the members of the Annual Conference present, and voting on the subject.

Resolved 2d. That the Bishops are hereby requested to submit it to the Annual Conferences at their next session, and in the event of their concurrence aforesaid, the Book Editor is hereby instructed to make the necessary alterations in the Book of Discipline.

Rev. S. Register called for the previous question on the adoption of the preamble and resolutions, which call, on vote, was sustained.

On motion it was ordered that the vote be taken by ayes and noes. The following is the result of the vote: Ayes 50, noes 48.

The Chair declared the resolution adopted.

Bishop Paine: There is a subject which has harrassed me a good deal, and as I see the brethren present who are more immediately interested, I take the responsibility, personally, of making a suggestion. From the representations made here during the discussions upon the subject of boundaries of Conferences, it has seemed evident to me that you have placed the Western Virginia Conference in such a condition that it can scarcely live. It seems to me that it would be a better arrangement for that Conference to agree to unite with the several adjacent Conferences. In that event it would be more likely to be supplied with ministers and in every respect it would be a good arrangement. I throw out this suggestion that the brethren may think of it. It seems to me, from representation, that the Conference ought not to be left in its present condition, that it ought to be absorbed, and I understand the brethren prefer that to being cut off at this end and that end, and left with the territory they have now.

On motion, the report of the Special Committee on Lay-representation was taken up.

The substitutes offered for the report by Rev. Dr. J. C. Keener and Rev. W. H. D. Wilson were read.

The original report provides for four lay representatives in each Annual Conference, one of whom may be a local preacher, from each Presiding Elder's district, to be chosen annually, and who are to take part in the business of the conference, except that referring to ministerial character and relations; and in the General Conference lay representatives equal in number to the clerical representatives.

The substitute offered by Rev. Dr. Keener refers the whole subject of lay representation to the annual conferences, to be decided by them under certain restrictions.

The substitute offered by Rev. W. H. D. Wilson provides for the introduction of lay representation into the Annual and General conferences without restriction upon their powers.

Rev. J. E. Evans, of the Georgia Conference: I think the Conference is prepared to act directly upon the original report. The subject has been committed, and recommitted, and I want to test the sense of the Conference at once, as to whether they prefer to act upon the substitutes or upon the original report. Therefore, I move to lay the substitutes on the table to get at the original report.

On vote, the motion was sustained.

Rev. J. E. Evans moved that the original report be taken up item by item. Agreed to.

The first item, in relation to the admission of lay representatives into the annual conferences, was taken up.

Rev. W. H. D. Wilson said he was in favor of laymen being present to help in our annual and general conferences, our pious and intelligent laymen, provided this can be done in such a way as will not be more harm than good. We have tried it in our Class-meetings, quarterly conferences, and other meetings and it had worked well. But he was opposed to it if it is introduced in such a way as, in his judgment, it will do more harm than good; and he made this explanation as he was about to say that he opposed with great deference that report on this ground. While it calls for the help of the laymen, it is in such a way as to do harm and not good to the Church. It proposes to do something more in the way of bringing lay help into the Annual Conferences than we now have. He submitted to the brethren of the General Conference that if they would examine the Discipline, that they are already entitled to all the powers which this report gives. You have not advanced a step except to increase the number of laymen that come into the Annual Conference, and you have invited them there under this restriction which says that although your intelligent laymen may be unanimous on any question, the ministers, who have the exclusive control of certain questions, can rise up in the Annual Conference and vote down every recommendation that the laymen bring in. You have said that the ministry should control all these spiritual questions; and while you slight the laymen, you will have a large majority of the ministers who can deliberate upon temporal questions, and can control in these matters even all that the laymen may do. He objected to it further, that it is legislation which invites a conflict between the laity and the ministry. It takes laymen into the Annual Conferences discriminately. The very man that comes into the Annual Conference as a member, is a bona fide member of that body, and stands side by side with every other member. But this plan makes a discrimination, which was an additional ground for his opposition to it.

Rev. W. W. Bennett, of the Virginia Conference, said the plan did not meet with his approval, because it does not give to the laity what he would give them himself if he could settle the whole question by his own vote. If he invited a gentlemen into his house, he ought to treat him politely. This report prohibits your laymen from doing, in regard to the ministers that compose Annual Conferences precisely what they are doing in the lower bodies of the Church, and he would like to have the restrictive part stricken out. The laymen participate in very important actions in regard to ministerial character and relation. The fact that he and others are traveling preachers, is no accidental thing; and is not an essential to our character according to the laws of our church. You have deacons and elders in the local ministry that have all the characteristics of a minister of Christ that we have, and the laymen examine them upon their call to preach; they license them to preach; and recommend them to the annual conferences for deacons' and elders' orders. His friend comes up to preach, as an illustration. Four intelligent laymen recommend him as a local preacher, and he is licensed to preach for four years. He then, perhaps, applies to go into the traveling ministry, and he is recommended by the same laymen, and is received. After an appropriate period he comes up for elders' orders, and the same four laymen that had recommended him before are representatives in that Conference, and when the proposition is made to elect him to elder's orders, the laymen are stopped there. For, forsooth, when he is to be carried up to elder's orders from the accidental fact that he is a traveling and not a local preacher, the laymen cannot say a word or raise a hand to vote. He, therefore, wished to amend by striking out all the exceptions.

Rev. E. H. Myers said that he was unwilling to send these laymen to conference to do nothing. He would suppose himself a layman and representative in an annual conference, and a secretary of the quarterly conference from which he came. The question comes up, who are admitted on trial? There is a secretary's certificate to hand up, and he is called upon to certify to it, but as a member of that conference he could not vote on the candidate's admission. Here is a question on which he could do everything that settles it excepting to vote on it. He could bring persons to the very door of the annual conference, yet he was debarred the privilege of voting with respect to their cases. In regard to the trial of ministers, he was willing to make a compromise; but if you are going to put laymen into the annual conferences at all, give them something to do. This plan has worked well and efficiently in other churches, and let us bring in a new order and system of things that will make a church that will stand forever.

[Report to be concluded next week.]

TO ADVERTISERS.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has always been well known in this community as the very best advertising medium by which the business men of the city could bring their merchandise, trades, professions, and the like, before country readers in the States just named. This is easily understood when it is remembered that the four hundred preachers who are scattered throughout these States, in the Rio Grande, East Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Montgomery and Mobile Methodist Conferences, are all, more or less, active agents for the paper; and when it is also remembered that our paper circulates among a large class of people who seldom see any other New Orleans paper.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

French or Spanish, twelve to twenty weeks—but lessons are not limited in any branch. All former students are invited to review their studies free of charge.

N. B.—We will qualify twenty-five young gentlemen as SCIENTIFIC TEACHERS OF PENMANSHIP and BOOKKEEPING during the spring and summer, so as to supply the great want of the country for such teachers.

The South must now educate her sons practically if she would develop her vast resources of wealth, which are much more numerous than those of Brazil. We have ample arrangements for 500 students during the current year. Parents can make liberal conditions for their sons if they apply soon. Those from the country can board, with good families, speaking English, French, Spanish or German, at $25 to $35 per month.

A business education that enables one to earn $2000 to $3000 annually is the best fortune parents can give their sons. As the College has been in successful operation for more than a quarter of a century, and the practical plan here pursued received the unanimous commendations of the press and business community, and as several thousands of its former students are now in business in this city and over the country, it is useless to go into an extended explanation of the plan or merits of the institution. So far as known, not one of the many thousands of former students is now out of employment; and so far as is known, not one in a thousand of those who have been sent for years to Europe or the North is qualified on returning home to enter a business house, although thousands of dollars have been expended on his education. A word to the wise is sufficient.

The city is now healthy. Persons from 12 to 60 years of age attend such branches as they may wish. By having a special Professor for each branch, three-fourths of the student's time is saved. Those who have entirely neglected their education for the past years can here be prepared for any situation in business, whether as bookkeeper, merchant or clerk, in from 3 to 6 months.

Students intended for this College should bring this circular or special directions, as every winter there are temporary establishments opened. Young students should put their funds in the hands of their merchants, or the President of the College.

N. B.—Crippled soldiers will have a liberal deduction made. Clergymen's sons pay half price only. Citizens and strangers are invited to call. College office, Room No. 7.

Committee Reports.

The Committee appointed to review the section in the Discipline on the Support of the Ministry, having carefully considered the subject, reach the conclusion that everything fixing a definite salary to be paid to the preacher or other claimants on the funds of an Annual Conference should be stricken from the Discipline, and that an entirely different system be adopted—one which shall allow the people whom we serve, and who are to raise the money for our support, to participate more directly in fixing the amount they are to pay. It is not the least among the reasons for so great a change in our economical policy, that such an arrangement will more certainly insure the payment of the salary agreed on, whilst it is equally clear that no hazard will be incurred by any claimant as it relates to the amount to be paid. We therefore recommend that everything in the sixth section, Part 2 of our Discipline, be stricken out, and the following inserted, viz:

I. All persons who, by the rules and usages of our church, are claimants on the funds of the church, shall (as far as practicable) have their claims estimated by the persons who are to pay them, or by an agent authorized to act for them. Hence:

II. The salary and traveling expenses of preachers, or others appointed in their place on circuits, (always meaning by circuits either circuits, stations, missions, or other work assigned to a preacher or a Bishop,) shall be estimated by their respective Boards of Stewards.

III. The salary and traveling expenses of a Presiding Elder shall be estimated by the District Stewards' Meeting.

IV. Each Annual Conference shall have a Joint Board of Finance, appointed by the President of the Conference, (if not otherwise ordered by the Conference,) at the close of its annual session, (to hold their office until the close of the next ensuing Annual Conference session,) and shall consist of one clerical and one lay member of the Conference for each Presiding Elder's District. They shall elect their own chairman and secretary, and the Board shall fill all vacancies that may occur in the body: Provided they do so by keeping up an equal number of clerical and lay members. It shall be the duty of the Joint Board—

(1.) To receive all moneys collected as Conference collections or otherwise, and distribute the same to the superannuated preachers, and the widows and orphan children of deceased elders according to their best judgment of their several necessities.

They shall estimate the amount that will probably be necessary to meet the claims of the superannuated preachers and the widows and orphan children of deceased elders, and apportion the same to the different Presiding Elders Districts for collection the ensuing year.

(2.) All matters relating to the financial interests of the Conference shall be referred to this Board, and be carefully considered and reported upon.

(3.) They shall make a full report of all proceedings to the Conference, who shall either approve, recommit, or amend their report.

(4.) The members of this Board, and especially the Chairman thereof, shall carefully consider the financial interests during the year, and shall particularly endeavour to collect such authentic information in regard to the pecuniary circumstances of the usual claimants on the Conference funds as shall facilitate the business of the Board at its annual meeting.

V. All officers appointed by the General Conference, and not otherwise provided for by law, shall have their salaries fixed by the Joint Board of Finance of the Conferences of which they are members, or within the bounds of which the work as signed them by the General Conference lies; and be paid from the proceeds of their office, or by such other means as the Conference may devise.

VI. The District Stewards' meeting shall apportion the salary allowed a Presiding Elder, together with the amount published for collection by the Joint Board of Finance, among the different circuits of his district. The Circuit Stewards shall add the amount thus assigned to their circuits (keeping separate accounts however), to the amount agreed on by them to be raised for their preacher; and apportion the whole among the different congregations of the church composing the circuit, and report their action as soon as practicable to the Quarterly Conference, and if their assessment and apportionment are approved by the Conference, they shall then report to each church meeting the whole amount to be raised by the Circuit, and that part of it which they are expected to pay. The Church Meeting shall adopt its own method of raising this money.

VII. The Recording Steward of each Circuit shall report to the Joint Board of Finance of the Conference a full account of the acts of the Board of Stewards the preceding year. The Joint Board shall decide all issues that may exist between the Stewards and the Presiding Elder or any of his preachers, in relation to salaries, and their decision shall be final; but in no case shall they allow any preacher to have a claim on the Church he has served, after his pastoral connection with them has ceased.

VIII. Each Annual Conference shall adopt its own method of raising money to pay those who, by the rules and usage of the Church, have claims upon it; provided it does not interfere with the rights guaranteed to the Church Meetings, to adopt their own methods of raising money to pay their liabilities.

OF THE SUPPORT OF BISHOPS.

I Each Bishop assigned to an Episcopal District shall be supported by the District which he serves, and such as may not be assigned to any regular work, shall be supported by the Conferences composing the Episcopal Districts collectively, each Episcopal District bearing a pro rata proportion of the total amount of these expenses. The General Conference shall appoint two Laymen within the bounds of each Annual Conference, who shall be called General Conference Stewards.

II Such of these Stewards as reside within the limits of an Episcopal District, shall constitute a Board of Stewards for that District.

III When announcement is made of the Conferences composing a District, with the name of the Bishop assigned to such District for the year, it shall be the duty of the Stewards of each Episcopal District:

(1.) To hold a meeting as soon as practicable, and taking into consideration the circumstances of the Bishop, i.e., the size and condition of his family, and the general cost of living, they shall proceed to estimate a reasonable salary for the comfortable support of himself and family. They shall also make an appropriation for his traveling expenses the ensuing year, which amount shall be subject to be corrected by the bill of expenses actually incurred, presented at some future meeting.

(2.) The General Conference Stewards shall meet annually, and always at an early day after the appointments for the Episcopal districts are announced.

IV. If there be any of the Bishops who are not assigned to regular work, but for whose support provision is to be made, it shall be done in the following way, viz:

(1.) Each Episcopal District Stewards' meeting at the same time that they estimate the salary of the Bishop appointed to their district, shall estimate a reasonable salary and bill of traveling expenses for those who may have retired from the regular work. If they have nothing better to guide them in fixing his salary, they shall assume that the salary of the retired Bishop is the same as the salary they have fixed for the Bishop appointed to their District; and they shall assess for their District the payment of an equal part of his salary and bill of traveling expenses with the other Episcopal Districts.

(2.) They shall then add the several amounts together, as the total amount to be raised by their District to pay the salary and traveling expenses of the Bishops, and proceed to apportion this amount to the Annual Conferences composing their District, taking the number of traveling preachers in their District, and the supposed ability of the people, as the basis of their assessment of the sum to be paid by each Conference, and report the same to the ensuing session of the Conferences composing their District—each Conference being left to adopt its own method of raising this money.

All which is respectfully submitted.

WM. A. SMITH, Chairman.

WHEREAS, Many of the Conferences will not meet in time to adopt a plan of their own, for raising money to support the Bishops, as proposed in our former report, the following is submitted as a proper rule to govern, until such time as the Conferences shall meet and adopt their own plan, viz:

Resolved 1st. That until the Annual Conferences shall meet and adopt their own plans of raising money to pay the salaries and traveling expenses of the Bishops, assessed by the several meetings of General Conference Stewards, we recommend that each circuit and station throughout the Church, shall collect an amount equal to two per cent on the gross amount allowed their preacher or preachers as salary and traveling expenses, and send the same to their Annual Conferences; and if it be not sufficient to pay the bill assessed for the support of the Bishops, the deficiency shall be paid by the Joint Board of Finance, out of any funds in their hands, and if the amount collected be more than enough to pay those bills, the surplus shall be distributed by the Joint Board as a part of the common fund for distribution.

Resolved 2d. That this Resolution be forthwith published in all our papers, and that our preachers everywhere, are hereby requested to call the attention of circuit stewards to the subject, and to co-operate with them in raising the money.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

WM. A. SMITH, Chairman.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION.

The Committee on Education have had the subject, which was referred to them, under careful consideration, in the various aspects in which they felt themselves required to view it. Convinced of its unquestionable claims upon the attention of the Church, at all times, but especially in the present age, and at the present moment, they have addressed themselves to their inquiries with all the fidelity they could command, and to all the sources of information accessible to them; and the conclusions to which they have arrived, they herewith submit for the approval and adoption of the General Conference.

They deem it utterly needless to urge upon this enlightened body, either the importance or the responsibilities of an enterprise acknowledged to be so inseparably connected with the interests of Christianity, as the moral and intellectual cultivation of the rising generation within the range of our influence as a Christian denomination. You are fully alive, we doubt not, to the vital character of this great question. There is reason, however, to apprehend that the value of it, as an instrument of religion, and as an engine of ecclesiastical power and progress, is not adequately appreciated by the mass of our people. It behooves us, therefore, in the capacity in which we are now assembled, to give to them no indistinct utterance of our convictions, and to invoke them to fulfill the errand of the Church, in this department of her usefulness. For, whatever principles we adopt, or whatever schemes we project, are dependent for complete success upon the co-operation, not of a few, but upon the collective resources of our entire membership. If once they could be fully enlisted, our achievements in this respect would correspond with the wants of the times, and Methodism in our hands would be invested with a subsidiary force, which we all feel, it sadly needs. Those resources, if developed, will be equal to all the necessities of the occasion. Let us, therefore, solemnly avow, as the judgment of the General Conference, that an elevated and a well directed system of literary culture, under the blessing of God, is second only to the direct agencies of the Gospel, in the improvement of our race; that, associated with, and under the auspices of the Gospel, it is the most potent means for advancing the Kingdom of Christ; and that a Church which neglects, or feebly and litfully uses its mighty appliances, is suicidal of itself. The Church must keep pace with the intellectual movement of society; nay, she must lead the van, or, by an inexorable law, the momentum of accelerated current will, in coming years, sweep from her altar myriads of worshippers. It is impossible to exaggerate the magnitude of this subject, particularly in the relations in which, in the providence of God, we now stand to it. Emerging with conscious life and with quickened energies, from the wreck and the ruins of our fortunes; about to commence a new era in our history, and to shape our destinies for an indefinite future, all our plans should be dictated by a wide and comprehensive survey of every legitimate element of growth within our reach. Never before were we placed upon a platform upon which were collected so prophetically the materials with which to adjust the Church for posterity, and to produce a salutary impression upon it. If they be not as abundant as we might desire, the intensity of their influence compensates for their scarcity. To be recreant now, is to forfeit our hold upon the world of mind, and to imperil the gathered treasures of truth and experience committed to our trust.

But there is a peculiar obligation devolved upon us to furnish our quota of [illegible] to the age in which we live. A great struggle for the integrity of the faith is impending in this country. Acute and cultivated minds, endowed with the accomplishments and enthused by the pursuit of high literary attainments, are [illegible] the suspicions of doubt upon the very foundations of revealed religion, and the subtlety of the poison is diffusing itself by scientific lectures, and by the productions of the press, into the popular mind. Free as the Southern people have hitherto been from the infection, we cannot hope to avoid it much longer. These issues between truth and error are inevitable. And as error has taken the field in the guise of science and literature, the Church must fortify herself with weapons drawn from the same armory. She must supply herself with all the advantages of a thorough knowledge of the means of defence, and protect her youth from the contagion of indigenous and imported skepticism. This momentous reason for activity in the support of literary institutions, under the patronage of the Church, must be apparent to every intelligent observer of the signs of the times. And, not only the progress of learning and the credit of the Church, but the emergencies of this severe conflict, demand the highest professional ability in our faculties, and the best attainable scholarship in our pupils.

The investigations of the committee have disclosed, on a large scale, one of the most painful events of the recent war. The cause of education amongst us, has suffered a terrible calamity. The past four years have been almost an entire blank in the annals of our educational efforts. Previously to that period, as our statistics show, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, had multiplied her schools and colleges, for both sexes, with commendable zeal, over the vast extent of her territory, from the Pacific to the Atlantic Oceans, and from her Northern boundary to the Gulf of Mexico; in whose halls our youth were regularly receiving the benefits of scholastic training, entering and returning in brilliant succession. The late social convulsions interrupted and arrested the march of letters amongst us, and threw back their advancement a whole generation. The loss of four years in the formative period of life, has created an irreparable chasm in the improvement of the youth of the Southern States. Professors, teachers, students, were withdrawn from the seats of learning; their halls were vacated; text-books and apparatus were abandoned, endowments lost, and patronage impoverished. Only here or there, a few maintained a precarious existence. Since the termination of the unnecessary struggle of the South, many of these institutions have resumed their operations, but with diminished facilities, and are endeavoring, as fast as possible, to indemnify their past misfortunes. It is gratifying to observe the vitality which they display, and the vigor with which they are laboring to regain their former prosperity; and the committee are firmly persuaded, that under the fostering care of the church, these blessed fountains of knowledge will again send forth their salutary streams, to refresh and to beautify the desert produced by the catastrophe of war. It will require, however, our united strength to restore them to their previous efficiency. But we must meet the emergency with an unfaltering purpose, and rise with determined might to the difficult, yet hopeful task which lies before us.

In view of this dismal dilapidation, and also of what now appears to have been an unfortunate error, the committee believe that it is the true policy of the General Conference to discourage the unnecessary multiplication of institutions of learning for the future, and to insist upon ample support—patronage of such as we already have; persuaded, that the cause of sound learning can be better secured by increasing the number of students at given centres, and by more thoroughly endowing schools of every grade. What we have lost by diffusion, and what we cannot hope to achieve, under present disabilities, by division, we should endeavor to gain by concentration. By this economical process we will gradually recover our ground, consolidate our scattered capabilities, and rebuild the superstructure of our greatness in the land.

The subject of education, in a specific form, was brought to the notice of the committee, by that portion of the Episcopal address which was referred to them, and which is expressed in the following words:

"We specially bring to your attention, the importance of an Institute for the proper training of young preachers. That we should make some proper arrangements for the more thorough training of our young men before they are received into the Conferences and sent forth to minister in the Church of Christ, appears to us to be so obvious as to need no argument to prove it. It behooves us to take this matter into serious and immediate consideration, and secure to the church the invaluable advantages which the provisions we suggest can only supply."

This recommendation, emanating from that honored body of men whose high position and jealous concern for the interests of the Church always entitle their opinions to respect and confidence, was hailed by the committee with delight. It is as creditable to them as it is the announcement of a great truth. It is the oracular exponent of the mind of the church. It expresses, in terms equally concise and perspicuous, the actual necessity and the almost universal sentiment of Southern Methodists, and the debate relieves the committee from the labor of extended argumentations on the subject. To this point, the convictions of preachers and people, with various alternations and conflicts of opinion, have been tending for years. The plausibilities and the prejudices that opposed it, have finally yielded to the stern logic of incontestible evidence, and the victory has been won by the historic development of coherent causes. The time has therefore fully come when decided action in this direction is not only possible and practicable but positively imperative. The course of events, in other words, the order of Divine Providence, has made the issue and we cannot evade it without recoil and retrogression. It is perfectly manifest, that some response to this demand, on the part of the General Conference, is required by an authority which it would be perilous to display. The spectacle constantly presenting itself to us, is the disparity between the average intellectual acquirements of our young ministers and the people who they are sent to serve; a class of things produced by the high qualifications of young men by the larger proportion of the youth of the country, and those who ready offer themselves, for admission in the ministry. The existence of this fact is conceded, and no dogmatic reasons can reconcile the contradictory to which we refer, or answer the questions which it raises. A concomitance of intellectual superiority in the people over the ministry will engender a feeling of dissatisfaction and disgust, which cannot fail to dissolve those invisible bonds which settle the relations of ministers and congregations in despite of all conventional regulation.

In all these views, there is no presumption of the fundamental doctrine of Divine call to the ministry and a spiritual preparation for it. We subordinate every conceivable plan of ministerial improvement to this principle. It is on this that we are to engraft all our methods. If we could not do it, it would be a thousand times better to dispense with them altogether, than to invert the constitution of the Christian ministry as established by Jesus Christ. But both are perfectly harmonious, and it is their due proportion which is demanded. Shall we fulfill this just requisition, or perpetuate the paradox of attempting to obey the will of God by violating the designs of his providence? The reply admits of no equivocation.

Again, it is not proposed to infract, by any such provisions, our rules of reception into our Conferences. It is not proposed to make a certain course of theological education in a Biblical Institute, indispensable to admission into the ministry. It is designed to furnish sufficient means of instruction to all candidates, who may voluntarily use them, while, at the same time, we erect some common standard of excellence to which all must come whom we invest with ministerial functions. The committee are of opinion that this disciplinary standard should be so elevated that none shall be admitted into the ministry who do not possess well defined ideas of the doctrines and polity of the church, a ready and accurate use of their vernacular language, and a thorough knowledge of all those ordinary branches of education which bear directly upon their pulpit performances. Those who may not enjoy the benefits conferred by a Biblical Institute should be peremptorily required to reach this common standard before their admission; while those who do enjoy them are at liberty to go beyond it, and thus leave the operation of the new arrangement the tide of enlightened influence flowing into the church.

In consistency with these modifications, the course of study prescribed for those who have been admitted into the ministry should be proportionately advanced and rigid each successive year. It should, in the judgment of the Committee, be revised and adjusted to the proposed plan, and none should be graduated to orders in the Church, who shall not have been recommended by the examining Committees.

The Committee unanimously concur with the Bishops in their address, that there should be no institute for the training of young preachers, possessing in itself all the facilities for a ministerial education. They would rejoice to see the day when this ideal could be realized. But they regard such an enterprise impracticable in the present condition of the country, and the attempt to execute it as involving a delay which they are not willing to risk. We should inaugurate some plan for immediate operation, which will substitute, as far as possible, a perfected system; an approximation to which, they believe to be attainable, without the erection of new buildings, and without exhausting drafts upon our people. Let there be, therefore, associated with our Colleges, not Biblical chairs, but Biblical schools, properly so called, fully organized, comprising instruction in the original languages of the Scriptures, in ecclesiastical history, in Bible criticism and hermeneutics, in dogmatic and practical theology, and in homiletics and pastoral duties. Young men passing through a part or the whole of a college curriculum, would thus have direct access to these schools, and the faculties and libraries of our college would, in a great degree, subserve the present wants of the Church. Let our people be exhorted to sustain these schools, so as to enable indigent young men to pursue their studies in them, and let the officers of these schools be required to adopt measures to prevent the intrusion of improper persons into them. By these means the Church will be able, forthwith, to commence the good work, lay the foundation of a maturer system, should it be desired, and carry the fruits of the experiment into complete institutions hereafter to be established.

On the whole subject of education, both literary and biblical, the Committee offer the following resolutions:

1. That we regard education, in general, as an indispensable part of our vocation as a Church.

2. That in order more effectually to promote it, in the present financial prostration of the country, within our bounds, it is the wisest policy to sustain existing institutions of learning amongst us, and not to establish new ones, unless in cases of the most obvious propriety.

3. That more than ever the highest grade of instruction should be secured, combined with the constant inculcation of evangelical religion.

4. That the period has fully arrived when it is the duty of the Church to provide specific means for the education of young preachers.

5. That in accordance with the suggestions of the Bishops, in their address to the General Conference, we recommend the establishment of an Institute for that purpose.

6. That it is at this time most expedient that Biblical Schools be established in connection with the Colleges which are under the control of the Annual Conferences.

7. That the following clause be added to Ans. 2nd., Ques. 1st, Sec. 8th., Chap. 2nd., Page 71, of the Discipline, commencing after the word "mission," Nor shall a vote be taken upon the admission of any candidate who shall not have passed an approved examination upon the course of study prescribed by the Bishops, before a Committee appointed by the Conference for that purpose.

8. That answer 24, question 24, chapter 2d, on page 74 of the Discipline, shall read as follows: "Before any preacher shall be admitted into full connection, or ordained deacon or elder, he shall have passed an approved examination upon the course of study prescribed by the Bishops for candidates for the ministry. The examining committees shall be appointed by the several Annual Conferences, and shall hold their office for four years; and in no case shall a vote be taken to elect any one to deacon's or elder's orders until he shall have been recommended by the examining committee."

9. That we recommend to the Bishops the following course of study, to be prescribed by them for admission on trial into the conferences, and for graduation for ordination in our church:

Respectfully submitted.

The African M. E. Church and the General Conference.

Baltimore, Md., March 21st, 1866

CHRISTIAN BRETHREN—In the glorious name of the Lord Jesus, we send you these presents, greeting:

The business which we have now with you is to say:

First, That during the civil war, and since that event, thousands of persons, formerly members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, have become members of the African Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States of America, and still desire to remain in our connection.

Second, That in many of the towns and cities of the South are houses of worship which were built—as we are informed—in some cases, wholly, by the means of the colored people, and for their special use; in others, partly, by the aid of the white members of the M. E. Church South, partly by the aid of white friends of said Church, and partly by the means of the colored members of said Church, but still, for the special use of said colored persons. But, be this true or not,

Third, We earnestly desire to know if arrangements can be made by which the said properties can be peaceably and permanently transferred to the authorities of the African M. E. Church, of the U. S. A., for the use of the persons named. We desire such arrangements for the following reasons:

a. We believe that Divine Providence has cast our lots with yours in the Southern portion of the United States—that we are to be neighbors, living side by side with you under the same State laws and under the same National laws.

b. That, therefore, it is meet and right that we seek peace, and cultivate it by all honorable means, viz., such as are dictated by Christian charity and Christian wisdom.

c. Because we believe that we are providentially called to labor in the same region of country for the salvation of all men, but especially for the enlightenment and Christianization of the needy freedmen, in order that they may become good citizens of this Republic, and be prepared for the citizenship of Heaven.

d. Because we believe an arrangement of this kind would prevent all contentions in the community, and litigations in the Civil Courts.

To bring about, and secure this oneness of spirit, this bond of peace, we are willing to accede to any proposition on your part, which will not fetter or jeopardize our ecclesiastical freedom, nor conflict with the principles of right, equality and truth.

To represent us in your Reverend Assembly, we have appointed three of our ministers, viz: Rev. John Turner, Rev. Charles Burch, and Rev. Henry M. Turner.

That wisdom from on high may direct your deliberations; that love and unity may characterize all of your doings, is the fervent prayer of your fellow-laborers in the great vineyard of our common Lord and Master.

ALEXANDER W. WAYMAN,
JAMES P. CAMPBELL,

A BRIEF COMMUNICATION OF THE DELEGATES OF THE AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES TO THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH.

Rt. Rev. Bishops, Fathers in God, Rev. Brethren, Clergymen of said Church: We, a delegation of three ministers of the African Methodist Church, in the United States of America, were appointed by the Bishops of our Church, assembled for that purpose in the city of Baltimore, Md., on the 21st day of March, 1866, to communicate with your sacred body in reference to our race residing in the South, who hold their religious connections with your Church.

In presenting our propositions to you, we can but acknowledge before doing so, our very sincere and grateful thanks for the privilege of appearing before the Bishops and Ministers of the Lord Jesus, to confer with them on matters pertaining to His Church and Kingdom.

We ask His blessing, most devoutly, upon us all, while engaged in this interview, for we feel that God has a purpose in it. We shall endeavor to present our communications in the spirit of humility and Christian meekness.

I. The History and Progress of our Church—In 1787, 79 years ago, the first move was made by the colored people of Philadelphia, Penn., to establish an independent church, separate from the M. E. Church. In 1816 the African Methodist Episcopal Church, in the United States of America, was fully and permanently organized, with Richard Allen as its first Bishop, who had been a slave of Benjamin Chew, by whom he, with his parents and three other children, was sold to Mr Stokely, in the State of Delaware, near Dover, the Capital town of that State. The number of Bishops of our Church has been eight—three dead, five living. They were all slaves except one.

The traveling preachers, at this time, number about 500; local preachers, about 1500; membership about 80,000. Our Churches are located in every State of the United States of America. The value of our Church property, real and material, is $1,000,000.

II. Educational Facilities—Day schools and Sabbath Schools are organized in every Episcopal District throughout the Union.

The number of scholars in both classes of schools, under our jurisdiction, is about fifty or sixty thousand. The teachers are the best educated persons of our people; some thirty of them being regular graduates of some college institution, in this and other countries.

We have one regularly constituted college—the Wilberforce University—located sixty-two miles north of the city of Cincinnati, in the State of Ohio. We also have in contemplation the establishment of a theological seminary at no distant period, as provided for by the Annual Conference, holden in this city last September. Our church organ is the Christian Recorder, published weekly in the city of Philadelphia, Penn., a paper which has been published for thirty five years.

Our book concern is located in the city of Philadelphia, Penn., and publishes our Disciplines and other religious books and periodicals. All of this work—the teachers of our schools and college—the printing of the paper and the publication of our books, is done by our own people.

III. The Education of our Ministers and Bishops—One of the Bishops is a collegiate and a doctor of divinity, made by the faculty of the Wilberforce University. Two are good and respectable English scholars, and the Senior Bishop, Rt. Rev. William Paul Quinn, who labored more than they all, in laying out the circuits, from Long Island to Missouri, establishing Conferences, forming churches, etc., is or has been the strongest man physically and mentally in our church, and is as fully educated. Among the ministers, there are six regular graduates, and one doctor of divinity, made by the Ackleburg University in Germany. One is a linguist, being familiarly acquainted with eight languages, ancient and modern.

The younger ministers are men of close reading habits—and many of them are collegiates.

IV. Where the most of our Church Members are Located—From the beginning of our existence as a church, about seven eighths of the membership have lived south of Mason and Dixon's line, and the same proportion of the ministers. Four of the bishops now living, and the three who are dead, were born south of that line. So that, we are at home in the South, on our own native soil, where our fathers and mothers have lived and died.

It is therefore natural that our church should desire to gather her children in the South, "as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings." And they being Methodists, Episcopal, we are proud to say that in the event of their coming into our church—they remain Methodist Episcopal—for the African Methodist Episcopal Church is the only colored Methodist Episcopal Church in this country; all the other colored denominations have the congregational form of government. We are known and acknowledged as regular Episcopalians by all the evangelical denominations in America.

V. Annual Conferences and Districts—Our Annual Conferences which embrace the territory South, are the following:

1. The Baltimore Annual Conference, embraces Maryland, District of Columbia, and East Virginia.

2. The Missouri Conference—West Kentucky, Missouri, West Tennessee and Kansas.

3. Louisiana Conference—includes Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Alabama, Texas and Florida.

4. The South Carolina Conference, includes North and South Carolina, and Georgia.

This last Conference, has been organized since the sitting of our last General Conference, which accounts for its not appearing in our new discipline.

THE OBJECT OF OUR MISSION.

The object of our Mission to this General Conference is, to respectfully and fraternally solicit your sacred body, if it may please you to make provision, by law or resolution for the transfer of any and all those colored congregations, and their church property who may, at any time, in the future, voluntarily desire to connect themselves with the African Methodist Episcopal Church, in the United States of America; and who, at present hold their connection with the M. E. Church South.

And also, for the transfer to colored trustees, of the deeds of those congregations which have already united with the A. M. E. Church—but have not yet obtained titled deeds for their property. A number of congregations in various localities in the South have united with said A. M. E. Church, and in every instance have left their church property behind them. The white trustees who hold their deeds, as it is very prudent in them, not to transfer the deeds to colored trustees, till this General Conference shall authorize them to do so.

Two things are natural to the colored Christians belonging to the Church, South:

1. It is very natural that they, having been converted to the faith of the gospel and brought into the Christian Church, by the ministry and agency of the preachers and people south, nurtured up in the knowledge of Christ and his word; their property bought, and secured to them by the same agency referred to, should have, many of them, a strange desire to remain in connection with the Church, South.

2. It is also equally natural that they, having a knowledge of the existence of a colored denomination, with its colored Bishops, Preachers, Conferences, annual and general, schools, colleges, a book concern, and religious papers, edited and published by colored men, books made and printed, and possessing intelligence enough to conduct a great church government fifty years and more, should desire to connect themselves with such a body of their own race.

3. But negatively.—It is not natural that, the colored christians south, in view of the circumstances referred to above, should desire to unite themselves with the church, south, the main body of which is in the northern states, while they themselves were born and raised in the south, and especially so, when the north church seeks them only, to increase their own numbers and to add to their financial interests. This seems unnatural.

We would say in conclusion that, as our own laborers are, in the south, will also on the same territory, in the same towns and cities, we pray that we may not "fall out by the way," but cultivate at all times and in all places, that fraternal feeling which will bring glory to God and good to His church and His people. Then the church in this section of the country shall bloom as the rose, and the hill tops and the valleys shall resound with the praises of our common Lord and Master.

All of which is most humbly submitted

Church, South, as to its distinctive organization.

4. Resolved, That it is vitally important that we unite in an unbroken phalanx to oppose, by all christian and pendent means, the aggressions now being made upon us both by the avowed agents of the M. E. Church, North.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE

General Conference OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH

Convened in New Orleans, April 4, 1866.

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY.

TUESDAY, May 1, 1866.

[Concluded from last week.]

Rev. Dr. J. C. Keener said, we have come to consider the most important subject that we can possibly be entertained by the church, and yet we come to consider it under a rule that limits a speaker to five minutes. When this subject was first introduced, unlike any other policy that he had ever seen pursued before in reference to so important a matter, the previous question was at once called for, and from that time until now, there has been no opportunity to give even an opinion in regard to it. And yet this is a question that has agitated the Church to its foundation. This question alone has divided the Methodist Church in Great Britain four times, and in this country once, and yet we propose to settle it here by a short discussion of five minutes each, without, as he conceived, adequate deliberation. The Committee worked on it after a sort. They have brought in a report which does not touch the main difficulties of the question. Every body has admitted that it is desirable to get the laity into the church councils, but the questions have been how to get them in, how to guard the matter properly, and how to get the right sort of men in? We are not disposed to throw the whole matter open, and have anybody elected by the accidents of the hour. The most conservative men in this body will say they are in favor of it, if you will tell them how it can be done, yet in this report that question is not touched at all. It is not in the report how they are to come in, and that is the great question to be argued here, and, he conceived, embraced nearly the whole subject. This report provides that a certain number of laymen should come into the annual conferences, and when they are in there, no matter how many of them are present, when it comes to elect delegates to the General Conference, these laymen that are present shall elect an equal number with the ministers present. There may be but ten laymen present, and a hundred ministers in the Annual Conference, and yet these ten laymen have as much voice in this matter as the whole body of ministers. There has been a characteristic effort to conform the government of the church to the government of the country. There are men who have been working for years to accomplish this object, men who formerly wielded a power in the church by this sort of legislation, are endeavoring to entirely revolutionize the church. This method of trying to conform our legislation to the legislation of the country proceeds upon an unphilosophical principle. The people of the country existed before those that they put to rule over them; the existence of the church has proceeded always from the minister. The Apostle Paul says you have ten thousand instructors in Christ, but not many fathers. The Holy Spirit has declared the order of precedence, and how many ministers have started out without a congregation, and by their labors formed a church. There is a radical difference between the two, and it is by losing sight of that difference that the whole church has been agitated for the last twenty years. He had a proposition to submit, which he was not entirely in favor of, but in the spirit of compromise he was willing to advocate. It proposes, in reference to the annual conferences, that there should be two lay representatives from each presiding elder's district, who shall be elected by the district stewards out of their body, and shall be allowed to participate in the business of the conference, except on ministerial questions.

Bishop McTyeire, Chairman of the Special Committee which had brought in the report, being called on, gave a history of the report. It was a compromise. The committee, at its first meeting, was found to represent very different views. Some, perhaps a majority, wanted lay men sent up to the Annual Conference by each Quarterly Conference, and with full powers and privileges on the floor of the Annual Conference with clerical members. They conceded, for the sake of harmony, to those who felt they could not go this far. The deliberations of the committee were patient and kind in the highest degree, and, with singular unanimity, the conclusion of the report now before the General Conference was arrived at. It was necessary to so shape the measure that not only a majority but a two-thirds vote might be combined upon it; and if brethren could not get all they wanted, they should, in deference to the views of others equally conscientious, accept less—which amounted to an available measure.

Rev. Dr. L. Basser, of the Virginia Conference: This is a solemn moment to me. I am about to take a position that will startle this General Conference. Had I but one moment of time allowed me on this question, I would devote it to the declaration of that position. I deeply regret, sir, that I am confined to the brief space of five minutes. There is a question antecedent and essential, and to that question, as a grave and dignified body of legislators, we should give a calm, impartial, and profound investigation, before we proceed to the measures offered for adoption. I desire that reporter to put down every word I utter within the brief space allotted to me on this occasion. The ground-work of my opposition to that first item is this. If the laity had had the inalienable and original right to create the ministerial offices, to commission the officers to fill those offices, and to prescribe the duties to be discharged by those officers, and appriate to those offices, I would then concede that the laity have a right to legislate for me as a minister of God. Not because I fear the laity, do I take this position, but because I fear my God, who, I believe in my inmost heart, called me to preach the Word, to administer the sacrament, and to sustain the moral discipline of my office, and neither man nor angel shall interfere with that holy and comprehensive commission. None except those who are allied with me and equally called, equally ordained, and equally responsible to God for all the legitimate duties assigned to my high and solemn office. I never will consent that any layman, though he be as pure as an angel, shall decide upon my ministerial character.

Rev. Guilford Jones said he was opposed to the report before us for our action. It was alleged by Bishop McTyeire that the report is a compromise. He (the speaker) was opposed to the whole thing because it is a compromise. That God who, he trusted, called him to the ministry, and in whose work he was spending the energies of his mind and his life, forbids that he should make some compromises. It has been stated here that we wish to get into our councils intelligent, pious laymen to aid us in the work that the God of Heaven has committed to our hands. He was not at liberty to turn aside from the ordinance of God and ask the laymen, or throw upon the shoulders of the laymen, a part of the responsibility that God had placed upon him. Hence, he was unwilling that lay men should take part in the government of that church in which he was a minister. He entered his solemn protest against action in the premises. Our annual conferences, as well as annual conferences of other denominations, have called laymen in for assistance in matters of finance, matters pertaining to educational interests, and things of that sort. These things are well enough; but when we take it into our hands to introduce lay delegation into the general conference, he thought it would be a failure. He objected to it because he thought it would be a failure. You cannot get intelligent laymen to come to our general conference. Those laymen whose minds, energies, and intellects would fit them to participate in our general councils, are engaged in secular business that would not let them leave their homes and mingle in the sort of exercises we have here, and especially such as we have had this morning.

Rev. Dr. L. M. Lee, of the Virginia Conference, said he would begin by saying "There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth him understanding." He believed that that inspiration of God is the heritage of God's church to-day, as it has been in ages past, and if we can only find out the inductions of God, and follow those inductions, we shall walk wisely and well. He believed that when the impression comes down upon the church of God here and there, without concert, without previous action, and the ministers of the church and others find their minds drawn together in a certain direction, that it may be taken for granted that God is moving the mind of the church in a certain direction, to a certain point. We can all see that, for many years past, the mind of the church has been drawn in this direction. There is no clamor among the laity. They are quiescent and awaiting the action of those who have always had the power, in the exercise of it, to invite them into the councils of the church. Everywhere in our church, in every Conference, this thought has come upon the mind of our ministry that we need the presence of the laity, that they ought to be in our councils, did not clamor for it, but it is a thought that has sprung up in the minds of the ministry, that is governing the heart of the ministry, and that has largely entered into the church and the public feeling producing this result. He believed as honestly as any member here could, that this is an inspiration from Heaven guiding the Church, governing it and leading it in the way in which it ought to go. He was as honestly attached to everything that is divine in the Methodist economy as any other man, but what is merely human he regarded only as such and was willing to submit to change in that respect. For this reason he repeated the settled conviction in his mind, that this movement in our church for the introduction of the laity into councils and goverment of the church, is an inspiration of Heaven. If the laity clamored for it, if they were agitating the church to secure it, he might question that conviction, but they were quiescent and the ministry is active.

On vote the substitute presented by Rev. Dr. Keener was lost.

Rev. H. B. Montgomery offered an amendment providing that the number of lay delegates be half the number of clerical delegates in the General Conference. Amendment rejected.

Rev. W. M. Rush offered an amendment providing that the lay representatives in each annual conference shall be entitled to two representatives in the General, Conference, one of whom shall be a local preacher and the other a laymen.

On vote the amendment was lost.

The previous question then being called for, the call was sustained.

The several items of the report were then adopted separately.

that we ought to advance them to a higher stage in the councils and government of the church. They

The vote then occurring on the adoption of the report, the ayes and noes were demanded, and the vote was ordered to be taken in that manner.

Rev. B. H. Spencer, in explanation of his vote, said that he was opposed to the whole report for this reason: "Take heed unto thyself and to all the flock over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseer." There is nothing more clearly revealed in the Bible than that the government of the Church is committed to the ministers alone, and he was therefore opposed to the report.

Rev. Dr. W. M. Rush, in explanation of his vote, said that when the question of lay-representation was voted upon by ayes and noes before, he voted no because he did not know what kind of a report the committee would bring in. He now voted aye as the report is before us.

On vote, leave of absence was granted to Rev. J. W. McKenzie, Rev. W. H. Hughes, and Rev. J. B. Tullis.

Rev. Dr. C. F. Deems presented the following paper, with the request that it be spread upon the minutes:

The General Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, did, on the 1st day of May, 1866, by regular and formal vote, pass a measure which changed a law of the Church not covered by any restrictive rule of our organic Constitution, which change itself did become, and is now a law of the Church. On the 2nd day of May, without any reconsideration of its action, the General Conference did pass a resolution referring this case to the Annual Conferences.

The subscribed protestor, being one of the duly elected delegates from the North Carolina Conference, doth enter this protest against the said action of the General Conference, on the 2d day of May, on the following grounds, to wit:

1. That the action of the 1st of May being a law, it cannot be reviewed by the Annual Conferences.

2. That the action of the 2d of May clothes the Annual Conferences with legislative powers and veto authority upon the action of the supreme legislature of the Church.

3. Because the action of the 2nd of May is irregular, anomalous, and very mischievous.

For these and other reasons, the subscriber respectfully requests permission to enter this protest on the minutes of the General Conference. CHAS. F. DEEMS

After considerable discussion,

Rev. Dr. Deems withdrew his protest for the present.

Rev. E. H. Myers moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the paper presented this morning by Rev. P. A. Peterson, in reference to the action of the Conference extending the pastoral term, was adopted. Motion agreed to.

On further vote, the paper was laid on the table by 68 ayes to 47 noes.

Rev. P. M. Pinckard moved to reconsider the vote by which the report extending the pastoral term was adopted. Motion carried by 68 ayes to 44 noes.

Rev. W. W. Bennett offered a substitute for the report, requiring that the Bishops shall not allow any preacher to remain in the same circuit or station more than four years successively.

Rev. P. M. Pinckard offered an amendment to the substitute by inserting "three years," in place of four years.

Rev. T. W. Dorman moved to lay the amendment on the table. Agreed to.

The Conference then adjourned, according to a motion previously adopted, to meet again at 7 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The Conference met at 7 o'clock, Bishop McTyeire presiding.

Religious services by Rev. Dr. Watkins, of Mississippi.

The Secretary announced the result of the vote on lay representation—yeas 97, nays 41.

Rev. J. E. Evans, of Georgia, moved the Discipline be changed so as to read that the Bishops shall not allow any preacher to remain longer than one year, unless the Bishop was satisfied that the cause of God would be promoted by his being retained, and it met the approval of the Annual Conference.

Rev. W. W. Bennett, of Virginia, moved that the Discipline be so changed as to make the term four years.

Rev. Dr. Smith, of Virginia, advocated the proposition.

Rev. Mr. Linfield, of Louisiana, supported it.

Rev. Mr. Granberry, of Virginia, proposed an amendment to the amendment of Mr. Bennett: "With the concurrence of two-thirds of the presiding elders, the Bishop can send back the preacher indefinitely."

Rev. Dr. Rosser, of Virginia, proposed, "as a compromise," the term of three years.

Rev. Dr. Edwards, of Virginia, seconded by Rev. Dr. Dorman, moved the previous question upon the substitute offered by Rev. J. E. Evans, which was ordered, and the substitute was lost.

The question was then taken on Mr. Granberry's amendment, which was lost.

The amendment of Rev. Mr. Bennett, of Virginia, extending the pastorate to four years, was, on motion, adopted by a vote of 72 to 49.

Bishop Pierce stated that the Bishops wished the Conference to understand that no preacher has thereby a claim to continue four years.

Rev. Dr. Smith, of Virginia, presented a report from the Committee Episcopacy, fixing the allowance of the Bishops and apportioning the amounts among the several Annual Conferences, as follows:

Rev. Mr. Pinckard moved that the amounts apportioned to the several Annual Conferences be divided out among the presiding elders' districts, and that the presiding elders forward the amounts collected to the Book Agent at Nashville, to be paid out by him to the Bishops.

Dr. Myers moved, as a substitute, that the resolution be referred to Dr. Smith, of Virginia, Dr. McFerrin and Rev. Mr. Key, to report a plan to the Conference for paying over the money collected to the Bishops. Carried.

Dr. Hamilton presented the 6th report from the Committee on Boundaries, with a resolution that the St. Louis and Missouri Conferences have leave to divide, should it be found necessary between this and the next General Conference; which, on motion, was adopted.

The Committee on the Support of the Bishops presented the following resolution, which was, on motion, adopted:

Resolved, That the delegation present notify immediately the Chairman of the Board of Stewards of their respective Conferences, or the Presiding Elders, the amount assessed to such Conference—requesting that collections be made at once and forwarded to the Chairman of the Board of Stewards, or any one else who may be designated by the delegates, who shall forward the same to the Bishop most convenient, taking his receipt, to be sent to the Book Agent.

W. SMITH, Chairman,
JOS. S. KEY,
J. B. MCFERRIN.

Reports of the Committee on Revisals were then taken up. No. 1 was adopted. No. 2 was adopted. No. 3 was adopted, with the exception of the item proposing the insertion of the words "Holy Catholic Church," in the place of the words "Church of God," in the baptismal service, which was not adopted.

The Conference then adjourned.

TWENTY-SIXTH DAY.

THURSDAY, May 3, 1866.

The Conference met at 9 o'clock, A. M., pursuant to adjournment, Bishop Pierce in the chair.

The minutes of the last session were read and approved.

Rev. O. P. Fitzgerald, of the Pacific Conference, called attention to the "Christian Spectator," the M. E. Church South organ, published at San Francisco. He would be pleased to receive subscriptions for the same, and by taking the paper the brethren would become much better acquainted, and more interested in the work in that distant and, to them, almost unknown part of the world. Brother Robert A. Young, of the Tennessee Conference, will receive subscriptions from any who wished to subscribe, and are not able to see him personally.

Reports from the Committee on Rivisals were taken up and acted upon.

Report No. 4 was read and adopted with the exception of a few minor items.

Report No. 5 was read and adopted with an amendment investing the Annual Conference with the power to prescribe the time and qualifications of colored preachers, with the rejection of the provision that the presiding elder will administer discipline when present, and some other unimportant modifications.

Report No. 6 was taken up. The first item in regard to the resolution of S. H. Browne, preparing an amendment to the note in the 23rd Art., and the instruction of the Conference in regard to the history of said note, was read.

On vote the item of the report was then adopted.

The remaining items were then adopted to the section on church trials.

The section on church trials was taken up.

Rev. Dr. C. F. Deems, of the North Carolina Conference, said that this is a very important matter and one to which he had given a very considerable amount of attention. So far as he could see he thought we could not do better than to adopt all of this report for the trial of the clergy of the different orders and ranks. Instead of the first item of the report in reference to the trial of Bishops, he proposed to substitute the paper presented to the Conference by Rev. R. S. Moran, determining and regulating the mode of procedure in bringing accused parties to trial. That paper is one of the most remarkable productions ever laid before this General Conference. It has been closely considered by about twenty of the oldest and most experienced of our ministers. It is a paper conforming to the whole usage of Methodism, and is so constructed as to prevent immense difficulties which are not at all provided for in this report. He therefore moved to substitute this paper for all in the report touching the matter of bringing ministers to trial.

On motion of Rev. J. F. Hughes, the paper submitted by Rev. R. S. Moran was laid on the table.

The remaining items of the report were then adopted, and, on further vote, the report adopted as a whole.

Report No. 7, the final report of the committee, was taken up, and adopted without amendment.

Bishop Pierce: The Bishops have had under consideration the meaning of the question asked in the quarterly conference: "Are there any complaints?" They concur entirely in this view: Under the term "complaints," is included the official conduct of all the members of the quarterly conference who are properly responsible to it, stewards, exhorters, and local preachers; and those personal grievances which may arise out of such matters as non-payment of debt are cases of arbitration.

Rev. Dr. L. M. Lee called attention to a resolution he offered last night which was adopted.

The resolution as he had perfected it, read as follows:

Resolved, That the Book Agent be, and is hereby instructed to publish in a separate volume, in large, plain type, the ritual of the church; including Mr. Wesley's Sunday service, the form of dedicating churches, and also the form of admission to the church heretofore published as an appendix to the Discipline.

There being no objection to the resolution in its present form, it was declared adopted.

Bishop Early: I have a communication in my hand which I desire to make to the General Conference, with a few introductory remarks. I am the oldest man in the house but one, and I have traveled more than any other man in your church. I have received more souls into Methodism than any other one man in it, and under the impression that my brethren very honestly differed with me in relation to my physical and mental qualifications to discharge my duty for the present, I intended and said to two of my colleagues to say to the bishops, "If you can find no place where you think it will be suitable and agreeable for me to work, I will ask to be retired." I said to some of the brothers of the Episcopal Committee the same thing, but I said, and now repeat it, that I will return to Virginia with the same self-respect with which I left it. I did not believe, and I do not now believe, that I am not capable of performing my duties for the present as well as I ever did, and yet, perhaps, I do not always know my own weakness as well as you do. I am appealed to by Bishop Paine, and many, will you permit me to say, devoted friends, to suspend my judgment and my course in the premises. And fearful that it might be apprehended that fearful consequences had deterred me, I advised these very kind friends that it was impossible for me to resist their appeals, for I am an old man, eighty years old, and I cannot perform many duties of a manual character which I once performed. Mentally I can perform any duties I ever did. My brethren told me that in the next four years, or in one year, some accident, or some disease, or the wear and tare of time, might find John Early different from the old John of other days. I therefore ask the Secretary to read this communication.

Beloved Brethren of the General Conference: I am about to submit a request, which I am sure you will understand does not proceed from any diminution of zeal and devotion to the holy work in which I have been, by the blessing of God, so long allowed humbly to engage. I am still willing to perform any duties which may demand my attention by your request. I am not ignorant of the fact that the responsibilities and toils of the regular work of the Episcopacy must, in the next four years, seriously test the strength of much younger men than myself; and when I am urged by my best friends to take into consideration the propriety of asking for a relation similar to that you have so kindly granted to Bishop Andrew, I must appreciate their kind feelings and calmly weigh their kind consideration for myself which they so generously illustrate. In deference to the judgment of my friends, I therefore very respectfully ask that I be allowed to travel at will throughout the work, and visit the churches, and perform such Episcopal work as may be needed at my hands. Brethren, if I regarded this step as in any wise sundering, even in the least, the hallowed ties that bind me to you and to that glorious field of labor on which I expect to die, but from which nothing could induce me to retire for any selfish end, even my best friends could not persuade me to take it. But at the same time that I make this request, I wish to be understood as unabated in zeal for Christ and his church, ready to live or to die for his name's sake. God bless you, brethren, and make you in love perfect, in labors abundant, and in his services crown your work with success.

JNO. EARLY.

New Orleans, May 3, 1866.

Rev. Dr. W. A. Smith, of the Virginia Conference, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the College of Bishops be, and are hereby requested, so to arrange their work, that Bishop Early may be at liberty to travel through the connection at his option, and as in the case of Bishop Soule and Andrew, be released from the responsibility of supervising any particular episcopal district. Resolution adopted.

Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall, of the Mississippi Conference: I hold in my hand several resolutions which I offer in no merely formal compliance with custom, but in the spirit of sincere homage and affection for the honored Bishop, who was a great and useful minister of the Gospel long before I was born, and I believe my brethren will heartily join with me in their adoption:

Resolved, That we deeply appreciate the feelings of our beloved and venerable Bishop Early, in asking for the relation he has solicited at our hands, and beg to assure him of the high esteem in which we hold his long and valuable services, and to express the hope that he will continue to bless the church of his choice and love with his godly counsels and faithful ministrations.

Resolved, That we cordially invite Bishop Early to visit us at the sessions of our Conferences and other parts of our great field of toil, whenever it may be convenient for him so to do.

Resolved, That we will follow our venerable Bishop with our fervent prayers, earnestly invoking the blessing of Divine grace upon himself and his family, that the evening of his life may be filled with sustaining comforts and with holy peace.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted by a rising vote.

Bishop Andrew: As the Conference has been quieted in view of the very impressive circumstances through which we have just passed, it is, perhaps, a favorable opportunity for me to make a few remarks that I desire. I hope you will excuse me if I seem to break in upon your arrangements. It is perhaps the last time I shall have the privilege of addressing you, for it is quite improbable that I shall be able to attend a General Conference again. I have sat and witnessed the proceedings of this General Conference with a great deal of interest. I have been gratified at many things you have done, and I hope and pray God that your legislation may be everywhere to the good of the church. There are some suggestions however that I wish to make. I am not going to endorse or find fault with your new arrangements, if I may so call them. The most of the changes you have made in the Discipline are good, but some are perhaps of doubtful utility. But time must prove all things. Some extension of the pastorate was necessary, and I approved it. Lay delegation under proper restriction and management, I think will work good for the church. At any rate in the course of the next four years you will be able to ascertain that. You can then dispense with it, if you find it does not work well. I have been several times in my life when I should have been very glad to have had an intelligent body of laymen in the councils of the church. Preachers are like other men, and when a body is composed entirely of preachers, they are not always the most practical and judicious in their actions. When I was strung up in New York before that Conference, I was very sorry that there was not an able and discreet body of laymen in that Conference. I am sure that had their been, I would have fared better than I did. My recent visit to Baltimore has confirmed my opinion in favor of lay representation. If they had had laymen in the Baltimore Conference, the state of things would not have existed in Baltimore that has there taken place. I think it is well to have a balance of that sort. Many of our laymen are more intelligent than the most of us. Many are deeply read theologians. They are acquainted with the history and machinery of the church; and they know what plans will work best. They are accustomed to government, and are acquainted with those laws by which men are governed. I think the regulation will work well. There is another thing concerning which I have been a little grieved. I have nothing unkind towards a single brother of the Conference, but there have been a good many flings at the Bishops. I have been accustomed to such things and am used to it, and so have let them pass as idle wind. Men must talk, and 150 men together, accustomed to talking, must ventilate a little, and they have found no fairer marks than the Bishops. Here is a capital fellow that has never been on a large circuit or station since the day he was born. He knows nothing, practically, about an extended work, but he knows just exactly how the Bishops ought to work, and he can discuss most eloquently on that subject. I have not done as well as I ought to have done, and so I would tell you at any time. Nor do I know that I have done as well as a great many of you would have done. But I have tried to do about the best I could under the circumstances, and I think I may have done some good. In the Bishops' Address to the Conference we intimated to you the importance of a Bishop for California. I am grieved to see that none has been elected for that coast. I give it to you as my judgment that if you intend Methodism to prosper on that coast, IMPRISONED MISSIONARIES IN ABYSSINIA.—The King of Abyssinia has for a long time imprisoned two agents of the English Church Missionary Society, Rev. H. A. Stern and H. Rosental, for a purely constructive and unintentional offence. They are confined in a loathsome place, and loaded with fetters of a peculiar and cruel construction. The last royal message sent to them, in response to their protestations of innocence and appeals for relief, was: "I know you are not afraid to die, but I shall not kill you; on the contrary, I shall at regular intervals torture you till the flesh falls in rotten pieces from your body." Dr. Beke, as the representative of their relatives, and Mr. Rassam, as a representative of the British government, have probably by this time reached the Abyssinian court.

CHINA.—In this huge empire, so wonderful for age and size, with a history reaching further back than any other nation of the world, and with an existing population of between three hundred and four hundred millions, all are moulded by the same type, influenced by the same mode of education, read the same books, learn the same lessons, and understand the same written language. The language of China presents one of the greatest difficulties in the prosecution of Christian missions. A lad has to learn 700 characters before he can read the easiest book, 6,000 or 7,000 to carry on diplomatic correspondence with any of the higher authorities. There are 70,000 words in the language, and the large dictionary consists of 70 volumes folio. With such an astounding vocabulary, it will not be surprising to learn that with every educational help which modern science can render, three years of hard study are necessary before the European missionary can learn to preach in the language.

A STATUE WEEPING BY STEAM.—A singular discovery has been made in a church in one of the faubourgs of Milan. A statue of St. Magdalen, which has long been famous for weeping in the presence of unbelievers was recently moved, in order to facilitate repairs for the church. It was found that the statue contained an arrangement for boiling water. The steam passed up into the head and was there condensed. The water thus made its way, by a couple of pipes, to the eyes, and trickled down upon the cheeks of the image. So the wonderful miracle was performed.

A SLOW AND COSTLY BUILDING.—A letter from Europe, in the Morning Star, states that the Cathedral at Milan, which is built of white marble from pavement to spire, and begun in the fourteenth century, is yet a long way from completion, though a large number of workmen are constantly employed, and has cost, to the present time, not far from $173,000,000.

You will never repent of being patient and sober.

THE SECRET OF MOLOCH.

The reader will be very much enlightened, if not edified by the perusal of the article which we quote from the Christian Advocate and Journal of New York, headed "Progress of "Fraternity."" These Northern Methodists understand each other religiously. And it is no slight aid to an honest inquirer, to note the estimate which they make of their own solemn spirit of telegraphic prayer, and unity, which was started at the one end by a "quartette of telegraphists," and which alternated at the other, between the New York East, and the New York Conferences. In our editorial of April 21st headed "NET RESULT" we very correctly deciphered that mysterious call to prayer, which so suddenly arrested the ordinary business of the General Conference. The "insincerity of design" of the members of the New York East Conference, in "violating their own agreement to pray," is more than hinted at by the Editor of the Advocate and Journal—"Dr. Leroy M. Lee was not quite ready to go so far. 'It may be,' he said, 'the soundest policy that we could adopt, to unite with that body in praying. It may be the keenest that they could have adopted to make SUCH A PROPOSITION TO US. There may be policy in it. I do not know how to receive it as a simple, pure, unsophisticated honesty.'" The italicising and small capitals are by Dr. Curry, who adds:—"When Dr. Lee comes to read the second paper offered in the Conference, coming from the same source with that on which he was commenting, he will hardly conclude that his suspicions were absolutely groundless." Dr. Curry is there on the spot. He has studied these people, and knows them, in all their moods: we do not. He knows the real value of the "Quartette;" "we happen to know," he says, "all but the last"  "and it will not be the whole truth to say that Dr. Newman's name alone would have been stronger than the whole four united." No! not the "whole truth!"—wonder what the "whole truth" would be, if told. Rather a weak "quartette" we suspect—somewhat frizly and decidedly frail. "The whole four" weaker than "Dr. Newman's alone!" well, that is weak. We have had the occasion more than once, while "suffering the word of exhortation," to examine into the "net value" of this principal actor who telegraphs a "full programme for the Conference to adopt, for opening diplomatic relations with the South;" and we agree with Dr. Curry that, taking into account its source, the affair is decidedly "cool."

We had never, until now supposed it a matter of any importance to know whom you pray with. The law of hospitality in the East—not "down East"—makes it important to know whom you break bread with: but prayer we had supposed equalized all who came within its atmosphere, covers all with that spirit of charity and forgiveness without which the Saviour has declared prayer to be but solemn mockery—"When ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have aught against any; that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses. But if ye do not forgive neither will your Father which is in Heaven forgive your trespasses." The hour of prayer is no time it would seem to be looking about suspiciously. We must give a man the full credit of sincerity who not only prays, but considerately summons others to prayer. How beautiful in it to see not merely friends, but those who have been estranged from each other, by the fierce passions of fraternal strife, bout in lowly devotion at the same altar, and struggling in the recollection of their own individual sins, to overcome, by God's grace, and to forget a bitter, mutual animosity!

The reception of the telegram by the General Conference, the Rev. Dr. Newman declares, "evinced the lingering of precious memories of a happier past, and of a sincere desire that brethren beloved, long separated by misunderstanding, and prejudice, might again dwell together in Unity"—"Blessed be the Lord God of our Fathers," he exclaims, "who hath brought us to see this day!" One would hardly suppose that this same sweet spirited brother is the very one who lamented that "the war ended a year too soon," and who about the time he was dispatching "a full programme" of telegraphic love and unity, proposed to consign the Rev. Dr. Neely to "the Dry Tortugas" for words uttered in his speech before the General Conference Bible Meeting!

Dr. Curry says that "the New York Conference seems to have not only emulated, but really have gone beyond their brethren on the Eastern side." And we certainly think that in so far as the spirit of all-forgiving, earnest prayer, such as seeks concert with kindred sincerily, and charity is implied, it has quite outstripped "brethren on the Eastern side;" or any other side, in this two-sided world. This Conference seeks unity, concord—"hopes, desires and expects" it—"that at no distant day the bodies unhappily severed will be reunited." Here again seems to be the spirit of love, of forgiveness, of peace—of that wisdom which is from above which "is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrasy. And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace."

But now, O reader, be you who you may, ponder the fact which we are about to bring to your notice; as evidence additional, powerful, of the blinding, hardening, transforming effect of fanaticism; which affecting to be religion, prostrates before its idol the noblest and best parts of the human soul. This same New York Conference while with one breath it invokes the "Spirit of Unity," with another it "Resolves, That inasmuch as treason is declared to be the greatest crime known to civil governments—and as upon the leaders of this rebellion rests the blood of a million of human beings—it is our calm and settled conviction uninfluenced by passion, strife or sectional prejudice, that expediency, constitutional law, justice, and the Bible all unite in demanding that at least some of the principal leaders of this rebellion be puuished with death."

It calls for blood. "A million of human beings" are not sufficient to glut this Christian Moloch, it demands more. A concert of prayer and—blood! "Reunion of the Churches," "constitutional law," "the Bible" and blood! What say you, man of peace, thou follower of the Prince of Peace, wilt thou take part with this crew? wilt thou drink of their chalice? God forbid! "O my soul, come not thou into their secret: unto their assembly, mine honor, be not thou united! Cursed be their anger, for it (is) fierce; and their wrath, for it (is) cruel: I will divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel."

A Conference of Methodist preachers, "having the form and seeking the power of Godliness," telegraphically calls for peace, but openly for vengeance! This complex state of mind finds a counterpart in the "Son of Beor." He was anxious to pray but ready to curse. "The rewards of divination" which the elders of Moab and Midian brought; the formal application of "princes more and more honorable than they; the promise of the king," "I will promote thee unto very great honor, and I will do whatsoever thou sayest unto me," confused, staggered, and completely seduced the prophet. During the last month Chief Justice Chase has both in New York and Baltimore been presiding over called meetings of the pastors and members of the Northern Methodist Church. And that Church has gone over full and complete to the support of the radical republican disunion party of the North. This is the "SECRET" of MOLOCH—who can doubt it.

THE KEY-NOTE OF THE GOSPEL.—I verily think there is not a sweeter word in the Bible than the word "come." I am sure that when it fell from the lips of Jesus, when the Spirit and the bride uttered it, when it was echoed by the tongues of apostles and saints, and, in all these cases, was addressed to the weary and heavy laden—to those who were thirsting for the waters of life—it was so full of grace and truth that it could not be exceeded in preciousness by any word from human speech. And this word "come" is the key-note of the gospel "Come," with whatever thirst you faint; "come and drink; come and take the water of life freely."

He who is not willing to fill a place he is fitted for will find no place fitted for him to fill.

No man can ever become eminent in anything, unless he work at it with an earnestness bordering on enthusiasm.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Godliness is Highest Manliness.

Our nature is moral as well as physical and intellectual, and the true theory of manhood is the symmetrical development of all the components of our nature. It is in his moral nature, that man most rises superior to the birds of the air and the beasts of the field, and asserts the distinguishing glory of his nature. The beasts of the field possess a lower grade of intelligence, which we call instinct, but, they have no moral faculty, and are incapable of moral ideas.—A link in the chain of progressive being is wanting here, and a gulf deep and wide yawns between inferior natures and man. Man of all terrestrial beings is capable of religion and of God. This constitutes our sublime and distinguishing characteristic. In no other way can we so clearly and truly exemplify our manhood, as by obeying, revering, and loving the God and Father of us all. He who leaves uncultivated his religious affections warps and mars the fair handiwork of God, and leaves uncultivated the fairest portion of his heritage, and leaves it to become a howling waste, where every evil principle may den, and every impure passion roam abroad.

Religion, then, we repeat, with its sublime revelations, its solemn obligations, and its immortal hopes, constitutes the ennobling and glorious prerogative of man; it makes him more than a civilized animal, and but a little lower than the angels. He that contemplates earth as the only theatre of action and being, and death as closing his career forever, comes short of the largest and loftiest aim and end of manhood; he stultifies, pigmyizes his glorious nature. If we could imagine the sun and centre of our solar system, just after his earliest glories had flamed upon the new created universe, and giving promise of a long and illustrious career, suddenly paling and sinking back into the darkness of original night, we might have some conception of the catastrophe of a soul shorn of its splendours, and defeated in its grandest hopes.

Experience and observation, observation devoted to this particular subject, has long since convinced most deeply thinking men, that as a rule, no man is safe in fortune, health, or character, without the restraints, supports, and consolations of religion. Whatever men may think of the cause, the moral principle in man is weak, and temptation is strong. If we attempt the battle of life without the shield of faith, the breast plate of righteousness, the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God—we fight against fearful odds, and are ever in imminent peril of defeat and ruin. If we would be strong, we must be so in the Lord and in the power of his might. If we would be men in the truest, the most ennobling, and happiest development of manhood, let us be Christians.

TRUTH.

BY HANANIAH.

Truth, like the frail reed,
May quiver and bend,
While the wing of the storm
Is sweeping the skies;
But when the fierce elements
Cease to contend,
Again in its vigor
And beauty will rise.

Time may grow old
And dwindle and die,
The Sun may refuse
To send us his light,
Earth's vital machinery
In ruins may lie;
But Truth will still live,
Unsullied and bright.

Truth's divine impress,
Coeval with God,
The blood-washed in Heaven
Forever shall wear;
The spotless, the just,
The pure and the good,
The bright palm of Truth
Forever shall bear.

Truth, like the light,
Forever is new;
Truth; like tried gold,
Is precious and pure;
Truth, like its author,
Eternal and true;
Truth, like its self,
Must forever endure.

Truth is the pass-word
At the entrance of Heaven,
Thrice happy is he
Who has it to give;
To all who can speak it
Admission is given,
And they in the lodge
Of angels shall live.

Truth is a treasure
That never will rust;
Truth is the essence
Of all that is good,
All that is holy, and
All that is just—
The bright golden link
That unites us to God.

But he who has broken
This heaven-wrought chain,
And shamefully cast
The rich jewel away,
Should rest not, until
It is mended again,
And this he should do
Without any delay.

For he who goes hence
With a lie to his name,
The joys of Heaven
He never can share;
But sink into sorrow,
And sadness and shame,
And anguish, and wailing,
And woe, and despair.

The English language has been officially adopted by the Government of the Japanese Empire, and permission has been given to have it taught publicly. Prince Satsuma is now turning his attention to commerce, and is largely engaged in the silk trade, finding it more profitable to sell silk to the English than to have his palaces battered down by them.

Progress of "Fraternity."

Since we wrote a few sentences on this subject last week, new developments of the case have confirmed and intensified the views we then expressed, and deepened in us the feeling that that action was a most unfortunate one. We have now before us the action of the Southern General Conference after the receipt of the telegram from Brooklyn. It appears that the reception of that message both surprised and gratified the great body of the southern delegates, and there was a movement to rush through by a rousing vote the carefully guarded answer—omitting to notice the invitation to include national unity among the objects to be prayed for—which was at length adopted and forwarded by telegraph. But debate was first had, and that discloses the animus of the whole affair. Dr. Leroy M. Lee was not quite ready to go so far. "It may be," he said, "the soundest policy that we could adopt? to unite with that body in praying. It may be the keenest that they could have adopted, to make SUCH A PROPOSITION TO US. There may be policy in it. I do not know how to receive it as a simple, pure, unsophisticated honesty." When Dr. Lee comes to read the second paper offered in the conference, coming from the same source with that on which he was commenting, he will hardly conclude that his suspicions were absolutely groundless.

Rev. Mr. Jones, a son-in-law of Rev. Heman Bangs, had great confidence in the "fraternity" of the missive, because he fully believed that his father-in-law—who has never been notoriously antislavery—had offered it. In that, however, he was slightly in error, though not unreasonably so. Dr. C. K. Marshall, who visited this city last winter, (when, among other hard things uttered by him, he put forth a declaration in one of our daily papers of his decided preference for a union of the Church with the Roman Catholics before one with the Methodist Episcopal Church,) supported the proposed action with characteristic earnestness. His speech tells how we have repelled their delegate from our doors "with a rudeness not becoming a Christian people," and speaks of the M. E. Church as "those who have so deeply wronged the South and Southern Church," adding, "I never will and never can consent under any circumstances to combine Churches so widely dissimilar in their interests," and concluded his rabbling harangue by saying, "Let us pray."

Dr. William A. Smith supported the resolution; but how? He took note of the fact that the New York East Conference was not the Methodist Episcopal Church. "If," said he, "this proposition came to us from the body of the Northern Church, which occupies such a hostile position to us, I would pause. I would do more than pause; I would say 'nay.' I would say, Purge yourselves of the iniquity of occupying our territory, and infringing upon law, justice, sympathy, and everything else. Purge yourselves first of the iniquity of sinning against right in taking our property and holding it, and seeking to subordinate the military authority of the United States to carry out your plans. Purge yourselves of that iniquity, wash yourselves of that sin, and when you have done that, come and ask us to pray and we will unite with you in prayer. We are praying all the time; but do that, and we will unite in praying with you."

It seems, according to Dr. Smith's version of the case, that in communicating with them the New York East Conference put itself in an attitude of opposition to "the body of the Northern Church," and it is, therefore into their favor. We think both of the Virginia doctors were more logical than some others who have treated of the subject; and that Dr. Smith jalseed rightly that the "great body of the Northern Church" would not approve the action of the New York East Conference, especially after reading the peculiar style of brotherly treatment given above. But some of our people will go a great way to conciliate "our dear southern brethren," and nowhere else have we seen the meekness of submitting to insults so conspicuously manifested.

The New York Conference seems to have not only emulated, but really to have gone beyond their brethren on the eastern side. On the second day of the session a telegram was received at the conference, from Dr. J. P. Newman and three others, laying down a full programme for the conference to adopt for opening diplomatic relation with the South. Of this quartette of telegraphists we happen to know all but the last, who is, we believe, a young Baltimorean, and son-in-law of one of our bishops, "and it will not be the whole truth to say that Dr. Newman's name alone would have been stronger than the whole four united. Dr. Newman & Co. asks the New York Conference to "request the Southern General Conference to appoint commissioners, one from each of their annual conferences, to confer with like commissioners appointed by the bench, of bishop, one from each of your annual conferences in May, at Washington, to agree on a reunion of the Churches, the Centenary of American Methodism subject to the approval of your General Conference." And to this cool request the conference, on motion of Dr. R. S. Foster chairman of the committee to whom the paper was referred, would "suggest the propriety of your (the southern) body providing a conference with a commission that may be appointed by our bishops with reference to reunion, subject to the action of our General Conference May 1868, thus crowning our glorious Centenary."

Now, had such a proposition come to us without an indorsement, we should have thought it a most preposterous affair. That an annual conference should assume to lead off in a subject of outside negotiation, and call on the "bench of bishops" to appoint delegates, is something new in Methodism. Dr. Smith will now have occasion to distinguish between the courtesies of a conference and the unpardonable sins of the "body of the Northern Church." It is not ours to decry the wisdom of such movements, but rather to note and chronicle the passage of events. Nous verrons, which, being interpreted, means, "We shall see what we shall see."

MONEY.—Men will work for it, fight for it, beg for it, steal for it, starve for it, and die for it. And all the while from the cradle to the grave, nature and God are thundering in our ears the solemn question: "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" This madness for money is the strongest and lowest of the passions; it is the insatiate Moloch of the human heart, before whose remorseless altar all the finer attributes of humanity are sacrificed. It makes merchandize of all that is sacred in human affections, and even trafficks in the awful solemnities of the eternal.

The credit that is got by a lie, only lasts till the truth comes out.

The Great Southern Relief Fair at Baltimore.

Your readers know, of course, that the ladies of Baltimore held a great fair last week, for the relief of the South. Few of them, however, I suppose, have any idea of the splendor of the affair, or of its vast extent. It far surpassed, in richness of display, in taste, and in extent, any fair that has ever been held in Baltimore within my recollection. When this fair was first projected, it was expected that a considerable sum might be realized from it, whereby some comforts and a few of the necessaries of life, might be sent to a few of the many families in the South who had been rendered homeless, or whose happy homes had been cruelly despoiled in the late war. But the ladies who managed the fair have done more than this. Their exertions have been crowned with success in a measure far exceeding their most sanguine expectations. They have, indeed, achieved wonders. The sum of money which has been realized far exceeds that which they expected and hoped to raise. It will be hereafter their proud consciousness and their happiness to know, that through their untiring exertions alone, thousands of homes in the South will be made to experience welcome relief, and that the smiles of gladness will again come to thousands of faces that have for many months been bedewed with tears. Many a mother, as she clothes her fatherless child in the comfortable garments thus provided, will lift her heart in prayer to God for blessings on the dear ladies of Baltimore, who have been so thoughtful and so kind.

Your correspondent broke away from his pressing duties here one day last week, and ran over to Baltimore to see the great fair in operation. And truly it was a sight worth taking a much longer journey to see. The immense hall of the Maryland Institute was filled with prettily arranged tables, covered with the most rich and tempting goods, all arranged with exquisite taste; and these tables were attended by many of the loveliest young ladies of the Monumental City. The merchants of Baltimore, and many in New York and Philadelphia, had been very generous in their contributions to the fair. Mr. Knabe and Mr. Steif, the celebrated piano manufacturers of Baltimore, each presented one of their most valuable instruments. Several gentlemen presented valuable horses, cows, etc., and one noble hearted fellow actually gave a farm. Ross Winans, Esq., one of Baltimore's most honored citizens, now in Europe, wrote to the ladies to draw on him to any amount they pleased. At the same time he wrote to his lawyer in Baltimore, that if the ladies drew for less than ten thousand dollars, to hand over to them fifty thousand. The ladies took the ten thousand. The fact is, however, when it became known what a noble enterprise was on foot, and what ladies were managing it, the hearts of the whole people of Baltimore and Maryland seemed to respond to the appeal, and donations of all kinds came flowing in from all sorts of people. Butchers in the market sent loads of their choicest meats; florists sent a profusion of the rarest flowers; the hotels sent a vast quantity of the most delicious viands: a poor huckman even, sent ten dollars, and so it went on.

I will not attempt to describe the gay and brilliant scene which the fair presented. It was truly a beautiful sight. All the pretty saleswomen seemed to be as busy as bees, their merchandise going off as fast as they could attend to their eager customers. I observed, too, that none of the low arts usually met with at fairs, were resorted to here. There was no importunity to buy, and your change was scrupulously returned to you. I paused before an excellent picture of Stonewall Jackson. "Will you take a chance in our 'Stonewall,' sir?" said the young lady at this table. "Oh yes! I must take a chance in Stonewall." A little further on was a magnificent picture of that truly great soldier, General Lee. Another pause, to take a good look at that honored face. Young lady at table: "To be raffled for to-night, sir. Will you take a chance?" "Who could refuse to take a chance in LEE?" Here is a table filled high with elegant books, jewelry, and articles of vertu. "Will you take a chance here, sir?" They are all to be raffled for to-night." "Pray, excuse me, Miss, not to-day, I believe." "As you please, sir," with a pleasant smile, "but the loss is yours." And so it was, was it not? The only consolation was, that one must lose something in this world.

This brought us to the dining hall. Here were tables spread with snowy cloths and glittering plates, with more pretty girls for waiters. Here we became conscious of being very hungry, although it was much before our usual dinner hour. Perhaps it was the tempting viands, perhaps the general look of things; at all events, down we sat, and did ample justice to the good things that were set before us, asking no questions for conscience sake. While the banquet was in progress, we thought that it would be jolly to come over to dinner every day. When we thought we had consumed about two dollars and a half worth of nectar, ambrosia, etc., we rose to depart, and asked for the bill. "A dollar, sir," was the reply of the pretty Hebe, who had not only filled our cup, but also brought us our meat, and changed our plates with such charming grace.

A few more trifling purchases made, and a five dollar chance taken in the eight hundred dollar Stief piano, and we reluctantly left the gay scene. This evening, Mr. John I. Ford, the princely manager of both the theatres in Baltimore, throws open the Front Street Theatre, for a grand concert, and soiree dansante, which promises to be a grand affair, and the proceeds of which will greatly swell the already large receipts of the fair.

The ladies, of course, are delighted with the success of the fair. They have lost no time in applying its proceeds to the noble objects to which it was designed. Large sums of money have already been sent off to Georgia, to be expended there by proper and judicious persons, and other sums will be sent to-day and to-morrow to other States.

And now a word about the way in which "the Union people" of Baltimore, as they call themselves, acted towards this fair. It was gotten up and managed by those ladies of Baltimore who have relatives and friends in the South, and who, for that reason, were stigmatized during the whole war as "disloyal." The American, in speaking of the fair, said: "We do not see among them the name of one loyal lady." Good. "I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word." The American and the "loyal" people for whom it speaks, who are for the most part interlopers and not Baltimoreans, would, if they dared, have gone to the hall of the fair, taken down the pictures of Lee and Stonewall Jackson, and flung them into the street; and they gnashed their teeth in impotent rage, because they did not dare to do it now. They had their day in Baltimore long enough. Thank God, it is over now.

MALVOLM.

WAX AND SEALS.—Paul prayed for an opportunity. He thanked God for an open door. In doing any work, we need material as well as tools. No impression can be made with a seal unless there is some wax ready to receive the stamp. Do not neglect to have the wax warm because you have a well cut seal. Think of what you are to work on, as well as what you are to work with.—Be not exhausted with labor for the hearers. Let those who hear have their hearts in waiting. The truth will be powerful, according to the susceptibility of that on which it falls. Paper is as valuable, in the art of printing, as type and ink. We need the surface on which to make the impression, as much as the means by which to impress. A heart warm with desire for God's truth, is the surface on which to receive the revelation of His Will. Love will give that line to our souls, which makes the impression come out clear and true upon the texture of the spirit. Would you be sealed, then be warm with true desire, and every touch of God's Word will leave its mark upon your heart.

AUTHORITY OF THE BIBLE.—"The mother of a family," says Rev. Adolph Monod, "was married to an infidel, who made jest of religion in the presence of his own children; yet she succeeded in bringing them all up in the fear of the Lord.

"I asked her one day how she preserved them from the influence of a father whose sentiments were so opposed to her own. This was her answer: 'Because to the authority of a father I do not oppose the authority of a mother, but that of God. From their earliest years my children have always seen the Bible upon my table. This holy book has constituted the whole of their religious instruction. I was silent that I might allow it to speak. Did they propose a question, did they commit a fault, did they perform a good action, I opened the Bible, and the Bible answered, reproved, or encouraged them. The constant reading of the Scriptures has wrought the prodigy which surprises you.'"

A SOLEMN TESTIMONY.—Dr. Spring, in viewing his long ministerial career, gives the following testimony, which is instructive, solemn, and full of warning: "I have seen Universalists and infidels die, and during a ministry of fifty-five years I have not found a single instance of peace and joy in their views of eternity. No, nothing but an accusing conscience and the terrors of apprehension. I have seen men die who were men of mercurial temperament, men of pleasure and fun, of taste and literature, lovers of the opera and the theatre rather than the house of God, and I never saw an instance in which such persons died in peace. They died as they lived. Life was a blank, and death the king of terrors; a wasted life, an undone eternity!"

BE HEARTY IN ALL YOUR LABORS.—Let not your head, and hands, and tongue be busy, and your heart idle. Results, by their greatness, will surprise the truly engaged, while the double-minded will wonder that so little good is done. When the walls of Jerusalem went up rapidly, it was because "the people had a mind to build." "The sluggard desireth, and hath nothing."

A HEATHEN TESTIMONY.—A poor East Indian cabob, going along the street one day, was attracted by the sounds proceeding from a mission school, and he drew near to listen. The boys were reading the fifth Chapter of Matthew. The eyes of the prince flashed with unwonted fire, and when they finished their lesson he exclaimed: "Well, if you only live that chapter as well as you read it, I will never say another word against Christianity."

The fretful Christian wrongs his Master sadly, for he seems to tell everybody (what he knows is not true) that Christ's yoke is hard and his burden heavy.

Happiness is nothing but that inward sweet delight that will arise from the harmonious agreement between our will and God's will.

Dr. Livingstone recently stated in a lecture that no less than forty missionaries succumbed to the deadly effects of the climate of Africa before a single conversion took place.

Many of the gay sons and daughters of pleasure never have a moment of true happiness.

Think little of yourself, and you will not be injured when others think little of you.

Not a few seek to accommodate truth to their views and feelings; it is wiser to accommodate our views and feelings to truth.

Youth is not like a new garment which we can keep fresh and fair by wearing sparingly. Youth, while we have it, we must wear daily, and it will fast wear away.

Love is the law of Christ's kingdom, the lesson of his school, and the livery of his household.

O Lord! let me have anything but thy frown, and anything with thy smile.

Departed this life, in Greenwood, Caddo Par., La., on the 30th day of April, 1866, Mrs. TENNESSEE M., wife of G. W. RIGGINS, M. D.

The deceased was a native of Tennessee. Her maiden name was Dean; she was born July the 9th, 1832, married May the 30th, 1848—joined the M. E. Church South, 1859.

The limits of an obituary notice are too narrow to enumerate her virtues. To testify the affectionate esteem with which she was regarded by those who knew her,—or to moralize on this dispensation of Providence, by which her bereaved husband has been deprived, like Ezekiel of "The desire of his eyes with a stroke." And her four children, the youngest an infant, have lost that best earthly friend, a mother, who will no more wake to their cries, but is resting from her labors.

"Asleep in Jesus! peaceful rest

there must be a Bishop resident there. We are the only Church that I know of that has sent a mission out for a long time without a Bishop resident. What are you going to do now? You have sent Bishops there to visit that work several times at a great cost to the Missionary Society, and it was able to bear it then, but is not now. If you send a Bishop to California, the Pacific will have to pay his expenses. That is a feeble Conference, and can hardly support itself. It is not able to bear such expenses. Would it not be much better if you would send a Bishop to the Pacific coast to remain there? You have got to do that thing one day or another, or you will lose that Conference. There are brethren who have come fifteen hundred miles, at a great expense and inconvenience to themselves, and the main thing they wanted they go home without. There is another thing I have noticed that I will comment upon in a kindly way. In the discussions upon the important matters brought before this body it is expected that there should be considerable diversity of opinion. These opinions and differences have been expressed frankly. I like everything to be argued openly and honestly. To be sure I do not think that all the thunder we have had here was necessary, but that is not for us to determine. What I mean is this: Some things have been passed greatly against the wishes of intelligent and able brethren, and I have heard some such remarks as this: "That thing shall not pass at my Annual Conference; I will defeat it there." You are going to agitate before the thing comes around, and going to speak against these changes before they are experimented upon at all. Are you not aware that you are then doing harm to the church? Is it not better that when a thing has been settled by the proper authority, you should align in for it, and try the experiment with a good honest heart, at least for the next four years? It is done, and men as honest and as intelligent as you are have decided it. Everything has not been done according to my own wishes, but I am bound to carry out your decisions so far as I can. I have been a good while accustomed to hearing the death of Methodism announced. I am getting really tired of it. Our great men have said it, our papers have said it, and if the people come now to say so, can we blame them? We have authorized them to say it. Gravely I am told that Methodism is dead, and unless such and such plans are carried into effect, it cannot be resurrected. I do not believe a word of it, because I have seen no proof of it. To be sure, we may not be as vigorous and active as we have been, but in traveling throughout the connection, I have seen how people have stood to their trust in adversity, how the preachers have stood to their work, often half-starved and half-clothed, and I have said, are these the preachers of a dead church? We may not have as many revivals as we have had, but I am looking for better days, and I believe that these preachers will go home to work zealously in the spirit of their Master, and that there will be such a revival as we have not known for twenty years. But if you go home croaking, and say to the people the church dead is, crushed and ruined, all you have got to do then is to dig its grave and call the people to its funeral. As an old man, I take the liberty of making these remarks, from a conviction that they may be of importance to you. I want you to unite, and if Methodism is sick, don't call too many doctors to it, but turn in and cure it yourselves. Get your preachers baptized with the Holy Ghost, and work faithfully and vigorously. In the midst of all our sparring I have seen but little evidence of irritation. You have often spoken warmly but not in ill-temper. I thank God for it, for it is a sign God has been with us. I hope that when you go from this place, there is not a brother you will not be able to shake hands with as when you came. In a little while you will go to your homes, brethren, and if I have grieved one of you in the discharge of my official duties, I ask your pardon. If I have ever wronged any man in giving him a station, I ask God to forgive me. I never intended it. I have never given a man a station with the desire to punish him, but I have always endeavored to act in view of the glory of God. If I have ever at any time injured any of you, take it for granted that it was not intended, and pray for the old man. I expect to see a good many of you again. By the help of God I expect to do something more. May God Almighty bless you all.

Bishop Early took the chair.

Rev. G. F. Fitzgerald, of the Pacific Conference: I cannot leave this Conference with a clear conscience until I have discharged a duty I owe the people I represent. I have hardly the strength of body or spirit to say what I ought to say at the present time. I am about to go back to the people I represent; in part, with a sad heart—go back, feeling almost crushed under the weight of the disappointment that bears upon my heart with a force I cannot express. That disappointment arises from the fact that the special mission that brought me here, a distance of fifteen hundred miles, has failed, and I go back with a sad report to our Church. I go back to disappoint their hearts with a report that will paralyze their energies, and which will cause them to despond and falter in the work that, with proper agencies, would be a prosperous field on the Pacific coast, but which cannot be performed, and will not be performed, unless those agencies are employed. When I arrived here, and mingled with the members of this General Conference—when I talked with the venerable Bishops who preside, and found every one with whom I conversed to concur in the view I took of the necessities of a Bishop for the Pacific work, I believed that our request would be granted. I believe a majority of the members of this General Conference have assured me, in private conversation, that we ought to have a Bishop for that coast, and they have said to me, "Select your man in the proper way, and we will give him to you." Every Bishop has also said the same thing; and, acting under their advice, we confidently expected that what we desired would be granted to us. We made a selection, and in doing so we acted under the concurrent advice of the Bishops and a large portion of this body, and I thought when the election took place there would be nothing to do but to ratify the judgment of the Conference already expressed. But what was the result? From a combination of unfortunate circumstances, or, allow me to say, from a want of a due appreciation of the peculiar wants of that work, in which some of us have toiled and prayed and wept, amid difficulties, for long years, our expectations have failed, and we are about to go back with this report: The old system—an occasional visit from a Bishop; cut off from the heart of the church, bound to the restrictions of an episcopal form of government, and no episcopacy to meet the wants and carry out the purposes for which that branch of our government was organized. I rise this morning to make my last appeal to this body in the name of all the interests that are imperiled there. It is a question of life or death to the Pacific work. I do not wish to intrude my remarks or the interests I represent upon you, but I announce that if you do not meet our wants in this case, you imperil all we have on the Pacific coast. Now is an opportunity which you may improve, and if you meet our wants and give us the man we want, there is a field of expansion and usefulness before us, which no language could hardly exaggerate. I felt that I could not go away from this General Conference with a clear conscience without unburdening my heart on this subject. I want to go back with a clear conscience and tell my brethren I did all I could, and if I failed I did it after doing my utmost to secure the action we needed.

Rev. J. B. McFerrin: I regret exceedingly the course of remarks this morning. I do not think there has been any purpose upon the part of this General Conference to defeat the measures of our brethren from California. We did not believe in the Committee on Episcopacy that we had a right to recommend this General Conference to elect a Bishop for a particular work. Our General Superintendency is an Itinerant Superintendency, and brother Fitzgerald has stated that he was authorized to believe that they were authorized to select a man for the work, and all that was necessary was to have this selection ratified by the General Conference. The Committee, however, thought that we could not recommend a particular man for a particular work, for we had no constitutional authority to do so. In the Committee on Episcopacy, we took a survey of the whole work, and we recommended the General Conference to elect six additional bishops, believing that if the Conference adopted that report, and elected the additional number recommended, that in the arrangement of their work they could send one man to California to remain there four years in perfect consistency with our General Itinerant Superintendency. When that report was brought in, the General Conference refused to adopt it, and determined upon the election of four more bishops, instead of six as recommended by the Committee on Episcopacy. No objection was made then, no protest was entered, and I have understood, until this blessed morning, that in the arrangement of the Episcopal work it was understood that one of the superintendents is to go to California. I never knew of any other arrangement until this morning, and now if the Episcopacy have not men enough to do their work, that we have not elected men enough to do their work, we can elect another. But this is all news to me, and I am sorry that question has been sprung upon us in this way. If the bishops had told us that we had not elected enough men, then we could have elected another, I suppose. We recommended the number of six, but the General Conference thought otherwise. A great many men were for a Bishop for every Conference, and because they could not get that number, they only wanted to elect one or two, or the least number they could get along with. If it is the judgment of the General Conference and the Bishops that it is necessary to have another Bishop, I will vote for him and you may ordain him, but I will not vote for him with the view that he is to go to California, to remain four years.

Rev. J. O. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the General Conference proceed to the election of an additional General Superintendent, and that our Bishops be requested to consecrate him before leaving New Orleans.

Rev. Dr. D. R. McAnally, of the St. Louis Conference: It is obvious from all that has been said that the purpose and intention is, if this resolution pass, to select a bishop for a particular place. Disguise it as you may, that feeling underlies the whole. Adopt it and act upon it, and how long before we will want a bishop for Montana, and another for New Mexico, and another for Texas; and to my mind, and other brethren of this Conference, this is a singular hour in which to introduce such a measure. A singular hour, when the brethren are in momentary expectation of a final adjournment, when their thoughts are already turned homeward. Now to bring upon us at this hour, under the circumstances surrounding us, and with the feelings pervading us, this question, is, to say the very least of it, an extraordinary procedure. I do not know that I ever moved to but lay one paper on the table, and that was some thirty-nine years ago. I am not in favor of such motions as a general thing. I interrupt no person speaking. I ask no questions of a man speaking, except through the chair, and I am unwilling, as a general and almost as a universal thing, to move to lay any paper on the table. I never have yet seen the day, or hour in the day, when I could not vote squarely upon any subject that came before me, and I hope never to see it. Now, will this Conference adopt this resolution? They are not prepared to adopt it, and if we act upon it they may prepare to sit here one or two days more, for in that case, we are going to discuss the length and breadth of this question.

Rev. J. Hamilton: I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Bishop Andrew: It is due to my colleagues to say that they did not ask you to elect anybody else, but it was a movement of my own, and my colleagues were not responsible for it. We appointed a member to go to California and stay at least a year, but he has sent us word this morning that circumstances would prevent his doing so.

On vote, the call for the previous question was sustained.

On further vote, the Conference refused to adopt the resolution.

Reports from the Committee on Education were taken up and acted upon as follows: Report No. 2 was read and adopted. Report No. 4 was read and adopted, with the exception of that part prescribing the course of study for the University, which was withdrawn.

Rev. E. H. Myers moved that the Conference proceed to the selection of a place for the meeting of the next General Conference. Agreed to.

The following nominations were made: Memphis, St. Louis, Louisville, Covington, and Newport. On vote, Memphis was selected as the place for the meeting of the next General Conference.

On motion, the first Wednesday in May, 1870, was selected as the time for the meeting of the next General Conference.

On motion of Rev. Dr. W. A. Smith, the resolution in reference to the question of the veto power of the Bishops being sent around to the Annual Conferences for their action, was then taken up.

Rev. Dr. W. A. Smith: Some of the brethren desire to have this subject amended. They would have the present law as it stands on page 47 of the Discipline, so amended as to read after the word "bishops," in the fourth line from the top, "either unconstitutional or of doubtful tendency;" and after the words "so objected to," in the twelfth line from the top, insert "and so soon as three-fourths of the members of all the Annual Conferences who shall be present and voting, shall have concurred in favor of said rule or regulation, it shall have the force of law, otherwise it shall be null and void." The effort of the amendment is, first, that the bishops can veto an unconstitutional or an unwise measure, and, secondly, when they have vetoed it, their veto cannot be set aside without a two-thirds vote of the General Conference, and a three-fourths vote of the Annual Conferences. That is the way it is proposed to amend the present law before it is sent around to the Annual Conferences.

Rev. Dr. J. C. Keener, of the Louisiana Conference: I am opposed to this resolution for the following reasons: The whole government of Methodism is based upon the doctrine of mutual surrender. For instance, we, as ministers, surrender to the Bishops the right of selecting our places, that is where we shall preach. The membership, upon their part, surrender to the Bishops the right of selecting their ministers. The Bishops, upon their part, surrender the right to vote, and they have no appeal. Carrying this out a little further, we, as a body of ministers, surrender into the hands of the laity the support of our wives and our children, and the dearest interests in the world to us, and they, upon their part, surrender to us the exclusive legislation of the church with regard to managing our own ecclesiastical matters. I maintain that here is a very important invasion of this principle of mutual surrender, and for my part I am opposed to it. Not only as a body the ministers have been called upon to turn over a good deal of power into the hands of the laity, but now we are called upon to turn over into the hands of the Episcopacy the immense power that is contained in a veto—not a veto upon constitutional questions alone, but a veto upon things of the "doubtful tendency," which is tantamount to giving them the veto power as we understand that power in the legislation of the country. The consequence will be, that the men who have to-day the government of the church in their hands, in four years will have no power—between the veto on the one side and the laity on the other. Having transferred half their power to the laity, they now propose to transfer another large portion of power to the Episcopacy. I think that it invades the very philosophy, the very constitution, the very nature, and the very spirit of our system of government; and therefore this thing we are attempting to do is of immense importance. Let us ask ourselves in regard to the laity, what do we represent? Do we represent any of their property? Have we any right to tax them? Certainly not. We have surrendered everything to them, and yet we have ventured to transfer, so to speak, all of our power in that direction. If we have any power left, we cannot afford to give away this much on the other side. I am therefore opposed to it.

Rev. W. P. Radcliffe moved that the whole question be indefinitely postponed. Motion agreed to.

Rev. Dr. C. F. Deems presented the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

Resolved, That the Bishops and Delegates of the several Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, assembled in General Conference, unite in expressing their profound sense of the great kindness and hospitality of the citizens of New Orleans, exhibited by their unwearied kindness to us during the month of our session in this city, and that we devoutly and solemnly invoke the blessings of Almighty God upon all the members of the several families with whom we have had our delightful sojourn, and that we fervently pray for the growth of this great city in population, prosperity and especially in the culture of our most Holy Faith.

Rev. H. A. C. Walker, of the South Carolina Conference, offered the following resolutions, which were severally and unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

Resolved, That, severally and as a Conference, we entertain the most grateful sense of obligation to those citizens of New Orleans, in whose free and elegant hospitalities we have so largely shared during the session of our Conference among them, and that in our future labors the season of social and Christian intercourse thus enjoyed, shall be held in kindliest remembrance; meanwhile praying the blessing of the Father of Mercies on our benefactors.

Resolved, That, with adoring gratitude to Almighty God, we recognize the fraternal sympathies and Christian love prompting the tender of the several Presbyterian and Baptist churches in this city, in whose pulpits ministers of this Conference have gladly served, and that we cordially reciprocate these sympathies and this love. May the God of our Fathers multiply the members of these churches, and increase in them and in their pastors the knowledge and love of Christ!

Resolved, That our thanks are hereby most respectfully tendered to the proprietors of the railroad and steamboat lines, to whose kind considerations we are indebted for material favors in reaching this place and in returning to our homes.

Resolved, That we tender our grateful acknowledgments to the Methodist pastors in this city, to the presiding elder of the New Orleans District, and to the trustees of the Carondelet Street Church (in which our sessions have been held) for their combined kindness and care, in arranging for our comfort and convenience.

Resolved, That in the "entertainment in the open air," furnished at the City Park, by the ladies of our churches in the city, we recognized the culmination of the delicate attention and assiduous care directed to our ease and comfort, and enjoyment, by those in whose hospitalities we have been sharing—a green, green spot in our memory forever. May God's gracious blessing, in full measure, be the portion of these gentle spirits—our benefactresses, and of all whom they love!

Resolved, That the thanks of this Conference are due, and hereby cordially tendered to Dr. Summers, for the ability and courtesy with which he has discharged his difficult duties as our Secretary; and that we gratefully recognize the efficient assistance rendered him by Dr. Myers and Bro. Martin.

Rev. J. S. Martin asked and received permission to withdraw a report on infant church-membership, which was presented by Rev. S. Register.

Rev. Dr. C. F. Deems announced that the first quarterly meeting of the Board of Foreign Missions will be held in Baltimore on the last Friday in June.

Rev. W. W. Bennett moved that the Conference tender to brother Kennon their cordial thanks for his kindness and courtesy in attending to the mail matter belonging to the members of the Conference.

The following preamble and resolution was presented, and adopted:

WHEREAS, The Hon. Russell Huston, and the Hon. T. S. Brian, of Tennessee, have, by their faithful, legal services in behalf of our publishing house, brought us under special obligations to them; Therefore

Resolved, That the Book Agent is hereby instructed to prepare, with a suitable inscription, a handsome Family Bible and Hymn Book to be presented to each of them by the members of this General Conference.

Bishop McTyeire: The report of the Committee on the subject of Lay Representation has been adopted by more than a two-thirds vote of this General Conference. It will now go to the Annual Conferences for their concurrence. Should the Annual Conferences concur with this body in that action, it is the opinion of some well informed that a union of the Methodist Protestant Church with our own might thereupon take place. There will then be no serious obstacle in the way of that union. I was requested by some of the leading members of that church, in case our Conference adopted this measure, to request a commission to be appointed to confer with a like commission from the General Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church to see if this union cannot be effected. I hope, therefore, before the Conference adjourns, it will authorize certain persons to act on this subject, and to close up such an agreement if it can be entered into.

Rev. Nelson Head moved that such a commission, to consist of five, be appointed by the Bishops.

Rev. H. A. C. Walker moved, as an amendment, that two Bishops be added to the commission.

On vote, the amendment was agreed to and the motion adopted.

Bishop Paine announced the following as the commission: Bishop Pierce, Bishop McTyeire, Rev. Dr. C. F. Deems, Rev. J. E. Evans, Rev. S. Register, Rev. N. Head, and Rev. Dr. L. M. Lee.

The chair announced the following committee to arrange the Discipline to conform with the action of the the General Conference: Bishop McTyeire, Rev. Dr. T. O. Summers and Rev. Dr. A. L. P. Green.

Rev. Dr. J. C. Keener presented the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted by a rising vote:

Resolved, That the thanks of this General Conference are eminently due to our beloved Fathers the Bishops, for the impartial, able, and patient manner in which they have presided over its deliberations, and it invokes upon them the blessings of Almighty God, to sustain them in the discharge of their arduous and responsible duties.

Rev. Dr. W. A. Smith, of the Virginia Conference moved, that after the reading of the Journal and appropriate religious exercises, the General Conference now adjourn sine die. Motion agreed to.

The minutes of the session were then read and approved.

The Conference then united in singing a hymn, after which prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Lovick Pierce, of the Georgia Conference. The Conference then adjourned sine die, with a benediction by the Bishop.

PROVIDENCE OF GOD IN MINUTE EVENTS.—It is an erroneous view to think of God as governing the grand phenomena of nature, and leaving those which are minute to the operation of a set of laws which He does not uphold at every moment in the fullness of their application. "We cannot," says Chalmers, "disjoin God from one particle of the universe of God." We may despise what is small as beneath the notice of our pride, but nothing is too microscopic for Him who, while he measures the water in the hollow of His hand, and metes out heaven with a span, and comprehends the dust of the earth in a measure, and weighs the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance," yet numbers the very hairs of our head, and knows of every sparrow that falls to the ground. The minuteness with which God provides for all wants is well brought out in the sixty-fifth Psalm, where David speaks of him as attending to the very setting of the furrows of the field and the watering of the ridges: "Thou makest the outgoings of the morning and evening to rejoice; Thou visitest the earth and waterest it; Thou greatly enrichest it with the river of God, which is full of water; Thou preparest them corn, when Thou hast so provided food; Thou waterest the ridges thereof abundantly; Thou settest the furrows thereof; Thou makest it soft with showers; Thou blessest the springing thereof; Thou crownest the year with thy goodness, and thy paths drop fatness."—Professor Balfour.

The corruption of human nature is a poison so subtle, that it pierces into all the powers of the soul; so contagious, that it infects all the actions; so obstinate, that only Omnipotent grace can heal it.

Christ's satisfaction, not our sanctification, is the ground of our justification; and yet, whenever He is justification, He is sanctification also, or else there could be no salvation; for without holiness no man shall see the Lord.

LATEST DISPATCHES.

A TALE OF THE RIVER—LEVEES BROKEN.

We learn from a reliable gentleman, who just arrived on the steamboat Sonora, that during a storm on Tuesday night, the wind veered to the north, and the rain fell in torrents from midnight till daylight on Wednesday morning. During the night there was a temporary rise of the river of several inches, and the waves, dashing against the soft and recently erected embankments, washed over and carried it away. Previous to the storm the water was within five inches of the top of the levee.

One movement was at the lower part of Grand Levee, at the line of the crevasse, and he states that the alarm and excitement of the inhabitants was tremendous. They were endeavoring to escape in skiffs, rafts, canoes, carts, and by every other available means.

While the excitement was at its height the news arrived that the great Morganza Levee had also given way, thereby greatly extending the area of destruction. As the levees were new, the breaches extended in both places very rapidly, and in the course of a few hours the water spread over a wide extent of country, and still swept onward toward the Gulf of Mexico.

The whole of that fertile territory extending from the river to Berwick's Bay will undoubtedly be deluged, and the destruction of property will be beyond computation. Planters who have been endeavoring by almost every superhuman exertion to build up their broken fortunes, are again sent forth from their homes by the pursuing waters—exiles from the Eden they so love. Incalculable distress must follow this terrible visitation of the angry flood, and for a season at least the most beautiful portion of our fair States will be a trackless waste.

The Gate Engineer has given up the broken levees in despair, and until the river falls in summer, the alligator will course over fields which a few days since were pulling on their spring suits of promise. Other levees below those which have broken, are in a doubtful condition.

At the last great overflow eleven parishes were submerged, but as the break on that occasion was much earlier in the season than on this, it is to be hoped that the deluge of this year will not spread over such a wide extent of country, and that it will not cover more than nine parishes. Be this as it may, the calamity will be sufficiently widespread to ruin thousands of our people. We trust that a general hospitality will be extended to the wanderers who so suddenly had to turn their backs upon their homes.

The English Admiral said the insult offered by the Chileans in proposing a naval combat, was sufficient justification of the bombardment. BABY IS KING.

A rose-cushioned cradle, where nestled within Soft cambric and flannel lie—pounds seventeen;
'Tis the throne of a tyrant; that pink little thing
Is an autocrat august—for Baby is king.

Good, solemn grandfather dares hardly to speak,
Or walk, lest the sleeper should hear his boots creak;
Grandma is a martyr in habits and cap,
While the monarch unsettles as well as her nap.

Papa—wise and mighty—just home from the house,
Grows meek on the threshold and moves like a mouse,
To share at the bundle, then outward he goes,
Like an elephant trying to walk on its toes.

The queen of the ball-room throws loyally down
Before him the roses she wore in her crown,
And sings little love-songs of whom she loves best;
He cries when she stops, like a merciless elf.

He flings right and left his saucy fat fist,
And then the next moment expects to be kissed;
He demands people's watches to batter about,
And meets a refusal with struggle and shout.

Then failing to conquer with passionate cry,
He quivers his lip, keeps a tear in his eye,
And so wins the battle—this wise little thing!
He knows, the world over, that Baby is king.

MEMORY AND CONSCIENCE.—Connected with conscience is the office of memory. The retrospections of the mind are as rapid as the flashing of lightning, more rapid are they than the transmission of ideas by the telegraph between Washington and Baltimore, or than that transmission will be when, as such may happen, thoughts are carried in a few moments round the earth. I knew a man who said that, in falling twenty feet, when he expected to die, the thoughts of a lifetime seemed to pass through his mind. He thought of his business, of his wife, of his children, and of that eternity to which he was going. A life seemed to pass through his mind and nothing was lost. So it will be when memory summons the acts of a life at the last tribunal. Nothing is lost. Thoughts once impressed, but apparently lost, will come out again. A life is written on our memory as with invisible ink. It is apparently lost to our frail sight while here. But, in the judgment light, it will be seen enveloped around us, and will be unrolled till every line and letter is made visible. I knew a sailor once, who said, that when once in a storm, on the giddy mast, while trying to furl a sail, and could not, he cursed God. It passed out of his mind for twenty years; but then, in a season of excitement he said, "Now I remember it; I am lost!"

CURIOUS ORIENTAL CUSTOMS.—There are many traits of character and custom in which the Arabs and Turks are our antipodes. They shave the head but not the chin, and we the reverse. With us the uncovering of the head in the presence of another is a mark of respect; with them a mark of disrespect. When they go into a place of worship they keep on the hat and take off the shoes and slippers; we do the opposite. They mount on the right side of a horse, and we on the left. They write from right to left, and we from left to right. We show our good breeding by taking the outside when we pass persons on the street; they by passing nearest to the wall. They do the honors of the table by serving themselves first; we by serving ourselves last. If a friend inquires after your wife, you regard it as a compliment; to inquire after theirs is an insult. Their morning dress is white; ours black. They finish their wooden houses from the top downwards; and we from the foundation up. The men wear frocks and the women pantaloons. we wash the hands by dipping them into water; they by having water poured over them.—Bausman's Sinai and Zion.

New Orleans, April 24, 1866.

SUBSTITUTE FOR REPORT No 1 OF THE COMMITTEE ON CHANGES OF ECONOMY, adopted by ayes 103, noes 42—on the change of the style and title of the "Methodist Episcopal Church South."

The subject of changing the style and title of the Methodist Episcopal Church South has been brought before the General Conference by memorials from various Conferences, asking for the change. Therefore,

Be it declared and ordained, and by a vote of two-thirds of the Delegates from the Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, present and voting in General Conference assembled in the city of New Orleans, on this 27th day April, A.D., 1866, it is declared and ordained that the style and title of our church shall be the "EPISCOPAL METHODIST CHURCH."

Resolved, That the Bishops or other Presidents, shall lay this ordinance before each of the Annual Conferences, and when three-fourths of the members of the said Annual Conferences present an voting, shall have concurred in the intent of said ordinance, then the Bishops shall declare and proclaim that the legal style and title of our church shall then and thereafter be "EPISCOPAL METHODIST CHURCH."

The following paper was then presented by the Bishops.

The Bishops having been asked what constitutes "two thirds of the General Conference," as demanded in the provision to the restrictive rules, Sec. II, Chap. 2d, Part 1st, of the Discipline, give the following as their opinion:

Two thirds of the General Conference are two-thirds of a legal quorum or more of the members who may be legally present and voting on any question.

COMMITTEE ON ITINERANCY—REPORT No. 2.

The Committee on Itineracy, to whom was referred the memorial from the Louisiana Conference, requesting the General Conference to so amend the Discipline as to require that all votes in a Quarterly Conference to license preachers, and to recommend preachers for admission into the traveling connection, or to deacon's and elder's orders, shall be taken by ballot, having had the same under consideration, do recommend that the petition be granted; and that the Committee on Revisals be instructed to amend the Discipline accordingly.

LEROY M. LEE, Chairman.

COMMITTEE ON ITINERANCY—REPORT No. 7.

The Committee on Itineracy having had the Journals of the several Annual Conferences under their consideration, and having, with much pains and no small amount of time and labor, as the records extend over a period of eight years, carefully examined the same, both as to the modes of keeping the journals and as to the acts and doings of the Conferences respectively, beg leave to state that they find many defects and errors in the manner of keeping these records, which, in their judgment, ought to be corrected, for the sake of historical accuracy and correctness in these important records of the executive administration of the Church, as well as for order and regularity in journalizing. In a general report of the Committee on Itineracy, at the General Conference of 1858, which was approved and ordered to be printed, and copies furnished to the several Annual Conferences for the guidance of their Secretaries, an attempt was made to secure the desirable ends of fullness, accuracy and uniformity in these records; but, as if in utter disregard of the advice of the General Conference, some of the records brought here are shamefully inaccurate and censurably defective. The Committee present hints on this subject that need to be corrected, if the requirement to keep a record of the Conferences is to be continued in the church:

I.—Defective Records.

Mississippi Conference—The reports of statistics exceedingly imperfect; and, in several instances, Reports are said to have been marked A, B and C, and filed, when they should have been entered on the journal.

Louisville Conference—In two instances the presiding officer is not named. Resolutions offered and reports of special committees referred to, but no record of their character, or as to what was done with them.

Ouachita Conference—Pages of the journal not numbered, and no margin left. Character passed and person elected without saying to what. Resolutions are passed and filed but not entered on the journal. No reports made to the body are recorded.

Memphis Conference—Notices of resolutions passed, but the resolutions not entered on the journals.

Rio Grande Conference—Frequent omissions to request the reading of the journal. Reports of committees read and not disposed of in any way. At one session, two of the questions of the General Minutes called, and not answer d in any way. At another session four of these questions recorded and no answers given. Journals generally defective.

Missouri Conference—Character examined without any statement of the suspension of the rule requiring the doors to be closed. No record of reports on any subject, only the fact stated that reports were made.

Arkansas Conference—Omission to state the suspension of the rule to sit with closed doors in the examination of character. Frequent omissions to read and approve the record; imperfect record as to the election of local deacons and elders; failure to enter the name of the presiding officer.

Western Virginia Conference—Conference statistics and appointments entered after the session closed and the journals were signed. Minutes sadly marred by numerous erasures, interlineations and expunging lines, and without the signature of the presiding Bishop.

Pacific Conference—Two members are reported as tried and expelled; but there is no record of charges or specifications, or of the proceedings in either case.

Kentucky Conference—Motions to insert words in resolutions, and neither words nor resolutions. Records frequently defective and unsatisfactory.

Tennessee Conference—Complaints against members, involving maladministration and moral character, disposed of, in one case, by preamble and resolution; others referred to committees. Reports presented, but no record of complaints, resolutions or reports.

Virginia Conference—Repeated failures to record that the minutes were read and approved. Journal of 1859 does not state that the Conference fixed the place of its next session.

Holston Conference—Records considerably defective and erroneous.

II.—Improper Conference Action.

Louisville Conference—It is stated in the records that a member (Rev. C. H. P——) was suffered to withdraw, with a letter from his presiding elder; yet, by subsequent action, it appears that the moral character of the party was implicated at the time he received said letter of withdrawal; also, that the Conference claimed the right to refuse to pass his character, and ordered his name to be stricken from the roll.

Ouachita Conference—W. H. H—— was expelled, and the record contains no specifications, and no account of the trial.

Memphis Conference—An appeal of J. D. M. from a Quarterly Conference is recorded, and the decision reversed; but there is no statement of the case, as to the charges and specifications, or the grounds of action in the case, in the journals.

Rio Grande Conference—Session of 1860, in the absence of a Bishop an Elder was called to the chair, and not elected to occupy it as President.

Arkansas Conference—Session of 1863, two persons were transferred to a distant Conference by the vote of the Conference; and at the session of 1865 a member was tried for imprudence, and there is no record of charge, specifications or evidence on which the Conference acted.

Pacific Conference—A member, J. G., was convicted of drunkenness and blasphemous language; yet he was acquitted and his character passed.

Mississippi Conference—A person (H. C. Burk) continued on trial, his case subsequently reconsidered and admitted into full connection, without examination in the prescribed course of study, as required by the Discipline.

Louisiana Conference—A minister (local) G. S. W., allowed to withdraw from the Church after the confession of crime. At the session of 1861 it appears that the Bishop (Early) being sick, appointed Rev. W. A. Smith as President of the Conference, and that he presided during the session, and signed the minutes at its close; but the Committee cannot reconcile with his Presidency the fact that, on page 198, Bishop Early decided an action of the Conference to be a violation of law; and the fact that Bishop Early reported, through the President, Smith, that he, the Bishop, could not fill an appointment for J. P. Brack, and that the Conference, by resolution, requested the Bishop to give Mr. Brack a nominal appointment. It does not seem clear from the record which of the two parties was President; whether either was, or whether each by turn, or whether both together made one.

In view of all these facts, and in order, if possible, to secure uniformity, accuracy and correctness in these important church records, your Committee recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That the Secretaries of the several Annual Conferences be, and they hereby are instructed, to record in their Conference Journals all the acts of the Conference, of every kind whatever, in the consecutive order of their occurrence, or in an appendix; especially of all complaints, charges and specifications, with the decisions in all such cases; and also, of all resolutions, reports of committees, statistics, memoirs of deceased ministers, and the appointments of preachers, and whatever else enters into and constitutes a complete historical record of each annual session.

2. Resolved, That the several Annual Conferences be, and they hereby are instructed, to require their Secretaries to conform their journals to the plan indicated in the preceding resolution.

3. Resolved, That the Bishops be, and they are hereby instructed to supervise the Conference Journals; to direct the Secretaries to the requirements of the General Conference as to the manner of keeping their Journals; to supply the Secretaries with copies of their decisions on all questions of law submitted to them in an Annual Conference; and to affix their signatures, in all cases, to the minutes of the Conferences over which they preside.

4. Resolved, That the General Book Editor be required to have this report printed, and copies of it sent to each of the Annual Conferences at their next ensuing sessions.

LEROY M. LEE, Chairman.

REPORT No. 2 OF COMMITTEE ON CHANGES OF ECONOMY.

The Committee on Changes of Economy beg leave to offer their Report No. 2, embracing the subject of Reception of Members into the Church, with a Form therefor, and giving directions respecting the social church meetings, viz: Prayer Meetings, Love Feasts, Class Meetings, and a regular meeting proposed to be held monthly, when possible, and at least quarterly, in every congregation of church members.

All these subjects have been referred to the committee, in sundry papers from Conferences and individuals, some asking generally for changes, others offering suggestions to shape the action of the Conference; and two papers deprecating any change.

After giving respectful attention to all these papers, the Committee present a digest of their labors in a plan, which, beginning with the reception of members into the Church, sets before them their duties and privileges in that relation, and which, therefore, is so adjusted as to its details, as to form, on the whole, a harmonious system.

We may state, briefly, that it guards carefully against admitting improper members into the Church, while it does not exclude from the fold of Christ sincere and steadfast seekers of salvation; it provides, also for extending the care of the church to those who are not ready to take on them the vows of church membership, but yet are penitents; it retains class meetings, without making attendance on them a condition of church membership; it gives more prominence to the prayer meeting than our system has given it heretofore; and it provides for regular meetings of the members of the church quarterly or monthly, when possible, in every congregation, to which meetings a specific work is assigned. It is believed that by these means discipline will be better maintained, and the membership of the church awakened to a new life; and a new energy imparted to them, adding greatly to the aggressive force of the Church.

The Committee recommend the striking out of the Discipline of Question 1, Answer 1 and 2, Section iii., Chapter 4; (pp. 138, 139) and Section ii, Chap. 2, (pp. 108, 114) Part II, and the insertion of the following:

SEC. I—On the reception of Members into the Church.

Ques. How shall persons be received into the Church?

Ans. 1. When persons offer themselves for church membership—let the preacher in charge inquire into their spiritual condition, and see that they are acquainted with the moral discipline of the church, and receive them into the church when they have given satisfactory assurances of their desire to flee from the wrath to come, and be saved from their sins; also of the genuineness of their faith, and of their willingness to keep the rules of the church.

2. When satisfied on these points, let the preacher bring the candidates before the congregation, whenever practicable, and baptize them; if they have not been baptized, and if they have been, propound to them the questions, and receive the answers contained in the baptismal vow—excepting, of course, the third question and answer.

Ques. Dost thou renounce the devil and all his works, the vain pomp and glory of the world, with all covetous desires of the same, and the carnal desires of the flesh, so that thou wilt not follow or be led by them?

Ans. I renounce them all.

Ques. Dost thou believe in God, the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth? and in Jesus Christ, his only begotten Son, our Lord? and that he was conceived of the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary? that he suffered under Pontius Pilate; was crucified, dead and buried? that he ascended into heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty, and from thence shalt come again, at the end of the world, to judge the quick and the dead?

And dost thou believe in the Holy Ghost, the Church of God, the communion of saints, the remission of sins, the resurrection of the body, and everlasting life and death?

Ans. All this I steadfastly believe.

Ques. Wilt thou then obediently keep God's holy will and commandments, and walk in the same all the days of thy life?

Ans. I will endeavor so to do, God being my helper.

3. Persons may be received by certificate from other orthodox churches without these formalities.

SECTION II—Of the Social Church Meetings.

Quest. 1. What means shall be adopted to promote personal religion, Christian fellowship, salutary discipline, an interest in all the institutions of the church and in their support?

Ans. Let every preacher in charge diligently and faithfully observe the following regulations respecting prayer meetings, love-feasts, class meetings, and regular church meetings.

Ques. 2. What directions are given respecting PRAYER MEETINGS?

Ans. 1. Let the preacher hold prayer-meetings, weekly, in every church when it is practicable; and when he cannot himself attend, let him engage local preachers, exhorters, class leaders, and others to hold them.

2. Let such meetings be held also at all other places in such charge, where there may seem to be a probability of their doing good.

3. It shall be the duty of the members to attend the regular prayer-meetings as frequently as possible.

Ques. 3. What directions are given respecting LOVE FEASTS?

Ans. 1. Quarterly, or at such other times as the preacher in charge may consider expedient, love-feasts shall be held with closed doors, to which, besides church members, serious persons may be admitted by him.

2. In conducting the love feast, after singing and prayer, the preacher may make a short address, setting forth the nature and design of this institution; every one present may then partake of a little bread and water in token of brotherly love; the members may then give brief details of their religious experience; and the meeting shall close with singing and prayer.

Ques. 4. What directions are given respecting CLASS MEETINGS?

Ans. 1. Let the membership of every church, wherever it is practicable, be divided into classes; and let the members be earnestly advised to attend the class.

2. Let the preacher in charge appoint one person in each class to be the leader thereof.

3. Let the leaders take personal cognizance of all the members of their respective classes, and, if possible, meet them weekly, to inquire of them how their souls prosper, giving them opportunity to speak, and advising, reproving, comforting and exhorting, as occasion may require. Let the exercises begin and end with singing and prayer.

4. Let the leaders meet the preacher and stewards once a week, whenever practicable, to report the names of any who may be sick or needy, or of any who neglect their duty, or who walk disorderly and will not be reproved.

5. Two or more classes may meet at the same time and place, at their own option, and their leaders may alternate in conducting the exercises.

6. Let the preacher visit every class once a quarter, if practicable, and report its condition to the Quarterly Conference; and let him hold General Class Meetings as often as he shall find it expedient.

Ques. 5. What directions shall be given respecting the holding of REGULAR CHURCH MEETINGS?

Ans. 1. All the members of the Church, and resident members of an Annual Conference, shall come together every month, or on Circuits at least every three months, at every appointment, to hold a Church Meeting, over which one of the preachers in the charge shall preside. It may be held at any time most convenient for assembling the greatest number of members; but if on the Sabbath, it should not interfere with the morning public worship.

2. A permanent Secretary shall be elected annually, at the first meeting after the session of the Annual Conference. He shall keep a record of the proceedings, and shall keep in a book and return to the Quarterly Conference of which he may be ex officio a member, all the statistics which the Discipline requires to be reported to an Annual Conference.

3. The roll of members shall be called at every meeting, unless otherwise ordered, and the meeting may strike off the names of any who, on account of removal or other cause, have been lost sight of for twelve months: Provided, however, that if such member appears and claims membership, he may be restored by a vote of the meeting.

4. The following is suggested as the general

Order of Business for Church Meetings:

1. Receive Reports—

1st. From the preachers, of their labors since the last meeting.

2d. From the class leaders.

3d. From the Sunday Schools.

4th. From the steward or stewards of that church.

II. The preacher shall inquire—

1st. What is doing for the relief of the poor of the church?

2d. Is the church here doing its duty for the cause of missions and other church enterprises, and for the collections ordered by the Annual Conference?

3d. Is the literature of the church circulated and read?

4th. Can the church extend its work by establishing additional prayer meetings, Sunday Schools, or in any other way?

5th. Can anything more be done to strengthen and build up the church in the community, and to advance the cause of Christ?

5. If the observance of this order of business is likely to protract the Church Meeting beyond a reasonable limit, the preacher may, from time to time, select the most important matters and bring them forward.

6. Let the Church Meeting be opened and closed with religious services, and conducted in a devout and prayerful spirit.

OBITUARIES.

Sister LEURENA OWEN was born in the year 1784, and died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Walker, in Mobile, Ala., on the 20th of April, 1866, aged about 79 years.

The subject of this notice professed religion and joined the M. E. Church when a little girl. Sister Owen was a faithful and consistent Christian for more than sixty years. Through a long and useful life she exemplified the character of a true Christian, by active and benevolent sympathy with the sick and suffering; by a firm adherence to the doctrines and usages of her church—a prompt, zealous, and habitual conformity to its discipline; and by a tender, loving and untiring devotion of heart and life to the domestic obligations of wife and mother. She loved to visit the hospitals and administer to the wants of the sick, wounded and dying soldiers; and as this aged mother in Israel would move through the different wards, the hearts of the poor sufferers would be cheered to know that they were not forgotten by a precious "mother." None knew her but to love her, for she was loved by all and regarded as one of earth's purest Christians. She was faithful in attending to the ministry of God's Word, and would take comfort from the truths of the Gospel of Christ while being dispensed by his servants. She loved the class-meetings, and was always present unless providentially hindered, and would speak freely of the dealings of God with her soul. It was a pleasure for sister Owen to meet in the class or love-feast and relate her Christian experience; she would speak of the "precious promises" of God to his people, and how she could trust God amidst life, with all its sufferings and disappointments, and feel assured that "All works together for good to them that love God." We remember the last time we met her in class and how encouragingly she spoke of her future prospects for glory and rest, and seemed only to be waiting for the summons as she desired to depart and be with Christ. For her "to live was Christ, and to die was gain." A life spent thus never fails to make the hour of death a period of happy trust in God and joyful hope of Heaven. Sister Owen was ready to die. In her last moments she found her Saviour present to comfort and cheer her spirits. She proved the sustaining power of the grace of God in the church below, and by that guide has been safely guided, we doubt not, to the rest that remaineth for the people of God, where "the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest." Our loss is her eternal gain. May her children follow her as she followed Christ, and be assured that "she is not dead but sleepeth; and they that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

J. J. GRACE.

Eastern Shore, Ala. Conf., April 25, 1866.

REV. GEO. W. POWELL, a worthy local preacher of the M. E. Church South, fell asleep in Jesus, at his residence, near Vicksburg, aged 66 years. Southampton, Va., was his birth place, and he lived in the place of his death for the last twenty five years.

He was for thirty five years a preacher of the Gospel. Alas, that we have not words at hand, the many recollections of others, of days and years, marked by usefulness, zeal and success, but his last days—though days, and weary months of affliction, were distinguished for the peace, hope, faith, and religious power, known only to the good man. Undismayed he met in heaven many souls, he had been instrumental in helping home to that glorious abode.

He raised a large family of excellent children, who will bear through life the precious remembrance of the parental love, prayerful toil, and zealous care bestowed on them—alike by himself, and their beloved mother—and will fulfill the wishes of those loving hearts, and win their way to heaven. Peace to thy memory, man of God.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

"The business of the current week," says the Price-Current of Wednesday last, "has opened with but few changes in the general market. Sugar and Molasses have continued nearly at a stand still; about the usual movement has taken place in Western Produce, but Pork, Lard and Flour have been in good request at advanced rates; and operations in our leading staple show but little increase, although the demand was stimulated and prices improved under the favorable tenor of the late foreign news."

COTTON—We stated in our last report that the market closed dull and drooping at 27 to 28 cents for Ordinary, 30@31 for Good Ordinary, 32 to 34 for Low Middling and 35 to 36c. for Middling. There was no material change on Saturday. The demand continued moderate and the supply limited, but no one buyer took 500 bales. The business embraced 1000 bales at about previous rates. On Monday, under the influence of the favorable foreign news, buyers came forward with more spirit, and, although factors advanced their pretensions 1 to 2c per lb., the sales summed up 1700 bales, partly at previous rates but mostly at an advance of 1 cent. Yesterday the market opened under the depressing influence of the Liverpool accounts of Saturday, the 28th ult., and although there was more disposition on the part of some factors to realize, yet, with a limited demand, the sales were confined to 400 bales at figures indicating prices had receded to current rates at the close of last week.

TOBACCO—Buyers have again been looking around, but holders are very stringent in their views, and the stock, which is small, is very firmly held at our quotations. There have been several sales to the city trade at those prices. A lot of 53 hogsheads, old, classing from Common to Choice Leaf, sold for export at 18½c per lb., and 7 hhds., classing Low Leaf to Fine, sold to the city trade at 15½ to 25. Quotations: Low Yellowed, Light, 5½ to 6; Good do., 6 to 6½; Common Leaf, 9 to 10; Fair, 12 to 14; Good, 15 to 17; Fine, 18 to 20; Choice Selections, 21 to 24. Heavy—6½ to 7; Good do., 7 to 7½; Common Leaf, 10 to 12; Fair, 14 to 17; Good, 18 to 20; Fine, 20 to 23; Choice Selections, 24 to 26.

SUGAR—Market dull and no demand except in a small retail way at previous prices. We quote 7 to 9c for Inferior Louisiana, 10 to 12c for Common to Good Common, 13½ to 14½c for Fair to Fully Fair, 15 to 15½c for Prime, 15¾ to 16c for Choice, the inside figures ruling mostly. A lot of 77 hhds. Fully Fair sold on Saturday at 14½c per lb. Cuba Sugar is retailing at 12½ to 12½c. for No. 12.

MOLASSES—The supplies of both foreign and domestic production are fair, but there is very little or no demand. There have been only a few retail sales of Cuba Molasses at 48 to 50c per gallon. Cuba is quoted by the cargo at 42 to 45c, and Louisiana is quoted at 45 to 50c per gallon. Negotiations are pending for a cargo of Cuba Molasses.

FLOUR—Superfine and the better grades are scarce and in much request, but operations are still restricted by light supplies, and prices are very firm and are ruling with an upward tendency. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 3000 bbls., in lots, at $7 12½ to $7 25 and $7 50 for Fine, $8 25 for Low Superfine, $8 50 to $8 75 for Good do., $9 25 for some of its merits, $10 37½ for Low Extra, $12 to $12 75 for Good Extra, and $14 per bbl. for Choice Extra. Yesterday there was a very fair demand, and what with favorable advices received from the West, for holders, and a very light stock of Superfine and Extra on hand, prices advanced fully 50c per bbl. and were still looking up, with sales of 2500 barrels, mostly for the trade but partly for shipment.

PORK—Pork has continued in request, and the stock, which was small, is very firmly held at $32 per bbl. for Mess. A lot of 50 bbls. Mess sold on Saturday at $32 per bbl., and 35 bbls. Prime at $26 50. Yesterday there was considerable inquiry, but very little offering. A lot of 1050 bbls. Mess sold at $31 50 and 50 at $32 per bbl. Mess retails freely at $32 per bbl.

BACON—Has continued in good demand, at retail, at full prices. There have been sales from first hands to dealers of about 220 casks, in various lots. There is a good retail demand, and Shoulders command 14½ cents, Hibbed Sides 17½c, Clear Sides 18c, and Sugar Cured Hams 25c per lb.

GREEN MEAT—But a small supply of Sides and Hams on hand. Sides and Shoulders retail 11½ to 14½c per lb.

LARD—Continues in good request, with an advancing tendency. Yesterday 100 tierces sold at 21½c per lb.

BUTTER AND CHEESE—The market is entirely bare of Choice Northern Butter, which is very much in request, but Common and Western commands 35 to 50c. Western 38 to 40c per lb. Cheese is in good supply but very dull at 22c for Western and Northern, and English 14@ at 27c per lb.

CORN—Is in liberal supply and the demand having fallen off, prices have declined 15c per bushel. The sales on Saturday and Monday were confined to 12,040 sacks, at 97½ to $1 per bushel for Mixed and Yellow, and $1 to $1 02½ for White. Yesterday the supplies on the landing were large and greatly exceeded the demand, which was very limited, and prices were declining rapidly in anticipation of further early and liberal receipts. The sales comprise 10,000 sacks mostly at 93c for White, Yellow and Mixed, some small lots White commanding a little more.

OATS—Are in good supply but not much in demand and prices are ruling in favor of buyers. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 5,000 sacks at 53, 54 and 55c per bushel for Good and Prime. Yesterday 2,500 sacks sold at previous prices, mostly 54 to 55c per bushel.

BRAN—The supply is not large, but the demand is limited and prices are about the same as previously. There were sales on Saturday and Monday 1,000 bags at $1 25 per 100 lbs. and yesterday 500 bags sold at the same price.

HAY—The supply is fair and ample, but is mostly poor in quality. There is not much demand, however and prices are lower. Prime Western has been retailing at $26 and Ordinary at $24 per ton. A lot of about 3,000 and one of 1,200 bales sold on private terms. We quote round lots at $22 50 to $24 per ton.

INDIA BAGGING—There has been only a retail demand, at 26c per yard in rolls.

COFFEE—The market is very firm, and prices are fuller, although there is not much demand. Dealers have been supplying the demand for the country at 25 to 28 per lb. currency, for Ordinary to Prime Rio.

Usual time for Penmanship, two to four weeks; do. do. Bookkeeping, three to five weeks; do. do. Commercial Course, six to twelve weeks; do. do. French or Spanish, twelve to twenty weeks—but lessons are not limited in any branch. All former students are invited to review their studies free of charge.

N. B.—We will qualify twenty-five young gentlemen as SCIENTIFIC TEACHERS OF PENMANSHIP and BOOKKEEPING during the spring and summer, so as to supply the good want of the country for such teachers.

The South must now educate her sons practically if she would develop her vast resources of wealth, which are much more numerous than those of Brazil. We have ample arrangements for 500 students during the current year. Parents can make liberal conditions for their sons if they apply soon. Those from the country can board with good families, speaking English, French, Spanish or German, at $25 to $35 per month.

A business education that enables one to earn $2000 to $3000 annually is the best fortune parents can give their sons. As the College has been in successful operation for more than a quarter of a century, and the practical plan here pursued received the unanimous commendations of the press and business community, and as several thousand of its former students are now in business in this city and all over the country, it is useless to go into an extended explanation of the plan or merits of the institution. So far as known, not one of the many thousands of former students is now out of employment; and so far as is known, not one in a thousand of those who have been sent for years to Europe or the North is qualified on returning home to enter a business house, although thousands of dollars have been expended on his education. A word to the wise is sufficient.

The city is now healthy. Persons from 12 to 50 years of age attend such branches as they may wish. By having a special Professor for each branch, three hours of the student's time is saved. Those who have entirely neglected their education for the past years can here be prepared for any situation in business, whether as bookkeeper, merchant or clerk, in from 3 to 6 months.

Students intended for this College should bring this circular or special directions, as every winter there are temporary establishments opened. Young students should put their funds in the hands of their merchants, or the President of the College.

N. B.—Crippled soldiers will have a liberal deduction made. Clergymen's sons pay half price only. Citizens and strangers are invited to call. College office, Room No. 7.

ONWARD.

BY HANANIAH.

Onward moves the wheels of time,
Through all space, o'er every clime;
Onward! restless nature cries,
Rest not, or our glory dies.

Onward! lift the future veil,
Rig the vessel, spread the sail,
Cut each cord that e'er confined
Science, art, or struggling mind.

Onward! let the lightning fly,
Onward! let the steam reply,
Onward! water, wind and fire,
Onward! onward! never tire.

Onward? Yes, begin anew,
Think of what you have to do.
Onward? Surely, go you must,
Until dust returns to dust.

Onward! leave that lazy track
Where you've wandered forth and back;
Raise your eyes, throw down that load
Of sloth, and find a nearer road.

Mind and body, head and heart,
Cast old moorings, take a start.
Onward! onward! unconfined,
Onward!—or be left behind.

Onward! Higher set the stakes,
Labriolate, take up the brakes;
Press in service every wire,
Talk with elemental fire.

Onward! progress, men of God,
Action is the magic word;
Guide the ship, and let her sail,
Anchor only in the vale.

Let the banner be unfurled,
Circumnavigate the world;
Onward, through benighted lands,
Where the heathen temple stands.

Onward, like the golden sun,
Rest not, till your work is done.
Onward! till your God shall say,
Cease from labor—come away.

Onward! then, through regions bright,
Where the cross still sheds its light.
Onward! to the heavenly clime,
Onward! through ETERNAL TIME!

A Sketch of a Sermon,

PREACHED BY BISHOP CAPERS, AT THE CONFERENCE IN NATCHEZ IN 1849.

Text—Romans 1, 14 and 15: "I am debtor both to the Greeks and the barbarians; both to the wise and to the unwise; so as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the Gospel."

Preaching is discoursing upon some religious subject. It is the great means devised for spreading the news of salvation to mankind. Paul's definition is, "The work of the spirit of faith."

The Spirit giveth to the preacher impressions, etc.

The object of preaching is to make men better, not to polish them; therefore, "preach as the oracles of God" direct, and not in view of your own fame. Our exemplar, Christ, was unflinching in his duty; follow his course. He gave his blood for the cause. If it costs our blood, we ought to be ready to offer it. It shall be given back to us. "I send you forth," says Christ, "as lambs amongst wolves." He sends you not to entertain people, but to call them to God.

It should not matter to you where you go if souls are there; it is duty to go, no matter under what disadvantages. The greater the cross the brighter the crown. The preacher is debtor to all mankind. Why? Because God has saved him from sin—has called him—has sent him forth—has chosen him an ambassador—has honored him in all these things, and in this has made him a debtor to all. He owed God a great debt, but Jesus Christ has paid that debt, and has transferred to him the obligation of calling men to him. The preacher stands in his place. Then are you "debtors to the Greek," the Jew, the barbarian, the bond and the free.

He told you to go preach. Perhaps you did not wish to understand Him; but did you not continually hear, "Go preach my Gospel?" Do not prefer to pay the debt to the rich, for you are debtor to all. "As much as in me is."

Nor can you limit it. Is it to a thousand, or to one hundred, or to only ten? Is it in the city full or in the country sparse? You must preach, "as much as in you is," to all you can. The time you cannot limit; whilst life shall last, whilst anything is left of you, you must use it all for God. There is no dispensation given when near the crown. No, no, no! Go on, and when not able to preach, pray!

But, young man, have you strength? Have you ardor? Don't do it all to-day; don't over do it; leave something for to-morrow, but continue with steady perseverance. Toil on—a glorious reward awaits you. Despise not small efforts—refuse not chances—although things may seem to be unfavorable, some opening may be made for you if you desire to advance the glory of God.

To illustrate this: When a young preacher I started in South Carolina. I called one evening late at the plantation of a rich rice planter, who was not, nor were any of his family, religious; but I was well received and made welcome, and on the morrow was requested to preach to his servants. The planter had seats made of planks and other material, in his house, and gathering all his slaves from the field, had them put on their clean clothes and assemble in this room; himself, wife and family also being present. And I tried to preach the Gospel of salvation. The wife of the planter was deeply awakened, and much feeling was manifested. I went my way, and when next I came round learned that this lady was dead, but that she was fully prepared and went rejoicing to her reward. What great good may be done when you least expect it! Sow your seed in all grounds. "He that goeth forth bearing precious seed weeping, may return bearing his sheaves with him."

NOTE.—The Bishops' sermon did not end here, but the paper upon which we were taking the notes did.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

Efficiency of the Divine Government.

The law of the Lord is perfect in its justice, and perfect in its adaptation, and only needs to be universally obeyed to secure universal happiness. Such a law ought to be enforced by the highest and most effective sanctions. The maintenance of this law ought not be left, and is not left to the caprice of individuals, to sanction universal irregularity and disorder. The ignorant and corrupt are not left to choose their own code of laws, and regulate their notions of right and wrong as interest or passion may dictate.

Neither is the enforcement of the laws left to public opinion. Public opinion itself has to be purified and keyed up to the law of God. Public opinion is incompetent to the support and execution of the law which is holy, just and good, because public opinion is like the source from whence it emanates—corrupt, capricious and imperfect. We all know that public opinion tolerates many errors in theory, and many vices in practice. For instance, it tolerates dueling, and makes murder honorable. Public opinion tolerates profanity, though as plainly forbidden in the Book as theft or perjury. Public opinion tolerates, in a multitude of ways, the desecration of the Sabbath, though the Divine law says thou shalt remember to keep it holy. Public opinion, to a lax extent, tolerates incontinency in one sex, while it utterly condemns it in the other. Public opinion winks at gambling, especially betting on elections, a practice that directly stabs at the purity of the elective franchise, the palladium of public liberty.

The maintenance and execution of the law of God is not left altogether to human governments, though they be ordained of God and are commanded to be a terror to evil-doers and a praise to them that do well. Human governments cannot always convict the criminal of guilt; neither can they always secure wise and honest agents to exercise their authority. There are, too, many crimes that human governments scarce attempt to prevent or punish—as, for example, common lying, uncharitableness, uncleanness and ingratitude. Many such crimes cannot be proved; the amount of guilt cannot be ascertained, nor the proper penalty inflicted. To give the Divine law the greatest efficiency, God executes it himself. God sees every act when it is committed, why it was committed, and all the attendant circumstances, so that none deceive or escape him. God's infinite holiness leads to the condemnation of every violation of his law, no matter by whom—master, servant, subject or king—and no matter how honorable, fashionable, pleasant or profitable. God's omnipotence is pledged to bring every work into judgment, and every secret thing, whether it be good or bad. "The soul that sinneth shall die, and the sinner shall be turned into hell with all the nations that forget God." To restrain the sinner the most awful judgments are announced and the most appalling doom foretold. To encourage the penitent, to animate all in well doing, a heaven of fullness and joy, and pleasures at God's right hand forevermore, are held forth as their sure and everlasting reward. We can conceive of nothing more efficient.

The Methodist Church North.

ITS UNCHRISTIAN CHARACTER.

The Baltimore Gazette, in alluding to a recent meeting of the Methodist Church North in this city, and the speech of one of the distinguished personages present, gives the following history of this religious organization and the sectional and partisan spirit it has exhibited in the last few years:

There is no political or religious organization upon this continent which did so much to provoke the revolution on the part of the South, or which manifested so relentless and brutal a spirit during the war, as the Methodist Church North. For years the ministers and its conferences waged a vindictive war against the institutions of the South, until they forced the Methodists of that section to separate from those who were so vilely persecuting them. Not satisfied with agitating and determining the question of the sinfulness of slavery within the pale of their own church, they were determined to make it a political dogma as well as an article of faith. The church became, in very truth, a church militant, and went forth, like Mahomet, offering to all who resisted it either the new discipline or the sword. It called a political problem a case of conscience, and spoke of the slaughter of human beings as God's work. Were this great politico-religious organization content now to busy itself about the things which it professes to regard as alone worth attending to in this world, the peace of the country would be considerably promoted.

But it is very evident to us that the Methodist Church North is going to discover that Providence has prepared another mission for it, and desires it to regulate the qualification of voters for the people of the Southern States. This is very clearly fore-shadowed in the speech delivered in New York, on Monday, by Chief Justice Chase at a meeting held to celebrate the centennial anniversary of the foundation of Methodism in America. Judge Chase spoke at considerable length and in glowing terms of the labors which the Methodist Church had accomplished, and especially of the very active part it took in sustaining the war. He then referred to its future, and assumed that it was still to continue to exert itself as a political organization. He enunciated for the hundredth time that new and remarkable truth, that it is impossible to "look upon the face of any human being and not feel that he is our brother man." He might also have said the same of the human foot. After commending Congress for passing the Civil Rights bill, Mr. Chase added: "A step further remains upon the steps; for it is a long work this raising a whole people; but one of these steps, as I count it, is that they to whom you have given freedom must be permitted to defend it by the ballot."

The applause which greeted this and similar announcements was too hearty and general to leave us in doubt as to the opinion and feelings of those who attended this so-called religious festival. The Chief Justice then earnestly expressed his belief that the Methodist Church is divinely commissioned to inculcate his political views. "Who can tell what this nation is to become if it is only faithful to itself? who can measure the work that this church has to perform in making this nation true to itself and true to its God? I verily believe that but for this church nothing of that which we have thus far realized could have been accomplished. I verily believe that God in his providence raised up this church. I do not say that He did not give appropriate spheres of action to other churches; but I do verily believe that God raised up this (Methodist) church for the purposes of aiding in leading this nation to these grand results."

Here we have the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court urging men to agitate for the purpose of breaking down State laws with which they have no right to meddle, and calling on a religious denomination to preach up a new political doctrine. And, with a mock solemnity, he deliberately assured the fools who applauded him that he verily believed God had raised up the Methodist Church as an instrument through which to make voters out of black men, and that the nation could only be "true to itself and true to its God," by extending the elective franchise. No intelligent man will suppose that we mean to condemn all the Methodists and Methodist congregations in the North. We know that there were many individuals and clergymen who refused to foment discord or to meddle, as churchmen, with political affairs. But it is an indisputable fact that the great body of the Methodist Church North, in the name of Christianity, and as a religious organization, energetically promoted and prosecuted our civil war. When the destinies of the country are so greatly influenced by such men and such churches, and when we remember what they have done in the past, how is it possible to regard the future without apprehension?

A New Explosive Compound.

Elsewhere we give some account of the new explosive compound called nitro-glycerine. Several most frightful accidents have occurred from it recently. Monday April 16th, two boxes of the compound exploded at San Francisco, near Wells, Fargo & Co.'s building, which did $200,000 worth of damage, and, worst of all, was fatal to some eighteen persons, among them some of the first men of the city. The day after a premature explosion of a blast, in which nitro-glycerine was used, occurred near Colfax, Cal., instantly killing six men. A San Francisco dispatch says, in regard to the first-named casualty, the explosion was caused by concussion in opening a leaking box of the compound, the owner refusing to receive it in consequence of its damaged condition.

At Aspinwall, April 3d, an explosion occurred, destroying life and property to an extent far beyond that in San Francisco. The British steamer Europeau arrived at Aspinwall on the morning of April 2d, and on the afternoon of the same day came along side the railroad company's wharf, generally used by this line, and commenced discharging her cargo. Nearly, if not all the local freight had been delivered, when about 7 o'clock on the morning of the 3d a terrific explosion occurred on board, which tore away the upper parts of the ship and blew away large plates off the side. The wharf at which the vessel was unloading, and which was some four hundred feet long, was literally torn to pieces; the superstructure was completely demolished to within a hundred feet of the freight-house, and hardly a plank remained in the entire length of the structure which was not wrenched from its fastenings. Immediately in front of where the vessel lay a gap was cut through the wharf, piles, planking, etc., all disappearing. The ship and wharf both caught fire, and the latter was saved from entire destruction only by the exertions of several citizens, who got the fire-engines to work, and after a few hours extinguished the flames, regardless of the risk they incurred from another explosion of the burning ship.

Scarcely a building in the place escaped without more or less damage, those of a substantial nature suffering most; nearly all the brick and stone buildings were badly injured.

The most awful part of the catastrophe was the loss of life and suffering attending it. Of the number of killed and missing it is impossible to give a correct estimate, but the number may safely be put down at fifty, and is, says the Panama Star, more likely to prove over this number than under it. Of the forty-one men comprising the crew of the European, nine were killed and twelve missing.

Fears being entertained that a second explosion would occur, it was thought best to have the burning ship towed into the stream. The royal mail steamship Tamar, which had arrived the evening previous, immediately got up steam and prepared to tow out the burning ship; but before this could be accomplished, another explosion took place, though not of sufficient force to cause any injury. The Tamar then made fast to the burning hulk and towed her out. The two vessels had barely reached the opposite side of the bay when another explosion, more terrific than the first, occurred, but fortunately, the ship being far from the city and in deep water, no harm resulted. The last explosion is supposed to have broken up the hull, as in less than half an hour after it occurred, the unfortunate ship went down. The top of her smoke stack is the only part now visible.

At first the cause of the explosion was wrapped in mystery, but at last it was discovered that some twenty cases of glonoine or nitro-glycerine was on board under an ordinary bill of lading.

The number of lives lost was 67, and of property destroyed $1,200,000.

Nitro-glycerine oil is the invention of Albert Nobel or Nabel, a Swiss engineer, now in New York city, "ready to prove by experiment, in any hall, that it is not explosive, unless subjected to a heart of 3295 Fahrenheit!" Not many people, it is likely, will buy tickets to hear him demonstrate its innocuousness. No compound is more destructive. A man had as soon carry matches and powder in his pockets together, as to have a vial of the nitro with him. One pound of it has blasting powers equal to nine pounds of the best powder. If it could be used with safety, its value for blasting rocks and other similar purposes could scarcely be over-estimated. In the small city of Cochurn, in one of the coal districts of Westphalia, Germany, a miner went to a store to get some of it in a tin pail, which happened to have a little turpentine on the bottom. An explosion followed, as soon as it was poured in, tearing both clerk and miner to pieces, and plowing the store into fragments. In another case, where a miner in the Prussian province of Silesia attempted to cut some of the frozen oil with a hatchet, he was instantly killed, portions of his body being actually blown half a mile.

The results of the explosion of a quantity of it on a steamer at sea would be terrible in the extreme. Regulations as much more stringent than those with regard to the transportation of gunpowder and other explosives, as the nitro-glycerine is more dangerous than all other explosives, should be promptly made and rigidly enforced with regard to this compound. Otherwise there is no safety for life or limb.

A Modern Carvosso.

We clip the following from a biographical notice of Stewart Hamilton, of Chicago, who died in that city in November last:

He was born in the North of Ireland, on the 17th of March, 1794. He was converted in 1818. So thoroughly did grace revolutionize and regenerate his heart and life that he soon straitened up into a strong christian character. Ten days after his conversion he led his first class, and for forty-six years he adorned the office to which he was so early called. His religous nature was deep and strong, and the years of faithful watching, and working, and praying in his Master's vineyard, only developed and matured it. When the preacher was absent he often took charge of the meetings. His piety and knowledge of the deep things of God, gave him great power in teaching and leading the children of faith.

He came to America in 1848, and to Chicago in 1850. He soon took the position due to his gifts and devotion. For two or three years he acted as city bible agent. He next entered upon the discouraging and arduous duties of the city missionary. Many a poor backslider was brought forth from his concealment, and made active and efficient in the church, by the labors of this man. Stately in his bearing, venerable in his appearance, with the light of eternity resting upon his head, and the joy of heaven beaming from his face, his honest, straightforward exhortations carried conviction to the wandering. He left behind him a blessing, as if some chosen spirit from Heaven had entered the humble home.

During the years of his connection with the Old Clark-street M. E. Church, he led from one to three classes regularly. They were full, and the members invariably grew in grace. His life was a prolonged exemplification of the doctrine of Christ. His sickness and death demonstrated the power of grace. Confined to his bed for twelve months, suffering all the pain of the breaking up of a strong constitution, with all the odds of poverty against him, he never wavered in his faith nor murmured at his lot. His conversation was a feast. One could almost hear the rustle of the angel's pinions around his couch. He often said, "I am on the shore." "I am waiting." "I have no doubts." "I know in whom I have believed." His ready and apt quotation of the Scriptures and of our hymns, that so strongly marked his life, did not fail to the last. A short time before his death he said, "Do you not see Him? Don't you see him? I will praise Him." The last word that fell from his lips was "Jesus."

SENTENTIOUS SAYING OF DR. WITHERSPOON.—Not to hit a mark is to miss it; almost persuaded to be a Christian, is to remain an impenitent sinner; almost to enter the gate of heaven, is to sink down to hell.

Mohammedanism.

Next to Christianity, Mohammedanism is more widely diffused than any religion in the world. It extends in an unbroken line from the shores of the Atlantic to the wall of China. It occupies all northern Africa, Syria, Asia Minor, Arabia, Persia, Bokhara, and the vast steppes of Tartary. Two hundred millions of the human race, or about one-sixth of the population of the globe, are Mohammedans; and more than twenty millions of these are subjects of Queen Victoria. The followers of the False Prophet in the British Possessions in India alone outnumber the inhabitants of England and Wales.

Mohammedanism is a strange faith. It might be called a religion of paradoxes. Gibbon has defined it in a sentence: "The faith which, under the name of Islam, Muhomet preached to his family and nation, is compounded of an eternal truth and a necessary fiction—that there is only one God, and that Mahomet is the apostle of God." Truth and falsehood are combined in Islam as they are in no other system. The loftiest conceptions of the Divine unity and essence are linked to a moral code not only degrading, but absolutely repulsive. The system, viewed as a whole, is an outrage upon reason and upon common sense. The prayer of Islam is cold, heartless mummery; its deepest piety is the grossest and most abandoned profligacy; its saints are idle, lazy vagabonds, whose filthy persons and abominable vices are an outrage upon decency; its paradise is a scene of licentious revelry, from which the pure mind recoils with disgust and horror. In its nature, Islam exhibits the characteristics of its wild desert home. It is fierce, intolerant, vindictive. Love finds no place in it. Mercy is unknown in the fiery code of the Arabian Prophet. To renounce Islam is death; to speak, write or act against it is death; to question the divine mission of its prophet is death. In its haughty exclusiveness it will listen to no argument; it will bear no remonstrance; it will tolerate no liberty of thought; it will brook no comparison with any other faith. The Koran, slavery, or the sword, are the only alternatives which a dominant Mohammedanism offers to mankind.

The Radical Plan.

The Committee on Reconstruction, or, as the President very aptly stigmatized it, "the Central Directory," have finally agreed upon their report.

The Committee recommend the adoption of a Constitutional Amendment, and the enactment, under authority thereof, of two laws. This proposed amendment and these laws are printed elsewhere, and will, of course, be carefully examined by every one who feels any interest whatever in the future welfare of the South, and indeed in the prosperity of our common country. In this article we propose to explain very briefly this "plan" of the Radicals. In another we discuss it more fully.

By the adoption of the Constitutional Amendment the Committee propose:

First: To nullify every law, Federal and State, which makes any distinction between negroes and white people; and to confer upon negroes every privilege and immunity which any white citizen of the United States enjoys.

Whether it is the purpose of this clause to confer the right of suffrage upon negroes or not, it is not clear, but we do not question that such will be the interpretation put upon it, if the amendment shall ever be adopted. It certainly places the negro above every non-naturalized foreigner in the country, and confers upon these late slaves privileges and immunities which are denied to every free born Irishman, yeoman, or other foreigner that resides in our midst.

Second: To take away from the Southern States the right to which they are entitled under the Constitution as it now stands, to count the negroes as a part of their representative population, unless they shall confer upon these the elective franchise, and herein the Committee again discriminate against foreigners.

Third: To exclude all persons who participated in the rebellion from voting for members of Congress, President or Vice President, till after the Fourth of July, 1870.

Fourth: To prevent the payment of debt contracted in aid of the rebellion, or claims for compensation for loss of slaves.

The bills which the Committee report are to be enacted after the ratification of the amendment, and for the purpose of giving practical effect to its provisions. The first proposes to admit the Senators and Representatives from such Southern States as shall ratify the amendment.

The second declares that the President, Vice President and heads of departments of the Confederate States; members of the thirty-sixth Congress of the United States; those officers of the army and navy of the United States who took part with the Confederacy; all officers of the Confederate army above the rank of colonel; and all officers of the navy above the grade of master; the governors of each of the Confederate States, and many others, shall be hereafter ineligible to office under the United States.

Such is the Committee's plan: the disfranchisement of the Southern whites and the enfranchisement of the negro; the complete subordination of the white man to his late slave; the establishment throughout all those States of the superiority of the negro to his former master. Could anything be more unjust, more infamous, more horrible?

To this plan stands opposed that of the President. Between them the people of the North are to choose. What their choice will be remains to be seen. But we have too much confidence in the justice, good sense and goodness of heart of the people of the North to believe that they are willing, by such vindictive legislation, to utterly destroy the people with whom they lived so many years in peace, and who, in a four years' war, demonstrated their posession of heroism, constancy and every virtue which adorns a people.—New York News.

Failing Eyesight.

When the eyesight is beginning to fade, the eye should be favored as much as possible; this can be done:

1. By sitting in such a position as will allow the light to fall upon the page or sewing obliquely, over the shoulder.

2. By not using the eyes for such purposes by any artificial light, or before sunrise or after sunset.

3. By avoiding the special use of the eyes, in the morning before breakfast.

4. By resting them for half a minute or so while reading or sewing, or looking at small objects, by looking at things at a distance or up in the sky; relief is immediately felt by so doing.

5. Frequently pass the balls of the fingers over the closed eyelids, towards the nose; this carries off any excess of water into the nose itself, by means of the little canal which leads into the nostril from each inner corner of the eye, which canal tends to close up, in consequence of the slightest inflammation, which attends weakness of the eyes.

6. Keep the feet dry and warm, so as to draw any excess of blood from the other end of the body.

7. Use eye-glasses at first, carried in the pocket, attached to a guard, for they are instantly adjusted to the eye with very little trouble; whereas if common spectacles are used, such a process is required to get them ready, that to save trouble, the eyes are often strained to answer a purpose.

8. Wash the eyes abundantly every morning. If cold water be used, let it be flapped against the closed eye with the fingers of the right hand, not striking hard against the ball of the eyes. But it would seem a better plan to open the eyes in pure blood-warm water, because warm water is more penetrating than cold; it dissolves more readily and rapidly any hardened matter that may be about the lids, and is more soothing and more natural.

9. The moment the eyes feel tired, the very moment you are conscious of an effort to read or sew, lay aside the book or needle, and take a walk for an hour, or employ yourself in some active exercises not requiring the close use of the eyes.—Hall's Journal of Health.

THE SCHOOLMASTER WANTED.—The following, says the Mobile Advertiser, is a copy of a bill sent in to a gentleman some time since:

Pade, Josef ———

Can any of our readers interpret it? At first we took it for Apothecaries' Latin; judge our surprise, then, when the key was given to us, to find the above inscrutable items were simply these:

HOW TO OBTAIN FRIENDS.—Get not your friends by mere compliments, but by giving them sensible tokens of your love. It is well worth while to learn how to win the heart of a man the right way. Force is of no use to make or preserve friends, who are animals that are never caught nor tamed but by kindness and pleasure. Excite them by civilities, and show them that you desire nothing more than their satisfaction; oblige with all your soul that friend who has made you a present of his own.

The largest Sunday school in the world is in Stockport, England. In one building there are now over 4000 under the same roof, divided among eighty-six rooms. There are over 300 teachers, and all except five of these have been scholars. What is remarkable is that over 2000 of these scholars are past 16 years of age, and more of them are boys than girls, and more of the teachers are males than females. Besides instruction in Scripture, they teach writing and elementary book-keeping, with no books used except the Bible. A great portion of the scholars are operatives in factories, and have no other means of education.

NORTHERN METHODIST FANCY STOCKS.

We have more than once been well entertained in perusing those quiet, elegant pamphlets which most stock companies have prepared as a fair exhibit of the true value of their stock. Besides the figures, which are rather wearisome, there is often in these little books a good deal of right pleasant reading, and in some few instances we have found poetry.

It occurs to us that after this style the M. E. Church North should have prepared a statement of its interest in and labors for the colored people. Not that the reader is to suppose there are many colored Methodists in the North belonging to the Northern Methodist Episcopal Church. It is very doubtful if a single congregation of colored people can be mustered in all the New England States belonging to that Church. We believe that there are colored people attached to it in the Baltimore and Philadelphia Conferences, but, with that exception, in all the vast sweep of Northern Methodism, we suppose there are not three thousand colored members.

It is a little strange that this zeal, latent for many long years, should so suddenly flame out and threaten to consume everything colored belonging to Southern Methodism, or any other Methodism. With all the singing, and haranguing, and agitating of intense New England Methodism upon its favorite theme, the Ethiop either did not stretch out his hands that way, or the Northern Methodists were not quite ready to receive him. It is very certain these twain did not choose to live together in one church. It is as rare to find a colored member of the M. E. Church in New England as it is to find a colored Quaker. What late years have effected we know not, but it used to be within our knowledge that the Society of Friends were content to get to Heaven all white. People who are religiously the most zealous for the negro, had the least to do with him. Mark, we say that religiously they had nothing to do with him. Preach and pray for him they did, lustily enough, too; but there the thing ended. Yes, one thing more—they wrote; absolutely flooded the land with colored religious literature. But all this did not bring them in contact with the object of their inflamed zeal. One single missionary to the colored people on an Alabama plantation preached to more colored people than all New England Methodism, and practically did more to bring the sons of Africa to Jesus Christ than all the New England Conferences.

It must not be supposed that all this writing and preaching involved of necessity an interest in the race about which it revolved. The theme was worked after the manner of getting up and working an East Tennessee copper mine. The mine is valuable not because of the amount of copper to be had, or that is actually obtained from it, but in proportion to its availability for forming a good copper stock. And no Wall street jobber ever made a better thing out of a half extinct Georgia gold mine than the Northern Methodists have made out of the "neglected" negro. He constituted the main item of church politics. Partly moral, partly religious, and partly political, everything relating to this many-sided subject, the origin of the race, its past, its future, the actual and the possible of the negro, became the all-engrossing theme of ambitious churchmen. The pulpit, the class-room, the Sunday school, every pious and every official place, rang with solemn changes upon the sable sons of sorrow.

The story is a long one. It is enough to say things came presently to this pass: One had to think with these Ethiopic church politicians, to howl with them, or else quit them. A large body of the Methodist Church preferring the latter alternative, asked, for peace sake, to be permitted to retire to themselves. And in a lucid moment the General Conference of the M. E. Church set off that Southern, unheroic, unphilanthropic, sublunary, unspeculative, peace-loving portion to itself, and entitled it the M. E. Church South. The matter of the loss of several hundred thousand members did not check the headway of this high-pressure, higher-law humanitarianism—no, not in the least. It intensified the idea, by attaching to it a new significance. Believing themselves persecuted by somebody for something, its advocates henceforth incorporated it into the very life and action of Northern Methodism—made it a test of zeal, of talent, of official fitness, of righteousness, of sanctification, and finally, of membership. To be "sound on the goose" was the only soundness; all other soundness was unsoundness. Every position in the entire church was held upon the Ethiopic tenure. Men became Bishops, Editors, Book Agents, Secretaries, Presiding Elders, Stationed Preachers, Stewards, everything officially great and officially small, according as they accepted the one idea which penetrated and pervaded the whole body ecclesiastic. He that could most speedily and thoroughly prostrate his whole mental and moral being before the majestic conception of the inevitable and universal "COMING MAN," as Dr. Curry is pleased to announce him, shot up by this single merit into the very best places, while individuals who at one time were thought to be far in advance of their age were soon outstripped, "shelved" and displaced, by the more sagacious or more philanthropic. As available stocks, the Mariposa Mining Company or the New York Central Railroad are not to be mentioned with the Congo M. E. CENTRAL, office 200 Mulberry street.

But what was done by Northern Methodism, meanwhile, for the colored man himself? We see what the African has done for it, but what has it done for the African? So great soundness upon the principles involved must work out some great practical benefit. Churches which rally around and magnify the colored man, the colored man should in turn rally to. Why is it, then, that whenever the colored man has had occasion to know well these vaunting friends, he has avoided them?

The African M. E. Church gives Northern Methodism a wide berth—looks upon it as a persecuting foe. Forty years acquaintance, side by side, with this great self-styled advocate of the colored man, has not awakened in these religious-minded colored people either admiration or affection. In the recent communication from the Delegates of this Church to the General Conference of the M. E. Church South they say:

3. Resolved, That we believe it is the manifest design of the agents of the M. E. Church North to absorb the African M. E. Church in the United States of America, and the colored churches under the jurisdiction of the M. E. Church South.

4. Resolved, That it is vitally important that we unite in an unbroken phalanx to oppose, by all Christian and prudent means, the aggressions now being made upon us both, by the accredited agents of the M. E. Church North.

JOHN TURNER,
CHARLES BURCH,
M. M. CLARK, M. D.,
} Delegates.

This Colored Church numbers 550 traveling and 1500 local preachers, with 80,000 members and $4,000,000 church property. Its strength, aye, and effectiveness, as set forth in the letter of its Bishops to the General Conference, must have surprised many of our readers.

Now that the Northern Methodists should seek to either possess, crush out or annihilate everything that is of the M. E. Church South, we have come to believe quite possible. But what have the African Methodists done that these friends of the "poor African" should seek to devour them? Not long since the Provost Marshal at Natchez had to interfere and bring before him the agents of Northern Methodism, preachers at that, for disturbing and attempting to possess themselves of a congregation of African Methodists. This love that swallows you is a little too strong, even for the African. A "zeal for the Lord's house," which eats up other people, is, to say the least of it, unscriptural.

By main force the Government placed Northern Methodists in possession of our colored churches in this city; and as yet they have not restored them to the Church South. That the President will not abet this forcible seizure we are confident, as we are that he will not override the courts of the land. Up to this time, by this Gospel of Power Northern Methodism holds our colored membership, and vaunts itself of the voluntary adhesion of our colored people. Missionary money paid to a few of the preachers, and the force of the military, may for a while blind, control and overawe the mass; but there is a day of enlightening and relieving justice not far off, that will lift this weight of Northern ecclesiastical love and enable our colored people to see things as their brethren of the African M. E. Church throughout the United States see them.

Southern Methodism has had nothing to say on the subject of slavery or the negro since it became a Church. We never heard the abstract doctrines and discussion of these themes in the pulpit, either on great or on ordinary occasions. She has never made it a speciality. Individuals—one or two, no more—may have written on the subject; but we challenge proof to the contrary of what we affirm, that neither in its periodicals, its councils or its ministrations, has it for twenty years scarcely adverted to the subject, excepting only as it urged the support of colored missions. It has bent to the noble and lowly toil of teaching the Gospel to the slave, until it could number in its fold a greater harvest of souls than all the fields of missionary toil in all the pagan world could present, as the result of the labors of all other churches beside.

It is no small recognition of this high attitude of the M. E. Church South as the friend of the colored man that the African M. E. Church, by its delegation, seeks to affiliate with us, and resolves "That it shall ever be our most earnest endeavor to perpetuate that reciprocity of Christian and fraternal feeling here begun." Our Church heartily responds to this sentiment, and will aid, to its utmost, the labors of these colored friends of the colored man.

"LET ANOTHER PRAISE THEE," ETC. Recollecting this advice of the wise man, we refrained from noticing the complimentary dinner to the Baltimore Delegation of the General Conference by Mr. W. R. Stuart, a Marylander, but for many years past a merchant of this city. We copy from the Memphis Christian Advocate of the 2d inst. a spirited account of this dining.

In the same wise modesty we are expecting an account from somewhere of the banquet which the ladies gave the Conference, and of the speeches which enlivened the more substantial cheer so generously spread by them under the oaks of the City Park.

NEW ORLEANS HOSPITALITY.

We should do injustice to the Crescent City and ourselves did we not acknowledge the unbounded hospitality of the city of New Orleans. No General Conference, we believe, has been more generously entertained than the one just closed. It reminded us of "the better days of the republic" when the South had a world-wide fame for hospitality, surpassing, perhaps, any portion of the civilized world. When we take into consideration that many of them had but recently returned to their homes after years of absence, with but little time to make preparations for the Conference, we were surprised to find them so well prepared to receive the members of the Conference. The change in the labor system made it difficult to procure servants. In some instances these boarded their preachers, at the best of houses, and footed the bills themselves. We were scarcely permitted to dine at home in consequence of the numerous invitations to dine with our friends.

There was one dinner given to the Baltimore delegation that deserves a notice at our hands:

Mr. William R. Stewart, of the firm of R. W. Powell & Co., No. 17, Carondelet street, invited about thirty of us to partake of his hospitality, at the St. James Hotel. It was a most magnificent affair. It is not of the creature comforts provided for the outer man that we wish to speak. These came and passed before us in succession, so that the most fastidious appetite could be perfectly satisfied. It is of the flow of soul that succeeded in the speeches made upon that most interesting occasion, that we wish to speak. I wish a reporter had been there that you might now enjoy some of the intellectual, historical, moral, spiritual feast we had along that table. It was not like some sermons that I mentioned in one of my letters, great lengthwise, but short, terse, appropriate, full of genial outbursts of generous, sympathizing hearts knit together by the strongest ties; united in a common, glorious cause in the strongest bonds of Christian affection. Dr. E. W. Sehon, our Missionary Secretary, who sat at the foot of the table, addressed our host, Brother Stewart, who sat at the head. He thanked him, in behalf of all present, for the sumptuous repast we had enjoyed, and presented the Baltimore delegation, on whose behalf this dinner was provided. He welcomed them most heartily among us as members of our family, from whom we had been for years separated. Dr. S. S. Roszell, of that Conference, responded, expressing the most profound gratitude for the distinguished honor conferred upon their Conference through their delegation.

Dr. Palmer, the Pastor of First Presbyterian Church of the city, was among the invited guests. He was called for, and in a very appropriate address, congratulated the company upon the joyous occasion which had brought us together. He spoke feelingly of the unity of the Church, illustrating it by the grape. There is a oneness among the grapes, but when pressed into wine that union becomes more perfect. So with the Churches of the South. We have been "pressed" by the terrible strife through which we have passed, but it has shown to the world that the union of the Church, in this desolated land, is one and indissoluble. There is a glorious future for the united hosts of Israel in this fair land of ours.

Dr. C. K. Marshall was really the marshall of the occasion, and faithfully did he perform the duties assigned to him in his own peculiar manner.

He thanked Brother Stewart, most sincerely, for giving them so delightful an opportunity of mingling the best feelings of our hearts together. He belonged to one of the best houses in the city, who were engaged in conveying the snowy staple of the sunny South, through its natural channel to the commercial world. He aided in giving to our section of the country the influence which it has in the civilized world, and contributed the material aid necessary to carry on the glorious work of evangelizing the nations of the earth.

Dr. L. M. Lee had partaken of the bountiful dinner, so that he was too full to speak.

Bishop Pierce said that his manner of life had been such as to unfit him for an impromptu speech, and that an official engagement prevented his remaining longer with us.

The Bishops elect were present, and they would not make a set speech upon the occasion, yet, by their conversation and genial flow of soul, showed they heartily participated and appreciated the interesting occasion.

Dr. A. S. Green said: Brother Stewart—"We have heard many things said round this table with regard to where we are from. As for myself I am from every place but this, and if I were to eat much more I would not be able to get away from here. This, Brethren, is no ordinary dinner party. There are ministers around this table who have been engaged in the work of the ministry for sixty years or more. The experience and observation of those now present, written, would form a perfect history of the church in the South, and would be a compilation of facts and incidents, such as the world does not now contain, and it is with unfeigned pleasure that we are feasting with the Rev. Dr.——, and it is a fact worthy of remark that all the other churches except those represented at this table, are exclusive, while we grant toleration and salvation to all churches. It may be truly said in regard to the church in this country, what hath God made it? When I first visited this city, in 1829, I stopped at the house of Mr. Patrick Thompson, in company with Bishop McKendree. The principal, and I may say the only church belonging to the Methodist church, was a small frame building, out in the direction of the swamp, located in the midst of cotton presses—and I shall never forget it. One member of that little church, at the close of my first sermon, I was met by an old French lady at the foot of the pulpit, who gave me her hand, and said people of the same religion did not need an introduction; go home with me, which I did, and found her the nursing mother of the little church, and an angel of mercy to all traveling preachers, and at this day reaping the reward of a long life of devoted piety. The other point at which I preached was a Mariner's church, then located on the levy. And now the church has spread itself all over these lands, and while I look around me, upon those that are now feasting together around this board, it is refreshing to think of that bond of love and brotherly affection by which we are bound together, and while it is sad to think that we will feast together around the same board on earth no more, yet the bond of friendship that now binds us together shall never be broken, and I hope and trust in God that we will ultimately go into a feast to go out no more, and sit down to a table that shall never be drawn.

Dr. J. B. Walker said: Mr. Stewart—I am not much addicted to post prandial speeches. Let me, gentlemen, say, that that Brother Stewart is a steward in the largest and best sense, and this is a most appreciative audience, surrounded as I am by beautiful and fragrant flowers, and eyes that flash with genius. I see around me representative men who have won fame on many fields—men from the Chesapeake, the Ohio, and the Mississippi. Sir, as Brother Deems is half a Presbyterian, and our friend, Dr. Palmer, altogether one, as we are here as brethren, I give as my sentiment, "union in essentials, liberty in non-essentials, and charity in all."

Rev. J. Poisal said: Mr. Stewart and Reverend Brethren—At this late hour of the feast, there is nothing left for me to do but simply to "gather up the fragments that nothing be lost." And yet, sir, the board is replete with the richest supplies, and the task is to me an ungreeable one. I have somewhere met with the remark of an old quaint writer, "That there are some good people with whom it will be time enough to form an acquaintance when we meet them in heaven!" But, sir, there are good men with whom it has been our good fortune to form an acquaintance in this world, and the occasion which the liberality of our kind host has afforded will long be remembered as one of most unalloyed satisfaction. The speech of our honored guest, Dr. Palmer, of the Presbyterian church, will not soon be forgotten. It was eminently worthy of the man and the occasion. That from my excellent friend, Dr. Green, of Nashville, deeply affected me. Who could have anticipated a meeting and a scene so thrilling as the one now presented, after the sad desolation of the past four years? Yet, God be praised, we are here this evening under the most pleasant auspices, and a bright future before us. I am reminded by the presence of our generous friend, Mr. Stewart, of a period in my history, nearly thirty years ago, when a young preacher stationed in the city of Annapolis, when your noble father represented a portion of your own Maryland, and presided over the Senate of our State. May the mantle of that honoured Christian sire fall upon his son! And may the future historian record for him the same epitaph: "I have enjoyed the pleasures of Spring; I have endured the heats of summer; I have culled the fruits of Autumn; I am now passing through the rigours of winter; and I am neither forsaken of God nor abandoned of man; I see, at no distant period, the dawning of a brighter day, the first of a spring that shall be eternal; it's advancing to meet me; I haste to embrace it. Welcome! welcome, eternal spring! Hallelujah!"

He alone is wise who can accommodate himself to all the contingencies of life; but the fool contends, and is struggling like a swimmer against the stream.—From the Latin.

He who can take advice is sometimes superior to him who can give it.—Von Knebel.

Class Meetings.

It is a mistake to suppose that the late General Conference intended, by their action in relation to Class Meetings, to abolish this valuable and time-honored institution of Methodism. Their action looked rather to its increased popularity and efficiency. No practical change has been made. The Discipline, for a hundred years past, has made attendance upon Class Meetings a test of Church membership; but practically and in actual usage this test has long since been abolished. In a ministry of near thirty years I have never known a member of our church, otherwise acceptable, expelled for non-attendance upon Class Meeting. The letter of the Discipline has been made to conform to what had been almost universal usage. The institution is to be retained. Pastors are to organize classes, appoint leaders, and visit classes and lead classes, as in times past. The rule in the Discipline (though not executed) making attendance on Class a test of membership, appeared as a bar to keep some out of the church, and to make the institution itself unpopular. It bore an arbitrary, constrained aspect, that was offensive—especially as there was no express Scriptural warrant for the institution. This harsh feature has been softened, and the Class Meeting will henceforth be looked upon as an advisory, and not a mandatory means of grace—a privilege, rather than a "legal necessity."

The Class Meeting has long been a nursery of spirituality, and an efficient promoter of Christian fellowship. The desire of the people of God, actuated by the same motives and inspired by common sentiments and hopes, to associate together, so far from being peculiar, would be singular if it were otherwise. Men of like tastes, pursuits and interest, whenever possible, seek each other's society, as illustrated in clubs, in political and business associations. The social aspect of the church is founded upon this common element and common need in human nature. Christians, as such, have common enemies, duties, trials, joys and hopes. How natural, not to say how necessary, it is that they should wish to associate together, especially as they expect to live together through the blessed immortal years of heaven! A man, then, professing to be a Christian, or trying to be one and yet having no desire for Christian association, either contradicts what he affirms or else proves that he is a moral and social anomaly, and thus proves the general law of association by the rarity of the exception. I know this law and love of Christian association does not involve as a consequence attachment to, or attendance upon Class Meetings, because there are other forms and opportunities of Christian association; but we think the Class Meeting admirably adapted to promote Christian fellowship, and to provoke unto love of good works. We think that as a rule (we do not say there may not be exceptions) they need but to be tested to be found valuable and "worthy of acceptation."

The prime purpose of all moral associations is sympathy and instruction, to comfort, encourage and help each other. Such associations can but be useful, especially to the young and these so circumstanced as to have but little or no religious sympathy and support in the domestic and social circle. A mere connection with the church, and attendance upon the public Sabbath exercises, does not secure (as we think) the sympathy and comfort which is needed, especially by the young and inexperienced. The pastoral and personal influence of the minister can only supply their need of spiritual sympathy to a partial extent—young people, at least, are too apt to regard the minister as a man out of the ordinary course of religious experience, and above their level. True, Christians can, and sometimes do converse with each other, about their spiritual state; but such conversations, whatever be the cause, are infrequent. Such conversations, from the nature of the case, must be rare and irregular—too much so to make them reliable as a means of religious sympathy and instruction. Besides, there are many persons so socially and domestically circumstanced as to be cut off almost entirely from such personal interchange of religious thought and sympathy. To secure such religious intercourse and conversation, a time and a place should be designated, where such social religious intercourse could be enjoyed without the restraint which the presence of non-sympathizing persons always imposes. If God's Word is read, if the occasion is cheered by holy song, and prayer is offered suited to the needs of all, such a meeting will be all the more interesting and profitable. I need not say to those who know, that such is the Class Meeting, as practically enjoyed in our Church. Such a meeting is not Scriptural in name, or form, it may be, but it surely is in spirit, as much so as a Bible, a Missionary, or a Sunday School meeting.

But may they not be abused? Certainly, but not more likely than preaching the Gospel, church-going, or the Holy Communion. If we are to do nothing but what is beyond the possibility of abuse, I am utterly at a loss to know what may be done at all. This meeting has nothing, in any form or shape, akin to the Confessional—nothing that proximately or remotely resembles it. It is a social meeting of brothers and sisters beloved in the Lord, and in all things equal—breathing prayers, singing praises, and talking together of the things pained or pleasant that may have been experienced in the kingdom and patience of Jesus. Long may they be held in honored observance among us, and long may they bless and edify the Church, as in the century past!

The Confederate Dead.

The twenty-sixth of April was a day set apart by the ladies of Georgia and Alabama, upon which to do honor to the Confederate dead in their respective localities. The touching tribute, so characteristic of the tender remembrances and sympathy of the female heart, was all they could offer to the memory of the fallen soldiers of the South. The ladies of Lexington, Kentucky, also, were prominent in the labor of love and sympathy. Strangers to most of the Southern soldiers who had fallen there, they were yet friends, and their gentle hands decked the graves of the dead heroes, who died far away from their homes, and who now lie in the grassy groves of Kentucky which they have made glorious by their martyrdom. It will be a great consolation to the relatives—to the absent mothers and wives and sisters of the Confederate dead at Lexington—to know that the consecrated day did not elapse without a token of remembrance being offered them in the shape of flowers strewn upon their honored graves.

Oconee Cemetery, at Athens, Ga., was the scene of very marked manifestations in commemoration of the Southern dead. A broken monument, bearing the names of the dead, was erected and half obscured with flowers. At the head of each grave was placed a small flag with "Confederate Soldier" upon it. A Confederate flag, formed of leaves and flowers, marked the grave of Gen. Cobb.

In this city also steps are now being taken to do honor to the Confederate dead of Louisiana.

The following copy of the Apostles' Creed, published in 1151, by order of Henry II, illustrates the progress of our language:

I believe in God, Fadiar Almichty, Eppipper of Haiven and Earth, and Jhesmus Christ, his oncithi sun our Lorred, that his ivange Church and Holy Ghost, born of Mary Maidenholde pine Ponce Pila, pitcht on rode Tree, dead and is buried, lich into Hell, the tridda day from dead arose, theich into Heaven, and on his Fadiar richt hond God Almichty, then is commande to deme the quicke and the dede. I believe in the Holy Ghost, all holy chirche none of alle Haiven, forgivenis Sinne Fleiss uprising, Lifi withaten end. Amen.

OLD AGE WITHOUT RELIGION.—Alas! for him who grows old without growing wise, and to whom the future world does not set open her gates, when he is excluded from the present. The Lord deals graciously with us in the decline of life, that it is a shame to turn a deaf ear to the lessons which he gives. The eye becomes dim, the ear dull, the tongue falters, the feet totter, all the senses refuse to do their office, and from every side it sounds the call, "Set thine house in order, for the term of thy pilgrimage is at hand." The playmates of youth, the fellow-laborers of manhood die away, and take the road before us. Old age is like some quiet chamber, in which, disconnected from the visible world, we can prepare in silence for the world that is unseen.

WEEKLY SUMMARY OF NEWS.

FROM WASHINGTON.

The number of applications for pardons, received at the office of the attorney general, is still very large, although the great pressure occasioned by the crowds of pardon seekers, which ensued after the publication of the amnesty proclamation, has ceased within these last three months. Pardons are granted only under two exceptions as yet. A few are issued under the 1st exception and the remainder under the 13th.

The official reports of the assistant commissioners of the freedmen's bureau are being received for the month of April, and show a continued improvement in the relations between the white and black races in the States recently in the rebellion. The freedmen seem to be gaining a more correct notion of their responsibility as well as privileges in their new character of freedmen; and when they conduct themselves inoffensively the whites are becoming more disposed to treat them civily, and deal justly with them.

The Senate Finance Committee have reported an amendment to the legislative appropriation bill recommending the appointment of forty-two additional clerks in the different bureaus of the navy department.

The President ordered warrants of pardon to be issued to nine persons last Friday, two from Louisiana, four from Mississippi, one from Georgia, one from Alabama, and one from Tennessee—all property owners to the amount of $20,000.

The division lately established in the freedmen's bureau by Major General Howard for the settlement of all claims upon the United States for back pay and pensions due to the widows and heirs of deceased colored soldiers, is now in successful operation.

There is no longer room to doubt the President's action on the Colorado bill. His intentions to veto is unmistakable. The principal objection urged against it is reported to be the floating and unstable character of its population, although there are others sufficiently valid.

The excitement connected with the suspension of the Merchants' National Bank has comparatively subsided. An examination has been going on for two days, under the auspices of the government, and is not yet concluded.

It is rumored in military circles that an order discharging all volunteer general officers will be made in a few days. Most of these officers held commissions in the regular army, and, in consequence of the expected order, they will only be reduced to subordinate positions, and will not be entirely mustered out.

The United States Treasurer authorized the shipment of $45,000 in fractional currency to different banks.

WASHINGTON, May 9.—The commissioner of Indian affairs is making arrangements to hold a council with the Indians on the plains at Fort Laramie, for a treaty with them. A telegram received from E. B. Taylor, superintendent at Omaha, states that 20,000 Indians will attend, and desires to know if subsistence can be furnished them.

The President has pardoned Stewart J. Moffat, convicted of having counterfeit money with the intention of passing it.

It should be known that the redemption division of the treasury will receive packages of mutilated national currency in sums amounting to over $3. So many packages of that sum are received that it is thought people are of opinion that is the limit.

WASHINGTON, May 9.—The House spent another day on the Reconstruction Committee report. Nine speeches were made, and the debate developed a general approval of the pending constitutional amendment. Mr. Raymond, of New York, while not willing to accept it as a conditional precedent to Southern representation, was willing that all of the amendment but the third section, depriving those who voluntarily aided the rebellion from voting for Federal officers till 1870, should be passed by Congress and sent to the States for ratification.

A vote will be taken to-morrow on the question. It looks now as though the disfranchising clause will fail to get the requisite two thirds vote.

The senate spent another day on the proposition to prevent officers appointed by the President, during the recess of the Senate, from receiving any salary. Mr. Henderson introduced it as a separate bill, so as to effectually detach it from an appropriation bill. The debate took a wide range, and covered the entire ground of reconstruction. The tenor of the debate may be judged from the remarks of Senator Wilson, that all of the supporters of Andrew Johnson could be placed in a street car; and one from Senator Doolittle, that the President would go to the cross or the scaffold before he would surrender his principles.

Senator Morrill introduced in the Senate to-day a bill to repeal the city charters of Washington and Georgetown. This is intended to take the place of the negro suffrage scheme, it is said, at the solicitation of the members of the House, who are afraid to go before the people next fall upon such an issue.

PASSAGE OF THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

WASHINGTON, May 10.—Immediately after the reading of the journal, the House resumed the consideration of the constitutional amendment reported by the Reconstruction Committee.

Mr. Randall, of Pennsylvania, addressed the House in opposition to the measure. As a whole, it was a scheme of procrastination and delay, looking to the exclusion of the Southern States till after the next presidential election. The President's plan, on the contrary, was plain and simple, just and effectual, and, as he believed, acceptable to the vast majority of the people, North and South. This issue between the President and Congress was made up, and the appeal must be made to the people. He believed that nothing could avert the speedy possession of the legislative branch of the government by the conservative men of the country, under the head of Andrew Johnson.

Mr. Stroude, of Pennsylvania, followed on the same side. He declared that the Constitution was never intended to be plastered and patched, and that Congress should be exceedingly cautious about tampering with it.

Mr. Banks, of Massachusetts, was the next speaker. He regarded this as the most important question that could be presented to Congress or the country.

Mr. Beaman, while supporting the joint resolution, expressed the hope that it would be amended by striking out the third section to which he had serious objection.

Mr. Rogers congratulated himself that he was fortified in the position he took by one who held the reins of power in the Presidential chair, and declared, if he were a citizen of a Southern State, he would vote to give colored people every right except the right of intermarriage with whites, and the right to vote at the ballot-box.

Mr. Farnsworth was the next speaker. He expressed his intention to vote for the joint resolution, as reported, with the exception of the third section. Instead of the third section, he was in favor of having an article in the Constitution forever disqualifying all the leading rebels from holding any office under the United States, making treason odious, and traitors infamous.

Dr. Dawes, of Massachusetts, declared that, with the exception of the third section of the joint resolution, he gave the measure his hearty approval, but even if he could not get that section excluded, he should still vote for it; but he desired particularly to call the attention of the House to the fact that there was no provision made by law, or the Constitution, by which a question as to votes for President and Vice President could be decided. The Constitution provided that the President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of the Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes, which shall then be counted. But who should decide the votes if there was a dispute? Who should decide whether votes had been cast by men who were not entitled to vote? There was no tribunal as yet erected to determine that fact. Chancellor Kent had declared that to be cause of omission, and had seen in it the possibility of great danger to the country. The danger had shown itself on the occasion of counting the votes for President when Mr. Buchanan was elected; the State of Wisconsin not having cast its electoral vote on the day prescribed, and there being no tribunal to decide whether that electoral vote should be counted or rejected. This was an additional reason operating on his mind against the adoption of the third section.

Mr. Stevens suggested that they would have the bill vetoed.

Mr. Bingham, of Ohio, replied that he was not fearful of any veto from any other end of the avenue that could defeat the final triumph of the constitutional amendment. What was to be gained by returning this third section? It had been said that it was incapable of execution, and that was his own opinion. An amendment to the Constitution which was not to be executed ought not to be put into the Constitution.

Mr. Stevens said he was very glad to see the great unanimity existing among all the true friends of the Union, in the House, upon all the provisions of the proposed amendment except the third section, but he was grieved to see any division among them on what he considered the vital proposition of the whole amendment. Without it, it amounted to nothing; without it he would not give the snap of his finger whether the joint resolution was passed or not. If it failed there would be no power left among the friends of the Union in the next Congress to carry out the measures of the government.

Here ensued a scene of confusion in the hall, arising from members crowding round and drawing near to Mr. Stevens. The Speaker directed the members to take their seats.

Mr. Garfield inquired of the Speaker whether, in case the previous question was not seconded, it would be in order for him to move to amend by striking out the third section, and offering the amendment suggested by Mr. McKee, preventing those who had voluntarily taken part in the rebellion from holding office under the United States government.

The Speaker replied that motions and amendments would be in order if the previous question should not be seconded.

The House divided—ayes 90, noes 59; the Democrats almost all voting aye, in order to prevent an amendment of the joint resolution. Tellers were demanded and ordered, the result being the same; so the previous question was seconded.

On the question—"Shall the main question be put," the House voted by yeas and nays, the result being yeas 84, nays 79.

At this time the galleries were crowded, and as the vote progressed the greatest interest and excitement was manifested by the members, some of whom stood together, in groups, discussing the chances, while some were more actively employed in arguing the consequences, and trying to enforce their views upon others.

The Democratic members generally carried out their policy, which was to prevent any amendment of the joint resolution.

The House then voted on the passage. The name of Mr. Raymond was called, and he voted "yea." The Republican members clapped their hands and laughed triumphantly. The Speaker directed the clerk to call his name as a member of the House, and, the name of Schuyler Colfax being called, he responded.

The Speaker, in announcing the vote, said "Two-thirds voting in the affirmative, I declare the joint resolution passed."

The announcement was greeted with considerable jubilation in the hall.

Death of Governor Allen.

We have received files of Vera Cruz papers, says the New Orleans Crescent of Tuesday, to the 5th inst., inclusive. In La Revista of the 3d inst., we find an article copied from the Estafette, of the City of Mexico, giving the following notice of the death of Gen. Allen:

Mr. H. W. Allen, late Governor of Louisiana under the Confederates, and formerly brigadier general in the armies of the South, has just died in Mexico, after a short and painful illness.

Consecrated to the cause of his country, Mr. Allen sacrificed his fortune, which was considerable, and which he lost entirely. He devoted his life to her on the field of battle, and did not leave them until wounds, which never entirely healed, compelled him to civil life. His compatriots then elected him Governor of Louisiana. As such, all the products of the country, principally cotton, passed through his hands for exportation, and many others would have been able, in such a position, to speculate and acquire an enormous fortune, and that without failing into any malversation. Mr. Allen left the governorship as poor as he took it. Such admirable disinterestedness, known to everybody, was adorned with a simplicity of manner no less admirable.

On the event of the catastrophe to the South, Mr. Allen came to Mexico. Firm and spirited, without making any parade of it, this man, who had possessed an income of $80,000, sat himself to editing a paper—the Mexican Times—and to live by his labor.

He was about to leave for Europe in order to get cured of his wounds, when sickness and death came suddenly to tear him from the affection and esteem with which he inspired all who knew him.

We had the honor to count him among our friends, and we have wished to sketch, in these lines the honorable and sympathetic being, the loyal heart and the just and sensitive spirit of H. W. Allen; we have sought to pay the last tribute of affectionate respect to the man who was an honor to his country; to the man of whose friendship we were proud, and who carries with him the unanimous regrets of all who knew him.

The Cotton Crop in Mississippi.

A Vicksburg correspondent of the New York News furnishes that paper with the following interesting particulars in relation to the cotton prospects in Mississippi this year:

As much interest is felt in the coming cotton crop, I have thought a word or two in regard to the prospects in Mississippi bottom would not be out of place. I observe that the estimates vary very widely, and that those most remote from the cotton region put their figures highest. De Bow, usually good authority in Southern statistics, places his estimate at 1,500,000 bales, while New York speculators go as high as 2,500,000. Under the influence of these computations, together with the receipts of old cotton, which are heavier, and hold out longer than expected, prices have declined until many who have invested in cotton culture, under the impression that it would command fifty cents, are beginning to fear that their margin of profits will be very small.

If you will reflect upon the large number of laborers taken from the cultivation during the war by death, and other incidents of emancipation, together with the destruction of the permanent capital used in that business, you will agree with me that even a smaller figure than De Bow's estimate must be nearer the truth. From a very large acquaintance with the planting region in the Mississippi bottom and extended observation, I am satisfied that not one-fourth the land once devoted to cotton is being reclaimed and cultivated. In other sections of the South I am told the proportion is less, the reason being that, owing to the higher wages offered in the rich alluvial soils of this valley, together with a controlling desire with the negro to be near or on the Mississippi, there has been a great drain from the States east of this which has diminished the laboring forces in the hill lands of Mississippi, Alabama, the Carolinas and Georgia. Taking 4,000,000 as more than an average crop before the war, it would require one-fourth the lands throughout the South should be cultivated in order to bring 1,000,000 bales, and that every combination favorable to a large crop, such as freedom from overflows, a good season for the planting, growth and gathering of the crop, should occur. To make 1,000,000 more, bringing the figures to 2,000,000, would require conditions which no one who has been through the South will admit. If the negro continues to work as well as he has done lately, a fair average crop to the hand may be looked for; but the land is not in cultivation, nor are there laborers enough to produce a half crop.

The condition of levees along the Mississippi renders the crop here precarious. The river is now nearly at flood height, and from Memphis to this point, 400 miles, more than one-third of the country is under water. Planters are, however, not without hope that the water will go down and enable them yet to plant. The season is now fairly opened, and wherever there is dry ground, planting is going on. To-day, corn is up, though I am sorry to say little is being planted, everybody being bent on cotton. The negro is doing well since the Freedman's Bureau stopped tinkering with him, and have let him go to work. If let alone, the subject will right itself, and settle down upon the natural laws of labor.

What the South has Lost.

Matthew F. Maury, ex-director of the National Observatory at Washington, and present colonizer in Mexico, has written a letter to the London Morning Herald, in which he gives the following estimate of the losses of the South, caused by the war:

I estimate the amount of the pecuniary losses incurred by the people of the Southern Confederacy, in their late attempt at independence, to be not less than $7,000,000,000, (seven thousand million of dollars,) namely:

By emancipation	$3,000,000,000
Expenses of the war	2,000,000,000
Destruction of private property	1,000,000,000
Additional taxation imposed by the victor for payment of Federal war debt, say $10,000,000 per annum, equal to six per cent. interest on	1,000,000,000
Total	$7000,000,000

This loss falls upon less than eight millions of whites, who have, moreover, in addition, to contribute largely toward the support of the four millions of blacks who have been suddenly turned loose among them, and who, for the present at least, are incapable for caring for themselves.

This $7,000,000,000 of money was the accumulated wealth of centuries; it constitutes nearly the whole industrial plant and capital of the South.

Bombardment of Valparaiso.

The letter of the Spanish Admiral Nunez, off Valparaiso, to the Spanish minister in Washington, gives a different version of the negotiation preceding the bombardment. It recites that Minister Kilpatrick and Commodore Rodgers proposed a cessation of hostilities and a peaceful settlement; to be signalized by a reciprocal salute and Spanish flags at the same moment. He says: "I rejected this arrangement, only acknowledging the good intentions that had suggested it, and stated that the instructions of my government were so positive that, notwithstanding any difficulties I might have to overcome and should I go to the bottom of the Pacific in the attempt, I must have from Chili the satisfaction which was due to us.

Moved, nevertheless, by a sincere desire for reconciliation, I would take upon myself the immense responsibility of not requiring any other satisfaction than that contained in the arrangement proposed by England and France, and accepted by Spain, to which I would only add the restitution of the Covadonga, with its flags, arms and crew in return for the prizes and prisoners I had in my power."

Subsequently he was informed by American and English admirals, that they could not remain passive spectators, and they might be compelled to oppose him with force. "My answer was that, as to the question of right, the decision belonged to my government, but that as an officer I should obey my orders, and that whatever might be the attitude assumed by the naval forces there in the bay, however reluctant I might be to come to such an extremity, however formidable those forces might be, no earthly consideration should detain me from the discharge of my duty."

He represents also that both Rodgers and Denman approved his determination, and subsequently both approved his first answer to the Chilian proposals. He adds, however, "It was confidently expected that the forces of England and the United States would oppose the bombardment."

Accident on the Jackson Railroad.—Two Men Killed.

About half past 3 o'clock on Thursday an accident occurred on the track of the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad Company, at the Carrollton crossing, which terminated in the death of two men. The freight train approaching the city at quite a rapid rate was within fifty yards of the crossing when a large cow made its appearance on the track. The animal was struck and instantly killed, but instead of being thrown to one side, was dragged a distance of perhaps ten feet.

The sudden decrease in the momentum of the train, threw from the track the tender, which was speedily followed by six other cars. The train continued its course about fifty yards, the cars running on the ground, until the wheels of the foremost one struck a hole, bringing it to a stand-still, throwing the car in rear of it a distance of fifteen feet into the swamp, and piling up the others on the grading. The lumber with which most of them were loaded, was scattered in every direction. Two passengers who got on the train at Kennerville were buried in the ruins. One was a German, with a gun and game bag, apparently a hunter, and the other an old gentleman, with gray hairs, close shaven face, and dressed in black merino.

The names of the two persons killed are Tory Trosper and Father Eugene Paret, a Catholic priest.

The Crops.

TERREBONNE.—The Civic Guard of the 12th says: Much uneasiness is being felt in the overflowed portion of our parish on the subject of high water. Should we have another overflow, the condition of our people living in that section would be distressing. The water in the bayous, Black, Tiger, Chacahoula and swamps is certainly rising at the rate of about an inch a day, but we are of opinion, this rise is mainly caused by the late immense rise of Red River which poured its waters down the Atchafalaya. As the Red River is now falling we have good reason to believe that the waters here will not rise much higher.

CADDO.—This spring has been most unfavorable for the planting interests. The rains have been frequent and very heavy, causing an almost entire suspension of operations. The uplands have been too wet to work, and the creek and bayou and river bottoms have been overflowed. The freedmen as well as the planters have been discouraged and disheartened, and on many of the plantations it is impossible to retain a full force. At least one half of the cultivated land on Red River has been under water for the last month, either from rains or from the main channel. Thousands of acres of cotton and corn have been destroyed, and cotton seed is becoming very scarce. It will soon be too late to plant, and many who rented lands, purchased provisions and hired laborers will be ruined by the failure to make a cotton crop. The prospects were never so gloomy for the South.

The corn crop in Wilcox county, Alabama, has been materially injured by the bud worm. The cotton and other crops are doing very well.

The Monroe Telegraph of the 3d denies the report sent to a New Orleans paper of an overflow and rotten cotton seed in that region.

Nearly all the Texas papers speak in glowing terms of the crop prospects. It is said there will be 500,000 bushels of wheat for sale in Collin county. At the mills near Dallas, flour has been selling for $2 per cwt.

Cotton is not promising in South Carolina on account of bad seed and damage by rains. The same is the case in Florida. The wheat crop near Winchester, Va., is quite promising. There are apprehensions of Rust in Georgia.

The wheat crop in Northern Georgia is promising. The rains have endangered other crops, and cotton is very unpromising.

The Internal Revenue Bureau, acting under the general law, requires all citizens of the South to render income returns for the year 1864, as well as for 1865. Some of the late rebel officers residing in Alexandria, Va., are startled by the calls of the assessors upon them to furnish the required statements, and are surprised that the returns received by them in the Confederate army are estimated at forty cents per day. One of them expressed his readiness to pay his taxes in Confederate money, but this was declined.

The Times' special says Jefferson Davis will be tried in Richmond, in June, if Chief Justice Chase will consent to preside. Mr. Chase has signified his willingness to preside over a court in Virginia if the President will issue a proclamation abrogating martial law in the State. On the 11th a resolution, offered by Col. A serious accident occurred on the Alabama and Florida Railroad on Thursday night, in which the engine and tender were thrown from the track, completely upsetting and smashing both generally.

FOREIGN.

The news from Germany is still warlike, but the accounts are so conflicting that it is impossible to judge which of the belligerents is best prepared for an actual outbreak. In the event of a war, nearly a million of soldiers could be put in the field by Austria and Prussia, and a quarter of a million more by Italy, should she be dragged into the fight.

According to the official statistics, the Austrian army, upon a full war footing, amounts to 579,000 men, consisting of 431,000 infantry, 57,000 artillery, 106,000 extra corps, drivers, sanitary aids, ambulance and field hospital men, etc., and 12,000 cavalry. Deducting from the infantry and the jagers the fourth battalion and depot strength—109,800 men—who remain in the country and the recruiting districts, the number of the available foot soldiers amounts to 321,000.

Making a similar deduction from the artillery, the extra corps and the cavalry, the two former could take the field with 77,000, and the latter with 35,700 men, amounting altogether to 433,700.

The available force of the Prussian army is about 367,000 men; but she can put into the field, in case of extreme need, about 500,000. She has, however, some thirty fortresses to defend; among them Stettin, Cologne, Danzig, Magdeburg, Posen, Coblentz, Ehrenbreitstein and Konigsberg.

The Italian minister of war has addressed a report to the King on the state of the army, from which it appears that there are at present under arms 14,004 officers and 190,325 privates, or 204,329 in all. The reserve comprises 1,754 officers and 148,660 privates, forming in all 150,414 men. Grand total, 354,743 men. Of these it is stated that 240,000 are available on the shortest notice. Moreover, 30,000 men have been called out for drill; these would be fit for service about the end of May.

There may be some truth in a report, given in a Berlin letter recently received in Florence, to the effect that Bismarck has said, in reply to a friend, who asked him if the convention with Italy was an accomplished fact: "We have no necessity for a written treaty with Italy; the alliance exists by the force of circumstances. The first cannon shots exchanged between Austria and Prussia would bring King Victor Emmanuel and his troops before the Quadrilateral, were it only to forestall Garibaldi and his volunteers."

A year or two ago, some enterprising person succeeding in rolling iron in thinner sheets than had ever before been. He sent some specimens to England, and the British workmen have since tried their best to out-roll their rivals, and have succeeded. We believe they have produced two thinner specimens. The last of these weighs only 36-100 of a grain to the square inch. It would require 200 sheets of this thickness to make up the thickness of a sheet of note paper.

The Reform Bill debate was brought to a close in the English House of Commons by the delivery of a remarkable speech by Mr. Disraeli, leader of the opposition, and an eloquent and logical reply by Mr. Gladstone on the part of the cabinet. Mr. Disraeli charged the cabinet with seeking to "reconstruct" the government on the "American principle," and made a telling hit by asserting that Mr. Gladstone played fast and loose with the subject of recognition of the late American confederacy for party purposes, "creating confusion in the world" by the idea. Mr. Gladstone warned the tories and aristocrats that the ultimate triumph of the people was certain, and cautioned them to beware of the vast silent social force marshaled against them.

Madrid correspondence states that Spain is fully prepared for another revolution, which will have for its object a complete change of the royal dynasty. General Prim is spoken of as being engaged in the movement, and a son of Victor Emanuel is named as likely to succeed Queen Isabella.

The first contingent of Austrian volunteers for Maximilian's army in Mexico, was to sail from Trieste for Vera Cruz in the last days of April.

The Herald's Valparaiso correspondence says that certain highly important documents sent to the Chilian President by the Dictator of Peru have been forwarded to Washington, showing that some time ago a French stranger died suddenly in Lima, and among his effects were found papers proving him to have been a French agent, coming with proposals to the Dictator of Peru to make him king or emperor, and promising him aid in men or money from France, under the Mexican flag—in other words through Maximilian. This exposes a scheme between Franco and Spain to make a jump at the small South American republics. England approves, but does not help by men or by money.

Our Havana advices are to the 4d inst. The United States steamer Swatara had arrived from Jamaica and reports that the cholera in Guadalupe had decreased to sixty cases per day, and was mostly confined to negroes. THE CHILDREN'S CORNER.

WILLIE'S MISTAKE.

Little Willie G——— received only a very partial religious education at the hands of his worthy grandmama, who had cared for him since his mother, while he was yet an infant, grew weary of her earth-life. One day, or one night, he lingered among his companions at play, till he was surprised to find, on looking up, that things a little way off had a very dim and indistinct appearance. Remembering a bit of woods lying between him and his home, he started, like a brave boy as he was, without shrinking or crying, to accomplish the distance before it grew any darker.

"Grandma," he exclaimed, when he had done puffing and panting so that he could speak, "I wasn't 'fraid a bit coming through the woods. Do you want to know how I worked it so as not to be 'fraid a bit?"

"Yes, I should like to know how you worked it."

"Well, I just whispered—I didn't say it out loud, you know—'Now, good Lord, if you'll please take care of me, and not let any one touch me while I'm going through the woods, I'll thank you;' and then I ran all the way just as fast as ever I could, and I wasn't 'fraid a bit."

"Well," said his grandmama, "did you remember to thank Him?"

"Yes," he answered triumphantly, as one so conscious of having done the whole thing as per agreement; "when I got in sight of Aunt Ann's, I said, 'Thank you, good Lord—thank you; but you needn't mind me any more; I've got most to Aunt Ann's now.'"

Ah, Willie, Willie, how many of us "children of a larger growth" say in our actions precisely what you said in your simple words!

In sickness, in sorrow, in the darkness of adversity, we creep close to the foot of the cross, whispering, "Lord, help me, pity me, Thou alone art my reliance;" but in the dawn of prosperity we start off on our own hook again, saying, in effect, "Never mind me now, Lord, I've got most to Aunt Ann's."

THE SECRET.

There were two little sisters at the house, whom nobody could see without loving, for they were always so happy together. They had the same books and the same playthings, no cross words, no pouts, no slaps, no running away in a pet. On the green before the door, trundling hoop, playing with Rover, helping mother, they were always the same sweet-tempered little girls.

"You never seem to quarrel," I said to them one day; "how is it you are always so happy together?"

They looked up, and the eldest answered: "I suppose its because Addie lets me, and I let Addie."

I thought for a moment. "Ah, that is it," I said; "She lets you, and you let her; that is it."

Did you ever think what an apple of discord "not letting" is amongst children? Even now, while I have been writing, a great cry was heard under the window. I looked out.

"Gerty, what is the matter?"

"Mary won't let me have her ball," bellows Gerty.

"Well, Gerty wouldn't let me have her pencil in school," cried Mary, "and I don't want she should have my ball."

"Fie, fie, is that the way sisters should treat each other?"

"She shan't have my pencil," muttered Gerty, "she'll only lose it."

The "not letting" principle is downright disobligingness, and a disobliging spirit begets a great deal of quarreling.

THAT'S ENOUGH FOR ME.

"What do you do without a mother to tell all your troubles to?" asked a child, who had a mother, of one who had none.

"Mother told me whom to go to before she died," answered the little orphan, "I go to the Lord Jesus; he was mother's friend and he's mine."

"Jesus Christ is in the sky. He is away off, and he has a great many things to attend to in heaven. It is not likely he can stop to mind you."

"I do not know anything about that," said the orphan; "all I know, he says he will, and that's enough for me."

What a beautiful answer that was! And what was enough for this child, is enough for us all.

WANTING FRIENDS.

"I wish that I had some good friends to help me on life!" cried lazy Dennis, with a yawn.

"Good friends! why you have ten!" replied his master.

"I'm sure I haven't half so many, and those that I have are too poor to help me."

"Count your fingers, my boy," said his master.

Dennis looked on his big, strong hands.

"Count thumbs and all," added the master.

"I have—there are ten," said he.

"Then, never say you have not ten good friends, able to help you on in life. Try what those true friends can do before you go grumbling and fretting because you do not get help from others."

"NONE BUT CHRIST."

Lend me a harp, celestial choir!
It is not meet that earthly lyre
Should strike a theme divine;
Kindle my soul with sacred fire,
Eternal Spirit, me inspire;
With vital breath impel desire
Through every burnt ag line.

Christ—none but Christ! to Him I sing;
To Christ the centrite spirit bring,
In humble, grateful lays:
To Him most near, least understood,
Who waits, when fails all other good,
To take that love which, bought with blood,
The soul reluctant pays.

O sick disappointment's pain!
Of friendship false, ambition slain,
Of pleasures vain control:
Weary and worn, to him apply;
Learn from the neck and lowly why
There's none but Christ can satisfy
The restless, longing soul!

In none but Christ all fulness dwells
The love that ever more upwells
From its pure source unspent.
Though mortal feels immortal might,
Opposing natures they unite,
The finite claims the infinite,
With none but Christ content.

Oh! none but Christ remains the same,
While saints and flickers every flame
By human passion fed.
He living food alone supplies;
The heart, a-hungered, eager tries
Earth's nourishment—grows sick and dies;
Christ only is true bread.

Grow strong, my soul, on Christ alone!
Shine in the likeness of his own;
Filled with his fullness be.
Cherish no hope, no love, no aim,
That is not blended with His name;
His glory be thy only fame:
None, but Christ for me!

The Bible at Family Prayers in the Social Circle.

"Lamp of our feet! whereby we trace
Our path, when wont to stray;
Stream from the fount of heavenly grace;
Book by this traveler's way!"

The Bible—why not read it, brother, before you pray in your family, night and morning? Let God speak first, and you will pray the better for it, a great deal—more energetically, life-giving, soul-saving. The word of God is quick and powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword; it gives life, animation, kindles a spirit of true devotion. The Psalms and other portions of the sacred volume are full of petitions, intercessions, and giving of thanks. Besides the devotional, soul-kindling influence the reading of God's word in your family has upon your own mind and heart, consider the happy effect produced also on the members of your family present. This bowing the knee and offering up a few hasty, formal petitions without opening this Book of books, tuning your heart in praise, is not the profitable way of conducting family worship, or any social meeting for prayer and praise.

A prayer-meeting without the Bible is not a prayer-meeting as God would have it. Family prayer is not family prayer—as God would have it—without the Bible. This excluding the Bible from our regular seasons of social or family worship is unwise—the policy of the Evil One. You suffer immense loss by so doing. The Bible is the watchword, the motto, the text-book, the guide, the safeguard, the soul, the life, the power, the foundation for prayer, the prayer of faith.

Friends, read the Bible, read it in your meetings for prayer and praise; read it in your families while gathered around the family altar. Read it attentively, reverentially, prayerfully, with self-examination Read it, meditate upon it digest it, bring it home to every heart. The influence of this sacred volume on the minds and hearts of the hearers is salutary—on the hearts of your little ones, convicting and converting. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul."

The Bible opens the way, prepares the way for acceptable, heartfelt devotion; enlightens, invigorates, stimulates, kindles the soul joyfully, brightens hope, confirms faith. Reading the Bible adds interest to your social gatherings, holy unction. It fills the mouth with arguments divine, supplies appropriate spiritual language for supplication. Let God speak, utter His voice in your families and prayer-meetings. Take the Bible, beloved—be sure to take it, the Book of books. Make the Scriptures your sun, your shield, a lamp to your feet, a light to your path. The Bible is the bright and morning star, the hope of glory.

In social worship, in family prayer, around the sick-bed, be sure and let God speak previously to bowing the knee at the mercy-seat. The influence of God's word in families is most salutary and happifying on the juveniles and all present.

"The Bible! the Bible! more precious than gold,
The hopes and the glories its pages unfold.
It speaks of a Saviour, and tells of His love—

Little Sins.

What a trifling portion of a great tree it takes to make a single match! Not enough to be of any appreciable use in making even the smallest structure. Yet one of these might easily burn down the largest dwelling.

A gentleman visiting one of these factories ascertained that they used up every day one large tree in the manufacture of these trifling articles, and something more, making full four hundred every year. What a forest to convert into any thing so apparently insignificant! yet match by match the mighty timbers were all consumed.

Is it not like the little sins which eat away into the stronghold of faith, undermining all our good resolutions? They seem so trifling, as we view them one by one, our suspicions of danger is lulled to sleep.

In certain harbors, if you plant deep and firm the mightiest timbers as foundation for your wharves, you will find, after a time, that a little insect has been at work piercing, like a tiny thread of fire, the oaken pile; so that if a hand touches it, it will crumble like wood burned in the flame. Perhaps you have seen sections of piles or ship's timbers which were thus riddled through and through by these madrepores. Did the sight not awaken a thought in your mind with regard to your own danger in cherishing these "little foxes," which eat up all the rich fruit which you should bear to the glory of God? Beware of little sins. As an old writer expresses it: "A ship may be sunk by a cargo of sand as well as by a cargo of mill-stones."

"Heroine" is, perhaps, as peculiar a word as any in the English language. The two first letters of it are a male, the three first a female, the four first a brave man, and the whole word a brave woman.

Opportunity is the flower of time, and as the stalk may remain when the flower is cut off, so time may remain with us when opportunity is gone.

THE MISSIONARY REPORT

We would respectfully submit the following Report of the Mission Society of the M. E. Church South. We would that it were in our power to make it more full and satisfactory, but circumstances beyond our control render this impossible at present.

In 1861 our last published Annual Report was presented to the Church. Since that time our whole plan of missionary operations has been, to a great extent, broken up by the long, cruel and bloody war through which the country has passed. Its sad ravages are everywhere seen, in both Church and State.

At the commencement of the war our missions were all in a state of great prosperity. Throughout the Church evidences were abundant of an increase among our people of interest in and zeal for the missionary cause. Other and opening doors claimed our labors, and were about to be occupied. Our liabilities were being rapidly reduced, with a fair promise that the future would witness greater promptness and willingness to meet whatever demands should be made, in order more fully to sustain this great enterprize.

We then published the following number of missions and missionaries:

1. In the destitute portions of our regular work—257 missions; 210 missionaries; 13,676 white and 1647 colored members; with 133 Sabbath Schools and 6312 scholars.

2. Among the people of color—248 missions, 207 missionaries, 76,264 members, and 16,588 children under religious instruction.

3. Among the Indian Tribes—25 missions, 30 missionaries, 3108 members, 8 manual labor schools and 465 pupils.

4. Among the Germans—23 missions, 24 missionaries, 1078 members, 12 churches, 11 Sabbath Schools and 461 scholars.

5. China—1 mission, 5 missionaries and 27 members.

The last five years have wrought sad and mournful changes in the history of our missionary operations, as presented in the statistics just read.

First on the border, then in the interior, silent presses, forsaken altars, a scattered ministry and a suffering people, declared the horrors of an invading army and cruel war. Unable at home or abroad to assist the missions already existing, your Bishops and Missionary Board looked upon the picture presented in deepest sorrow. True, however, to the best interests of the church, they still continued to hold their annual meetings. The Bishops, as the faithful guides and leaders of our Israel, continued to devise the best plans for the spiritual and temporal prosperity of the church.

The missionary enterprize has ever been properly styled the child of Providence.—All its agencies and instrumentalities bear the impress of Divine origin, and its glorious achievements the marks of Divine approval. Never was this fact more fully developed than in the establishment and success of the army mission, which was founded by the Bishops and Board during the war. It was a necessity; the answer to an urgent appeal to the church and the friends of humanity for the Gospel and its consolations. To preach that Gospel and offer its rich promises to the soldier in his wearied march—to the sick, wounded, and dying—whether in the camp or on the battle-field. Never was appeal more generously responded to. To this important field of labor, many of the best and ablest ministers of the church were appointed—they willingly offered their services, and cheerfully entered upon and faithfully performed their duty. The amount of good accomplished by this mission, eternity above will fully reveal.

Many thrilling narratives and striking illustrations, rich in detail, might be given in this report of the great value and triumphant success, under the blessing of God, of these labors of love; but we forbear. Hundreds of hearts now rejoicing above, and hundreds of bereaved ones below will forever bless this mission, and its faithful devoted ministers. The war has passed and peace smiles again over the land. Every where the church is assuming her former position. Disaster, suffering and danger had only obscured, not destroyed her power. As if by magic, all her instrumentalities and agencies again awake to a new life. Regenerating energy clothes her, and with a more cherished faith and purified hope, she takes her place among sister churches to labor for the conversion and salvation of the world. She recognizes now more fully than ever, that this was the object and design of the Great Founder in establishing the Christian Church.

That a law was promulgated for the whole church by Him who was at its head—that his Gospel should be preached in all churches until all people should be taught his doctrines, and his ordinances. Trusting alone in God, and wholly ignoring all political alliances and entanglements, she is preparing for her part in the great conflict of truth. Impoverished she may be as to earthly treasure; yet even thus she has been made rich in faith and in the power of the Holy Spirit. A bright and glorious future opens before her ministry and membership; we can but predict—in the renewed baptism of the church and her entire consecration to the service of God,—the most glorious result of her missionary labors.

We would now, as briefly as we can, notice the present condition of our missions.

1. Those in the Destitute Portions of the Regular Work.—From these we have no returns since our last published report. They have been left wholly to the supervision and support of the several Annual Conferences within whose bounds they respectively belonged. This field is one that will now have increasing claims upon the benevolence of the church. In whole circuits and large districts of country, if not in whole Conferences, the people have suffered greatly, and have been much reduced in their circumstances. The loud call for help from these missions will we doubt not, meet with a hearty and liberal response upon the part of the church.

II. The Missions to the People of Color — Impartial history will record no more important field of missionary labor than that afforded in these missions. To these the hearts of the ministry and membership of the Southern Methodist Church will ever revert with fondest pleasure. Founded by Southern ministers and sustained by Southern men, under the blessings of God, they have accomplished an amount of good unparalleled in any other missionary field in the world. Our faithful missionaries for long years labored night and day for the salvation of the negro, sharing his day of toil and night of care, by their presence and kind labors of love. Through their instrumentality hundreds—yea, crowding thousands—have been converted to God. The faithful lives and triumphant deaths of these converts have fully attested this fact.

Our missions among the people of color have to a great extent been suddenly interrupted. But we can but hope, from present indications, the renewal of these missions, with the most gracious results. At no period in the history of the Methodist Church South has her position assumed a more commanding aspect in the world than at this moment, from her action in regard to the colored population of our country.

It is matter of just Christian pride that we witness the noble conduct of our several Annual Conferences on this subject. By resolutions adopted in every Conference, they have determined to labor in the future, as in the past, for the moral and religious instruction of the colored people. This action is a noble defence of the Church, robbing our opponents of an argument which they were ready to wield against us, by asserting that our efforts in the past were directed wholly by motives of self-interest. We confidently believe that the course now being pursued will ultimately win back to our churches and altars many who, for a while, may leave our communion. It will remain for this Conference, with the best information before them, to devise the best and most effective means by which missionary labors may be secured to this people, either under the control of the Parent Missionary Society, or those of the several Annual Conferences in whose bounds they may be found.

III. Indian Missions and Schools.—When that was familiar with the work of our Indian Mission Conference, her missions and her schools, has not been pained to witness their present sad condition? Then we had some thirty native born Indian preachers, a large and devoted membership, eight manual labor schools, with 465 pupils. Her territory unexpectedly became the seat of fearful war; her schools suspended, her people scattered. "Lo! the poor Indian," as so often sadly apostrophized, might now be truly uttered. But with the return of peace, our hopes are revived in regard to this field of labor. Your Secretary has ever felt the deepest interest in the success of Indian Missions. Indelibly engraven upon his memory are scenes of surpassing grandeur and moral sublimity, the results of missionary labor, as seen among Indian tribes, once the proud owners of the soil we now occupy. What more sublime spectacle, what greater proof of the power of the Gospel does any age of the Christian Church afford, than that which was witnessed in the ordination to the ministry of the M. E. Church South by one of our own venerable Bishops, at the same altar and time, of twelve native born sons of the forest? These, with other clustering evidences around you, are the proofs of the value of your missionary efforts, while they afford the strongest argument for the continuance of our most earnest labors in support of the cause of missions. Your Secretary has been favored with several interviews with the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Hon. Mr. Cooley, who received him very kindly and gave every assurance that, after the adjustment of all matters of difference between the General Government and the different Indian tribes, he would, in the arrangement of their educational plans, as far as may be practicable, faithfully regard all existing contracts between our Church and the Government in regard to the different schools heretofore under our care. He also had the pleasure to meet in Washington the several delegations from the Indian Nation. They were anxious for the return of former days and the happy union which for so long a time existed between the Church and their nation.

IV. German Missions.—These missions were located principally in the Louisiana and the Texas Conferences. They had been greatly prospered previous to the war, and were steadily improving. We are happy to report, that, so far as we have the means of information, these missions are now far more prosperous than could have been expected after the long period of trial and suffering through which we have passed.

V. China Mission.—Through years of difficulty and change this mission has labored and lived. In the past year our beloved brother, Rev. L. M. Wood, lost his wife. Her death was indeed to the mission a great loss, and to her afflicted family one that is irreparable. Hers was no ordinary character. She was herself a most noble missionary—the faithful companion and sharer of her husband's toils and labors. May her death be greatly sanctified to the good of the church, to the cause of missions, and the richest blessing rest upon the bereaved husband and his motherless children! The mission has also greatly suffered, within the last year, by the death of our first convert in China, our native preacher Liew, or, as he is justly entitled to be styled, Rev. Mr. Liew. He was a noble specimen of a convert from heathenism to Christianity. He became an able preacher, far superior to any other among the native helpers or preachers. His faithful life—his consistent, godly example, and earnest pulpit labors, did much to sustain our mission and aid in the salvation of his countrymen.

The great impatience at results which follow missionary labor is the bane of the church. This, together with a want of faith upon the part of many, have caused much of doubt and fearfulness about this mission. It should be remembered that now is the time of labor. The seed is now being sown—the fruit, the harvest shall be seen hereafter. This mission now consists of brothers Wood, Allen and Lambuth, with their families, two native helpers, and about thirty members. God has graciously preserved the mission during the four years of war, in which your Board have been wholly unable to reach our missionaries by letter or supply their wants. This has been done by the prudent disposition and management of the property in China. Your Secretary has been enabled, within a few months past, to forward to our missionaries the sum of thirty-three hundred dollars, which will go far towards relieving their wants for the present.

The Rev. G. W. E. Cunningham, the faithful and laborious Superintendent of the mission, has been compelled, on account of the health of himself and his wife, to return home. For ten years they have labored patiently and earnestly in this distant field of labor. To preserve their lives and usefulness to the church, their physician desired them to leave China and return to this country. By a kind Providence, the way was opened for them to do so through a long overland route. The additional expense incurred in bringing his family was paid by a kind friend in China. He is now with us and a member of this body, and will be able to give to the Conference all necessary and desired information in regard to his field of labor. The future disposition of this mission is with this Conference.—May divine wisdom guide in our councils and direct our decisions in regard to this mission, and in all our missionary efforts, to the best and happiest issues!

E. W. SEHON,
Missionary Secretary.

The Dew-Drop and the Stream.

The breakers with golden flowers were crowned,
And melody was heard around,
When near the stream, a dew-drop shed
Its lustre on a violet's head.
While trembling to the breeze it hung,
The streamlet as it rolled along,
The beauty of the more confessed,
And thus the sparkling pearl addressed:

"Sure, little drop, rejoice we may,
For all is beautiful and gay;
Creation wears her emerald dress,
And smiles in all her loveliness;
And with delight and pride I see
That little flower bedewed by thee;
Thy lustre with a gem might vie,
While trembling in its purple eye."

"You may rejoice, indeed 'tis true,"
Replied the radiant drop of dew.
"You will, no doubt, as on you move,
To flocks and herds a blessing prove;
But when the sun ascends on high,
Its beams will draw me to the sky;
And I must own my humble power,
I've but refreshed an humble flower."

"Hold," cries the stream, "nor thus replue,
For well 'tis known a power divine,
Subservient to his will supreme,
Has made the dew-drop and the stream.
Though small thou art, (I that allow,)
No mark of Heaven's contempt art thou;
Thou hast refreshed an humble flower,
And done according to thy power."

All things, that are, both great and small,
One glorious Author formed them all;
This thought may all repinings quell,
What serves His purpose, serves Him well.

The above beautiful lines are the production of Mary Collings, a servant girl from Devonshire, England.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

The business of the current week opened on Saturday (says the Price Current of Wednesday) with a brisk demand for several articles of Western Produce at advancing prices, and a fair business in our leading staple, also at higher rates, since which the former have continued buoyant, while the latter has been dull and depressed by the unfavorable tenor of the foreign news.

COTTON—We noticed in our last report quite an animated demand, and that the market closed at a recovery of ⅛c. of the previous decline. Ordinary being quoted at 26 to 28c., Good Ordinary at 29 to 31, Low Middling at 32 to 33 and Middling at — to 35c. On Saturday this upward tendency was still more decided, and while the business was confined by light supplies to 1500 bales, prices exhibited a further improvement of ⅛c. Good Ordinary closing at 30 to 32c., Low Middling at 33 to 34 and Middling at 36 to —. On Monday, however, the unfavorable foreign news noticed above partially suspended the movement, and the sales were confined to 900 bales, mostly taken by one buyer, at figures indicating a falling off of 1 to 1¼c. per lb., Strict Good Ordinary to Low Middling having sold at 31c. The supply, however, to be had at this reduction was extremely limited, factors being unwilling to give way, and regarding the gloomy accounts from the interior, and the advance in foreign exchange, as an ample set off for the ¼d. decline reported at Liverpool. Yesterday the market opened with some inquiry but mostly at lower rates than factors were willing to accept; in fact, the latter were quite stringent in their pretensions, and buyers found it impracticable to go on at the reduced currency of the day before. There was, however, some demand, even at higher figures, and 1500 bales changed hands at the foregoing quotations, which show but little variation from last Friday's prices. This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 3900 bales, taken partly for France and the Continent, and partly for Great Britain and the North.

In our last report we noticed a decrease in the week's receipts proper of 5088 bales, and with this reduction could hardly look for much further falling off since, but the receipts since Friday evening embrace 3316 bales, against 3198 during the corresponding period last week, showing a further falling off of 171 bales.

We now quote as follows: Ordinary, 26 to 28c; Good Ordinary, 30 to 31; Low Middling, 32 to 33; and Middling, — to 36c.

TOBACCO—Buyers for export have again been looking around, and a lot of 65 hhds. was taken on terms which did not transpire. Holders are very stringent in their views, however, and the stock, which is small, is firmly held at the quotations below. There have been several sales to the city trade at these prices. We quote Low Refused, Light, 5¼ to 6; Good do., 6¼ to 6¾; Common Leaf, 9 to 10; Fair, 12 to 14; Good, 15 to 17; Fine, 18 to 20; Choice Selections, 21 to 24. Heavy—6¼ to 7; Good do., 7 to 7¾; Common Leaf, 10 to 12; Fair, 14 to 17; Good, 18 to 20; Fine, 20 to 23; Choice Selections, 24 to 26.

SUGAR—The market continues extremely dull and remains about a stand-still, there being no demand except in a small retail way. We quote 12 to 13c for Common to Fair, 14¼ to 14¾c for Fully Fair, 15 to 15¾c for Prime, 15¾c for Yellow Clarified and 16¼c for White. There were sales on Saturday of 52 hhds. at 13¾c for good Porto Rico, and 15 to 15½c for strictly Prime Louisiana.

MOLASSES—The supplies of the domestic production are fair, and those of foreign production are large, but there is very little or no demand. There have been only a few retail sales of good Porto Rico Molasses at 50c per gallon. Cuba is quoted, nominally, by the cargo at 40c, and Louisiana is quoted also nominally, at 45c per gallon. The imports comprise 492 hhds., 21 tierces and 99 bbls. Arrived since the 11th inst. 28 bbls. Cleared since the 11th inst. for Galveston 2 bbls.

FLOUR—The supplies are very small, but there has been less demand with more disposition to sell than to buy, and prices were barely sustained on Saturday and Monday, when there were sales of 3300 bbls. In small lots to the city trade at $8 25 for Fine, $10 for Superfine, $11 for Low Extra, $11 50 for Good do., and $14 25 to $15 per bbl. for Choice Extra. Yesterday there was very little demand, and the sales were confined to 900 bbls. in lots of 50 and 100 bbls. at $10 for Superfine, $10 50 to $11 for Low Extra, and $15 to $15 50 per bbl. for very Choice Extra.

PORK—has continued in active demand and about 2000 barrels were sold, in lots, on Saturday and Monday, at $33 per barrel. Mess is retailing freely at $33 50 to 34 per bbl., a further advance of $1 to 1 50 per bbl. The stock on hand is small. Yesterday there were only retail sales at the above figures.

BACON—Has continued in good demand, but there being very little on hand the sales have been mostly at retail at 14½c per lb for Shoulders, 18c for Ribbed Sides, 19½c for Clear Sides, 22 for plain Hams and 25 to 26 for Sugar Cured. Some 40 casks clear Sides sold in small lots at 19c and 15 tcs Sugar Cured Hams at 26 per lb., and yesterday 30 casks sold in lots at 18c for Ribbed Sides and 19½ for Clear Sides.

GREEN MEAT—There are very few Sides and Hams on hand. They are retailing at 13 to 14c for the latter, 14½c for Sides and 12½ to 13c for Shoulders. Round lots may be quoted at 11½c per lb for Shoulders.

LARD—Has continued in request, but very little has been done owing to light supplies. A lot of 235 kegs Prime sold on Monday at 23c per lb. Round lots in tierces may be quoted at 22 to 22½ per lb. Prime in tierces has been retailing at 23c and in kegs at 24c per lb.

BUTTER AND CHEESE—The market is bare of Choice Northern Butter and Choice Western is scarce in commanding the high prices of 65 to 70c per lb. Common Butter is plenty and dull, and is selling at 30 to 40c per lb. Cheese is in very good supply but very dull at 15 to 22c for Western and Northern, and English Dairy at 27c per lb.

CORN—Has been in active demand for the local trade and for the interior, and an advance of 5c per bushel was realized on Monday. There were sales of 31,000 sacks on Saturday and Monday at 85 for Mixed, 87½ for Yellow, and 90 to 92 for White on Saturday, and 90 for Mixed and Yellow, and 95c per bushel for White on Monday. Yesterday holders were still more stringent in their views, and asked an still further advance of 5c per bushel, which was realized—but very little was done however as most buyers held off. There were sales, however, of about 4,000 sacks at 95c for Mixed and Yellow and $1 per bushel for White.

OATS—Are in moderate supply but not much in demand and prices have been about the same as previously. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 4,500 sacks at 51 and 55c per bushel for Good and Prime. Yesterday there was very little demand and a downward tendency in prices, and 700 sacks sold at 53 to 54c per bushel.

HAY—The supply is small, but the demand is limited and prices are the same as previously. There were sales on Saturday and Monday 1,200 bags at $1 25 per 100 lbs. and yesterday a few small lots sold at the same price.

HAY—The supply is fair and ample, but is mostly poor in quality. There is not much demand, however, and prices lean in favor of buyers. Prime Western has been retailing at $25 and Ordinary at $23 per ton. We quote round lots at $21 50 per ton. A boat load of 1,600 bales Prime Western sold at $23 per ton, one of 1,100 bales on private terms, and yesterday about 1,800 bales, two boat loads, Prime Western, sold at $21 50 per ton.

INDIA BAGGING—Has again been in demand and on speculation, and 400 bales sold on Saturday at 30c per yard. Dealers are supplying the demand for the country at 29c in rolls and 31c in bales. The stock on hand is very small.

BALE ROPE—Is more in demand and prices are higher. Dealers are now obtaining 17½c per lb. A lot of 200 bales sold on the landing at 17c per lb. Yesterday 50 coils sold at 17½c per lb. Iron Cotton Ties are selling at 12c per lb.

COFFEE—There has been a fair retail demand which dealers have supplied at 24 to 28c per lb. currency, for Ordinary to Prime Rio.

STAR CANDLES.—There is a fair retail business doing at 19c per lb for 12 oz., 21c for 14 oz. and 25c per lb for 16 oz.

WOOL—The market continues very dull and depressed. There have been some small sales, however, at 15 to 25c for unwashed and 21c per lb for washed. There is a good stock on hand

SALT.—A cargo of 5,000 sacks Liverpool sold on private terms. Coarse is quoted by the cargo at $1 55 and Fine at $1 60 per sack. There is a good demand for the interior which dealers are supplying at $1 85 to $1 90 per sack for Liverpool coarse and $1 90 to $2 for fine, in store.

HIDES.—The Stock on hand is small, but there is very little demand, and there have been only a few small sales at 6 to 6½c for Green Hides, 6½c for Kip Skins, and 10 to 11c per lb for Dry Hides.

Usual time for Penmanship, two to four weeks; do. do. Bookkeeping, three to five weeks; do. do. Commercial Course, six to twelve weeks; do. do. French or Spanish, twelve to twenty weeks—but lessons are not limited in any branch. All former students are invited to review their studies free of charge.

N. B.—We will qualify twenty-five young gentlemen as SCIENTIFIC TEACHERS OF PENMANSHIP and BOOKKEEPING during the Spring and summer, so as to supply the great want of the country for such teachers.

The South must now educate her sons practically if she would develop her vast resources of wealth, which are much more numerous than those of Brazil. We have ample arrangements for 500 students during the current year. Parents can make liberal conditions for their sons if they apply soon. Those from the country can board with good families, speaking English, French, Spanish or German, at $25 to $35 per month.

A business education that enables one to earn $2000 to $3000 annually is the best to time parents can give their sons. As the College has been in successful operation for more than a quarter of a century, and the practical plan here pursued received the unanimous commendations of the press and business community, and as several thousand of its former students are now in business in this city and over the country, it is useless to go into an extended explanation of the plan or merits of the institution. So far as known, not one of the many thousands of former students is now out of employment; and so far as is known, not one in a thousand of those who have been sent for years to Europe or the North is qualified on returning home to enter a business house, although thousands of dollars have been expended on his education. A word to the wise is sufficient.

The city is now healthy. Persons from 12 to 60 years of age attend such branches as they may wish. By having a Special Professor for each branch, three fourths of the student's time is saved. Those who have entirely neglected their education for the past years can here be prepared for any situation in business, whether as bookkeeper, merchant or clerk in from 3 to 6 months.

Students intended for this College should bring this circular or special directions, as every winter there are temporary establishments opened. Young students should put their minds in the hands of their merchants, or the President of the College.

N. B.—Crippled soldiers will have a liberal deduction made. Clergymen's sons pay half price only. Citizens and strangers are invited to call. College office, Room No. 7.

At Ease in Zion.

What is implied by being at ease in Zion? We suppose the words security and idleness may express the idea—indifference to our duties, whether they relate to our personal relations to God or our relations to Him through the Church, or our relations to Him through the world, considered as a sphere of religious duty.

Christianity is not a mere theoretical abstraction, not involving our sympathies or activities; it is a system of sublime doctrines, to be accepted and relied upon—of inward comforts to be experienced, of glorious hopes to be cherished, and active and important duties to be discharged. Indifference, then, is just the last state of mind and life compatible with Christian character. The Holy Scriptures furnish us with various illustrations of the lively and active character of the Church, some of which we shall now consider.

In many passages of Holy Writ the scene of our pious activities is called a "vineyard." God is represented, when the sacred writers speak of his planting the Church, as planting a "vineyard" with choice vines, as building a hedge about it, and doing all that could be done for its plentifulness and preservation. The kingdom of heaven is like the circumstances of an householder who went out early to hire laborers into his vineyard; or, again, it is like a vineyard which the owner let out to tenants, and after a long time returned to reckon with them. This illustration of the visible kingdom of God suggests carefulness and diligence. The inclosures must be kept up, all noxious growth must be weeded out, the vines must be pruned and trained. If the soil is wet, it must be drained; if stony, the rocks must be gathered into piles, or built into fences. The idea of being a laborer in name and an idler in fact, is a contradiction and an outrage. If the Church as a vineyard is a scene of labor, in what light does the man appear who professes to be a laborer and yet is idle and at ease in Zion? He appears in the light of him who said "I go, sir," and yet went not at all. Such an one says, perhaps, "I abstain from overt sin." Yes, and so do many men who make no pretensions to religion. But, he adds, "I attend church services occasionally on the Sabbath day." Yes, and so do many who are not pious, and who do not intend to be pious for many a day to come. There must be more activity than this if we expect to escape the charge of being "at ease in Zion." Do we teach in Sabbath school? Do we attend and assist at prayer-meetings? Do we pray with our families? Do we search the Scriptures? Do we practice self-denial, and economise to send the Gospel to those who are perishing for lack of knowledge? Or are we at ease? Reader, are you at ease? Remember, you must give ALL diligence if you would make your calling and election sure.

Another class of illustrations, intended to suggest and teach the holy activity of Christian life, are those in which Christians are styled "pilgrims," "travelers," and "sojourners." The traveler, to sustain his character, must progress; must go forward. If he refuses to travel because he alleges it is too hot or too cold, too wet or too dry—if he suffers every pleasing scene to delay him, he must forfeit his claim to the title of traveler. Spiritually we are pilgrims and strangers, as our fathers were. We seek a country, a better land, a home in heaven. We are exhorted, as we have received Christ, so to walk in him—to press for the mark, that we may obtain the prize—to so run that we may obtain it: "To lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset us, and run with patience the race set before us." Is such our active, diligent character? or are we at ease? Is it too great a cross to be zealous? or to labor for souls for whom the Lord came down and bled? Do we say it is too hot, too cold, too muddy or too dusty to attend the ordinances of God's house? Then, alas! we are "at ease."

Another class of illustrations, intended to teach the holy activity of Christian life, are those which designate Christians as "soldiers." The soldier's life is not only the most perilous, but the hardest. He is roughly clad and coarsely fed, exposed to all weathers, at all seasons and all hours. He must be diligent, patient, watchful and brave. The man that shrinks from danger, from camp and field duty, that seeks some aside and easy place, is properly no soldier at all. As professed Christians we are called upon to be good soldiers, to endure hardness, to be armed with all the panoply of God—to be sober and vigilant. How, in verity, are we doing? Do we stand up to our posts, or do we shrink from duty? Do we go to the front, or do we lag in the rear and straggle out of line? If so, we are at ease. How inconsistent with our profession! How unworthy of our cause! We fight "the world" with its false maxims, with its allurements and moral laxity. We fight "the flesh" with its appetites and its sloth. We fight "the Devil" with his deep-skilled, unseen, malevolent hate—a numerous and powerful array. Can we be at ease in the midst of such perils, on the battle-field itself, where so many of the mighty have fallen and where such grand issues are involved? Arise, Soldiers of the Cross, gird your armour on, and fight the good fight of faith! W.

Destruction Railroad.

The Directors take pleasure in reassuring their numerous friends and patrons that the road to Ruin is now in good order.

Within the last three months it has carried more than three hundred thousand passengers clear through from the town of Temperance to the City of Destruction, while the number of way-passengers is encouraging. An enormous amount of freight, such as mechanics' tools, household furniture, and even whole farms, have gone forward; and the receipts of the year have been so large that the Directors have resolved to declare a dividend of five hundred per cent. The track has been much improved, and relaid with Messrs. Diabolus & Co.'s patent rail. The grades are reduced to a dead level, and the switches brought to such perfection, all along the route, as to jerk the cars in a moment from the main track, to avoid collision with the Total Abstinence engine and Temperance trains, which sometimes occasion so much trouble. In short, we have spared no expense to make it superior to any other road to Ruin ever established.

It gives us great pleasure to call the attention of the public to the improvements in our engines and cars. The old favorite locomotive Alcohol has a fire-chamber of double capacity, and patent driving-wheels after the fashion of old Juggernaut. Our wine cars are models of luxurious conveyance, after the pattern of the far-famed London Gin Palaces, where ladies, children, and gentlemen of the first water can have all attention. To keep up the spirit of the times, our whisky, rum and brandy cars have been enlarged, and reduced to half price. Our cider and beer cars are exciting attention among the children.

Our experienced engineer, Mr. Belial, and our polite and gentlemanly conductor, Mr. Mix, have been too long known to the traveling public to need any recommendation. Indeed, so swift and sparkling are our trains through towns and villages that some have called it "The flying artillery of hell let loose on earth."

Tickets must always be procured of Mr. Mix, at Drinker's Hotel, where you may see the following extract from our Charter from Government:

Licensed to make a strong man weak;
Licensed to lay a wise man low;
Licensed a fond wife's heart to break,
And cause her children's tears to flow.

Licensed to do thy neighbor harm;
Licensed to cause hate and strife;
Licensed to nerve the robber's arm;
Licensed to whet the murderer's knife.

Licensed where peace and quiet dwell
To bring disease, and want and woe;
Licensed to make this world a hell,
And fit more for a hell below.

REGULATIONS.

The train leaves Cidarville at 6 A. M., Porterlown at 7 A. M., Beerville at 8 A. M., Wineville at 9 A. M., Brandyboro at 10 A. M., and Whisky City at 12 M.

The speed of the train will be greatly increased as it proceeds, stopping, however, to take passengers at Poorhouseville, Hospitaltown, Prisonburg, Gallowstown, etc.

Our Sunday cars will be ready as usual, especially for way-passengers, until further notice.

N. B.—All baggage at the risk of the owners; and widows and orphans are particularly requested not to inquire after persons or property at Ruin Depot, as, in no case, will the Directors hold themselves liable for accidents to passengers.

AMONG THE LAURELS.

BY HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

The sunset's gorgeous dyes
Paled slowly from the skies,
And the clear heaven was waiting for the stars,
As side by side we strayed
Adown the sylvan glade,
And found our pathway crossed by rustic bars.

Beyond the barrier lay
A green and tempting way,
Arched with fair laurel trees, abloom, and tall—
Their cups of tender snow
Touched with a rosy glow,
And warm sweet shadows trembling over all.

The chestnuts sung and sighed,
The solemn oaks replied,
And distant pine trees crooned in slumberous [tones;
While music low and clear
Gushed from the darkness near,
Where a shy brook went tinkling over stones.

Small mosses, damp and sweet,
Allured our waiting feet,
And brambles veiled their thorns with treacher-
While tiny flecks of flowers, [ous bloom;
Which own no name of ours,
Added their mite of beauty and perfume.

And hark! a hidden bird—
Tu sudden utterance stirred,
As if by gushing love too great to bear
With voiceless silence long—
Burst into passionate song,
Filling with sweet trouble all the air.

Then one, whose eager soul
Could brook no slight control,
Said, "Let us thread this pleasant path, dear
If thus the way can be [friend—
So beautiful to see,
How much more beautiful must be the end!

"Follow! this solitude
May shrine the haunted wood,
Storied so sweetly in romance and rhyme—
Secure from human ill,
And rarely peopled still
By Fauns and Dryads of the olden time.

"A spot of hallowed ground
By mortal yet unfound,
Sacred to nymph and sylvan deity—
Where foiled Apollo glides,
And bashful Daphne hides
Safe in the shelter of her laurel-tree!"

"Forbear!" the other cried—
"O, leave the way untried!
Those joys are sweetest which we only guess,
And the impatient soul,
That seeks to grasp the whole,
Defeats itself by its own eagerness.

"Let us not rudely shake
The dew-drops from the brake
Fringing the borders of this haunted dell;
And the delights which are—
The present and the far—
Lose half their charm by being known too well!

"And he mistakes who tries
To search all mysteries—
Who leave no cup undrained, no path untracked;
Who seeks to know too much
Brushes with eager touch
The bloom of Fancy from the briar of Fact.

"Keep one fair myth aloof
From hard and actual proof;
Preserve some dear delusions as they seem,
Since the reality,
How bright soe'er it be,
Shows dull and cold beside our marvelous dream.

"Leave this white page unscored,
This rare realm unexplored,
And let dear Fancy roam there as she will;
Whatever page we turn,
However much we learn,
Let there be something to dream of still!"

Wherefore, for ought we know,
The golden apples grow
In the green vale to which that pathway leads;
The spirits of the wood
Still haunt its solitude,
And Pan sits piping there among the reeds!

A singular incident has just taken place at Neufchatel, Switzerland. After the death of a merchant in that city, the name of "God" was found to be inscribed for a considerable sum on the credit side of the books. On investigation, evidence was obtained that the deceased, who was a man of great piety, had opened a regular account to the Father of All, and had entered in it each year a share of his profits. Unfortunately he left no direction as to the disposition of the property; and while it is claimed by the clergy, on the ground that they represent God on earth, their demand is opposed by the civil authorities, who wish to apply the strange legacy to the relief of the poor. The affair will probably be brought before the tribunals, and the pious merchant's good intentions are in danger of being frustrated by his failure to give them definite direction.

With many readers, brilliancy of style passes for fluency of thought; they mistake buttercups in the grass for immeasurable gold mines in the ground.—Longfellow.

Methodism in England.

The English correspondent of the Western Christian Advocate thus writes to that paper concerning the new President, health of Mr. Punshon, Wesleyan authors, etc.:—

As the Spring advances the Methodists of England begin to look forward to their Conference in July. There seems little or no doubt that Rev. William Arthur will be elected President of the next Conference. He was second on the list last year, and no one appears likely to be a successful rival. Mr. Arthur is at present in Italy, where, from his perfect knowledge of the Italian language, he is as much at home and as much at his ease in preaching and talking to all sorts of people as if he were in England. He is equally at home in the French language. The other day, when in Paris, he preached a very effective sermon to a singular congregation—a congregation of French jockeys, grooms, ostlers, and coachmen. He also keeps up his acquaintance with the Canarese, a language which he acquired when in India, and could get up at any moment and preach a sermon in that Oriental tongue.

Mr. Arthur has become a thoroughly public man, and a power in this country. If elected to the Presidency he will be younger than most of his predecessors in that office, he being only in the twenty-eighth year of his ministry. In person he is small and slightly made, of fair complexion, sharp features, and an unusually-broad and lofty forehead.

Mr. Punshon is in but feeble health, and it is rumored that at the next Conference he is likely to become a supernumerary, at least for one year. For months passed he has abstained from all public duty beyond that of his own district. The peculiarity of his style, wrought up as it is with intense labor to the highest possible finish, depending to a great extent for its effect on minute verbal accuracy, and entailing by consequence a prodigious strain upon the memory in the act of delivery, has told with mischievous effect upon a constitution not naturally strong, and a temperament sensitive and excitable in a very high degree.

In this respect Mr. Punshon presents a perfect contrast to Mr. Spurgeon. The great Baptist preacher places no dependence whatever upon his memory, so far as regards the structure of sentences and the collocation of words. When he opens his mouth to begin a sentence he does not know in what way he is going to finish it. This preparation for the pulpit consists only in the barest outline of his subject—just the leading heads and subdivisions, with a leading illustration or two—all the rest is left to the inspiration of the moment.

He preaches exactly as he himself would talk in a room in animated conversation. His clear, ringing voice and marvelously-distinct pronunciation, enable him to be heard without any strain upon his vocal organs, by an audience of six or eight thousand people. But the great secret of all is, that he is full of faith and power.

Reverting to Wesleyan matters there has been quite a development of Wesleyan authorship lately. A "Wesleyan Minister" has just issued a volume entitled, "Free Thoughts on Some Aspects of Modern Methodism." The title need excite no alarm; the book is harmless enough; it gives voice to a feeling somewhat widely prevalent, that we are getting, as a body, to be too rich, too respectable, and too much like the Church of England. He has an objection to Gothic buildings, and, in particular, a mortal antipathy to spires. Some of his criticisms on our financial system appear worthy of attention. Mr. Moister, a missionary of thirty years' standing, has just reissued his volume of six hundred pages on Western Africa, the West Indies, and the Cape of Good Hope. Dr. Rigg's celebrated work, "Modern Anglican Theology," is no doubt known to your readers. It is admitted on all hands to be the most searching, thorough, and complete exposure of the heretical schools of modern theologians, represented by Coleridge, Maurice, Hanley, and others, which has yet appeared. Mr. J. A. McDonald has also issued a Memoir of the late Mrs. Trelfry. This work is less remarkable than Mr. M'Donald's previous literary effort, a volume entitled "The Principia and the Bible," in which he boldly disputes Sir Isaac Newton's theory of the universe, denies the law of universal gravitation, and unfolds a singular and complex theory of his own on the motions of the heavenly bodies. It must be inferred from his being immersed in such studies, that Mr. M'Donald is inefficient in his proper work. Singular in some of his habits, he is a genial, warm-hearted man, and a highly-popular preacher.

It is supposed that at the next Conference the venerable Dr. Hannah will retire from the post of theological tutor, which he has held ever since the establishment of the theological institution in 1834. In the event of his retirement, opinions are divided as to his probable successor. But in all probability the election will fall either on the Rev. John T. Perks or on the Rev. William B Pope.

The political atmosphere is now very much disturbed. Party strife is running high. To an American it may seem passing strange, that, when not above a million persons already possess the franchise, there should be any difficulty in securing a moderate extension of it. The Reform bill, now introduced by the Government, will have the effect of increasing the electoral body from one million voters to two millions. There are other glaring anomalies in the representative system of England, acknowledged by all parties, which this bill does not propose to touch, but which the Government propose to deal with in a bill to be brought in afterward. The Troy party, not wishing to incur odium among the working-classes, by showing unwillingness to admit them to the franchise, are basing their opposition to the Government bill on another ground. They find fault with it as being incomplete. They say that an extension of the number of voters would only increase the anomalies of the present system, unless further changes were made at the same time. Strange to say, the obstructive party refuse their sanction to a liberal measure, on the ground that it is not liberal and sweeping enough. Such is the perversity of Toryism. If this bill should be thrown out, Earl Russel's Government will resign. They will have a hard fight to retain their places, for some of the doubtful liberals are going with the opposition. Still it is generally believed that the measure will be carried.

Causes of the Success of Methodism.

PART I.

BY REV. DR. A. STEVENS.

This is an interesting inquiry, not only for curious speculation, but as suggesting important lessons. It is still considered a problem, and writers within and without the Church have eagerly discussed it. There has been a capital error, I think, in most of these discussions—the attempt to find some one reason as a solution of the problem. The problem is complex, and no single fact can suffice for its solution.

It has been affirmed that the theology of Methodism explains its success; its Arminianism, its doctrines of the Witness of the Spirit, Sanctification, etc. Doubtless these have had a potent influence on its history. But Calvinistic Methodism was, during most of the last century, as energetic as Arminian Methodism. It is as much so to-day in Wales, where it presents the best example of Sabbath observance and Church attendance in the Christian world. Whitefield was an ardent Calvinist, but was he less a Methodist, less a flaming evangelist, than Wesley? Moravianism shared the theology of Methodism, especially its most vital, most experimental doctrines; but Moravianism has not shared the success of Methodism. Indisputably much of our success is attributable to our theology; indisputably one of our greatest responsibilities for the future is the maintenance and diffusion of our theology; but it cannot be assigned as the single or the special cause of our success.

The legislative genius of Wesley is sometimes pronounced the explanation of the problem. Buckle has called him one of the greatest of ecclesiastical legislators; Macaulay, the greatest, with a genius for government "equal to that of Richelieu." Southey declared him to have been "the most influential mind of the last century, the man who will have produced the greatest effects centuries, or perhaps millenniums hence, if the present race of men shall continue so long;" and this is affirmed of a century in which lived Newton, Locke, and Leibnitz, Pitt, Fox, and Burke, Marlborough, Napoleon, and Washington. I have elsewhere given an estimate of Wesley's legislative wisdom and its influence on the success of Methodism. Wesley was the agent, but not the cause, of this great evangelical triumph; and he had enough greatness to need no exaggeration of his fame. He was the greatest moral hero of his century. He was not only the greatest executive man in the ecclesiastical history of his own century, but perhaps of any century. He was, as I have admitted, a great organizer, but not a philosophic legislator. His intellect was practical, logical, intuitive, but not philosophic. In some respects he was essentially a weak man. There is a vein of intellectual weakness running through all his history. His journals are full of whimsicalities, if not of superstitions. He was beyond his age in many respects, but he was behind it in others. The last execution for witchcraft in the British empire had occurred in his early youth, but he believed in that folly to his last day; and if it can be said that, while he insisted on the existence of witches, and recorded, with a sort of eagerness, ghost stories, his great contemporaries, Blackstone, the oracle of English law; and Johnson, the oracle of English literature, were contending for the same follies, this is only to admit that there were other great men of his age as weak as himself. The age itself had essentially outgrown these follies. Isaac Taylor, in giving the rationale of Methodism, supposes that the credulity of Wesley was a requisite qualification for his mission, that the prevalent skepticism rendered necessary this offsetting proclivity for faith, and that even the mysterious noises of Epworth Rectory had a providential effect on his work. Be this as it may, Wesley did not legislate the system of Methodism; God legislated it. "We have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of man." Wesley but accepted the suggestions of Providence as they were evolved in the development of the system. His chief credit as a legislator is in the fact that with the simplicity of a child and the faith of a saint, he accepted these dictates of a Providence and executively wrought them into an organization. To that greatest fact of the Methodist system—the fact that is now speeding it round the world, the lay ministry—he was at first opposed by all his churchly prejudices. We owe that great fact to two women, the Countess of Huntingdon and Susanna Wesley. "Beware," said Susanna Wosley, when he arrived to suppress it, "beware how you treat Thomas Maxfield. That man is as much called to preach as you are." Wesley heard him preach. "It is the Lord," he exclaimed, "let him do what seemeth to him good." This was the summary maxim of all his legislative policy. He had originally no thought of out-door preaching; it was only when the churches were closed against him that he resorted to it, and then Whitefield had to force him into it among the blackened crowds of the Kingswood collieries. He never thought to separate Methodist chapels till his followers, excluded from the churches at Bristol, had to build "rooms" for their meetings. He conceived not the class-meeting, but the people themselves meeting weekly, in little bands of twelve persons, to contribute their pennies for the debt of the Bristol "Rooms," found time, while together, to sing, pray, and tell their "experience." To these humble laymen we owe the class—the germ of almost every Methodist Church since formed throughout the world. The Moravians gave him the love-feast; the reclaimed Kingswood colliers, who used to spend New Year's eve in drunken revels, but after their conversion spent it in religious vigils, gave him the watch-night. The success of Methodism, outgrowing its ministerial strength, required its preachers to travel from one society to another, and created the "itinerancy." The necessity of periodical consultation, respecting their work and their redistribution, created the "annual conference." And thus every important fact in its practical system arose, not by accident, but by providence. Wesley's executive genius was found adequate to all these providential expedients; and in this respect, and the moral heroism with which he prosecuted them, he was one of the greatest of men; but not as a philosophic legislator. Nay, we claim something higher than any genius of man for our practical system—"the foolishness of God, which is wiser than men."

But, whatever may have been the origin of the system, has not the system been the chief cause of the success of the denomination? No more, I think, than its theology has been. Neither of them singly explains the problem, for neither of them, nor both together, could have succeeded without something else. The problem, I repeat, is a complex one; its solution depends upon a variety of conditions. The whole Methodistic system, introduced into some of our comparatively inert modern denominations, could only result in a prodigious failure. Could they tear up their ministerial families by the roots every two or three years, and scatter them hither and thither? Could they drive out their comfortably domiciled pastors to travel over circuits from one hundred to five hundred miles, preaching night and day year in and year out? Could they throw their masses of people into class meetings for weekly inspection respecting their religious progress or declension? No. The system, momentous as it has been, presupposes prior and infinitely more potential conditions.

Wonders of the Universe.

What mere assertion will make any one believe that in one second of time, in one beat of the pendulum of a clock, a ray of light travels over 192,000 miles, and would therefore perform the tour of the world in about the same time that it requires to wink with our eyelids, and in much less than a swift runner occupies in taking a single stride? What mortal can be made to believe, without demonstration, that the sun is almost a million times larger than the earth? and that, although so remote from us that a cannon-ball shot directly towards it, and maintaining its full speed, would be twenty years in reaching it, yet it affects the earth by its attraction in an appreciable instant of time? Who would not ask for demonstration, when told that a gnat's wing, in its ordinary flight, beats many hundred times in a second; or that there exists animated and regularly organized beings, many thousands of whose bodies laid close together would not extend an inch? But what are these to the astonishing truths which modern optical inquiries have disclosed, which teach us that every point of a medium through which a ray of light passes is affected with a succession of periodical movements, regularly recurring at intervals, no less than five hundred million of millions of times in a single second! That is by such movements communicated to the nerves of our eyes that we see; nay more, that it is the difference in the frequency of their recurrence which affects us with the sense of the diversity of color! That, for instance, in acquiring the sensation of redness, our eyes are affected four hundred and eighty-two millions of millions of times; of yellowness, five hundred and forty-two millions of millions of times; and of violet, seven hundred and seven millions of millions of times per second! Do not such things sound more like the ravings of madmen than the sober conclusions of people in their waking senses? They are, nevertheless, conclusions to which any one will most certainly arrive who will take the trouble of examining the chain of reasoning by which they have been obtained.—Herschel.

The True Standard of Dress.

We are always excessive when we sacrifice the higher beauty to attain the lower one. A woman who will sacrifice domestic affection, conscience, self-respect, honor, to love of dress, we all agree, loves dress too much. She loses the true and higher beauty of womanhood for the lower beauty of gems and flowers and colors. A girl who sacrifices to dress, all her time, all her strength, all her money, to the neglect of the cultivation of her mind and heart, and to the neglect of the claims of others on her helpfulness, is sacrificing the higher to the lower beauty. Her fault is not the love of beauty, but loving the wrong and inferior kind.

In fine, girls, you may try yourselves by this standard. You love dress too much when you care more for your outward adornings than for your inward disposition, when it afflicts you more to have torn your dress than to have lost your temper,—when you are more troubled by an ill-fitting gown than by a neglected duty,—when you are less concerned at having made an unjust comment, or spread a scandalous report, than at having worn a passee bonnet,—when you are less troubled at the thought of being found at the last great feast without the wedding garment, than at being found at the party to-night in the fashion of last year. No Christian woman, as I view it, ought to give such attention to her dress as to allow it to take up all of three very important things, viz: all her time, all her strength, all her money. Whoever does this, lives not the Christian, but the Pagan life,—worships not at the Christian's altar of our Lord Jesus, but at the shrine of the lower venus of Corinth and Rome.

The Chicago Academy of Science has made an elaborate report showing that one in every fifteen swine examined are infected, (in Germany there is only one in 10,000,) and that our pork has 18,000 parasites to the cubic inch, a degree of worminess the German hog can never hope to attain.

—San Francisco statistics exhibit a very remarkable growth in population during the war. In 1860 there were 50,000 citizens; in 1865, 119,000. The Bulletin thinks there will be no less rapid increase in the future. Its estimate for 1870, is 190,000.

Liberality in Texas in Regard to Sunday-Schools.—The friends of the Sunday-school in connection with the Presbyterian congregation at Galveston have recently raised nine hundred dollars to replenish their Sunday-school library. The Episcopalians have raised a larger sum for the same purpose, in connection with their school. The Baptists and Methodists of the same place are contemplating a move in behalf of their respective Sunday-school libraries. Seven Sunday-schools are now in existence in the place, and other mission Sunday-schools are in contemplation. All this in a town of not more than ten thousand inhabitants, who were forced to abandon the place during the most of the late war.

THE HIGHER STAND-POINT.

In the discussion which took place in the General Conference on the extension of the Pastoral term, we were impressed with the remark of one of the speakers, that Methodism had always occupied a higher stand-point than that of mere denominational aggrandisement; that a prominent part of her work had always been to quicken and build up other churches, and that we ought still to look to this extended and wider efficiency.

The bearings of the remark, as an argument on the question under discussion, may be passed by, but it is in itself highly suggestive. Methodism, as a great religious movement, has been a spring of life to other denominations; her overflowings have replenished their numbers and helped to fill their pews, besides imparting vitality to their organizations. To contemplate this fact as something to be deprecated, as taking from our own strength and resources, or to regard it as the result of an exuberance which throws off what enriches others without impoverishing ourselves, marks perhaps the only real difference. To meet the fact either way, and to recognize this catholic and unsectarian purpose as a part of our aim and work, is certainly a noble and magnanimous position.

Were we bigoted and exclusive in our views of ecclesiastical polity, we should find more to regret in the numbers we are contributing to other communions; but recognizing, as we do, the inability of other church organizations, we may rejoice that Methodism is doing so much outside of her own pale.

All that is possible should be done to secure the fruits of our labor, and to press forward to maturity seeds of our own planting; but the more general and universal good should not be forgotten. Such a system as shall best subserve both these ends is desirable; looking, on the one hand, to the building up of the denomination, and on the other hand to the wider field of our common Christianity. This higher stand-point is the principle of unity and charity. By losing sight of it, the churches foster unduly sectarian prejudice, and become the nurseries of bigotry. They make their members often more sectarians than Christians. There is no joy beyond their own increase, whilst they look with envious jealousy upon the prosperity of others.

This higher plane of effort has distinguished Methodism heretofore. To save souls, and to spread Scriptural holiness over these and all lands, has been her aim. And with this object, it is expected that her converts will be found everywhere and amongst all evangelical denominations. The credit will be awarded by the great Head of the Church, and she looks not grudgingly upon the fruits which others have gathered.

Christianity, not Methodism, has been the aim, and in holding to this exalted standard the life and efficiency of the Church has been maintained. It has been the source of our prosperity. In aiming chiefly at something better than sectarian ends, we have chosen the best course to extend and build up our own system of church economy. This principle is conservative. We must consider the field in its widest aspects, if we would preserve our own domain. Narrowness of sympathy and view will effectually destroy spirituality; and a grasping sectarianism, that would confine the religion of the church within its own metes and bounds, will soon have little religion to boast of.

Whilst we should do all that is possible to build up Methodism, by modifying and perfecting her economy, we should at the same time remember that denominational success, as tested by numbers, is not the whole of a church's actual results. Who can estimate those fruits of Methodism which have been gathered outside of her communion for the last hundred years? Are they not something to think about and be glad of, these streams of life which we have been sending out to others?

The numerical strength of Methodism is almost incredible. American Methodism, according to Dr. Stevens, nearly equals all the other Protestantism of the nation, while general Methodism embodies more than one-seventh of the world's population. These figures, however, are not a criterion of all the good that has been done, only as we consider the incidental and overflowing benefits to other communions.

For the next hundred years may this higher stand-point be maintained! This alone will preserve Methodism in her perpetual purity and power. There may be here a sin in numbering the people, because it exhibits the narrow, rather than the broad spirit of Christian zeal. Still it should be our aim to make Methodism a blessing to all, and to rise to the highest view of a work that is peculiarly Christian and universal in its object. Actuated by this spirit, what we give we shall more than receive, and what we lose will more than be found in the end.

The Methodist Protestant General Conference.

This body met on the 1st inst., in Georgetown, D. C. The Rev. W. H. Wills, of North Carolina, was elected President, and the Rev. J. K. Nichols, of Maryland, Secretary. The attendance was not large, only the Southern Conferences being represented. In fact, the Northern Conferences, except Indiana and Illinois, seceded in 1858, and these two were not represented, except very partially—one layman being present from Illinois.

We find in the Methodist Protestant of the 12th inst. a full report of the first four days' proceedings. Committees had prepared some important business, which was discussed at length, but not sufficiently determined for present notice. A committee was appointed to wait upon the President of the United States, and ascertain if it would be his pleasure to receive the Conference, and if so, at what time. A resolution was under discussion, inviting the Annual Conferences to unite in a call for a special session of the General Conference, the representatives to be clothed with conventional powers, to meet the first Tuesday in May, 1867, in Montgomery, Ala. Mr. T. W. Ewing was elected Book Agent, and Rev. J. T. Murray editor of the Methodist Protestant. Conference adjourned till Monday morning, 7th inst.

From the Watchman, New York, we obtain further particulars:

Rev. Dr. Deems, one of the fraternal messengers from our late General Conference to this body, presented himself on the eighth day, and after a very warm reception, made the following remarks:

Mr. President, and Reverend and Dear Brethren: The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at its session which closed last week, appointed the Rev. Bishop Doggett as fraternal messenger to this body. The honor of being his associate was conferred on me. By reason of misapprehension as to the time of your session, the Bishop is not present. We had agreed to meet and come together with our salutations. Learning on my route home that you were in session, I concluded to remain a day to discharge my humble part of this pleasant duty, hoping that you may have hereafter a visit from my beloved and eloquent associate, Bishop Doggett. Certain correspondence, Mr. President, between one of your Annual Conferences and one of ours, was laid before our General Conference, and referred to a committee, who reported resolutions of fraternity and the appointment of messengers to this body. As I entered the church your secretary was engaged in reading what I judge is a communication from our beloved Bishop McTyeire, giving you information in regard to the action of our General Conference in the matter of Lay Representation. It was so full as to preclude the necessity of further statement from me. Years ago, brethren, you and your fathers set up your separate ecclesiastical organization from convictions of right. There were acrimonious discussions and some bad blood. But all that has passed away. We have reached a point from which all these things can be considered calmly; the interchange of Christian courtesies has generated better feelings. By God's blessing you have had prosperity, and the purity of your doctrines and the energy of your industry contributed to the great work of spreading scriptural holiness over these lands. And now, brethren, we approach you with no overtures for reconstruction and consolidation, and invite none from you. We are identical in doctrine, and very similar in discipline. The dissimilarities in the latter are gradually disappearing. So far as I understand them, they mainly touch the Episcopacy and Lay Representation. In regard to the former we are not "High-Church;" and our Church has become a convert to your views on the latter subject. I frankly announce our conversion. By a large majority the principle of lay representation was endorsed by our late General Conference. The majority was very large, when you consider that many of the brethren voted against the bill because of their opposition to some of its details, while they were willing to accede to the principle. Perhaps you, on the other hand, may in the course of time see that a fixed superintendency has some great advantages over a temporary presidency. When that shall occur, we shall see eye to eye. There were but two steps between us, and we have taken much the longer of the two. It may not be best for all the branches of Methodism in America to become in formal organization. But if it be best, the Southern Methodist Church is doing all she can to enable her to appeal to the Great Head of the Church, that no obstruction to this union is created or continued by her. As long as you can do more for Christ in your separate organization, by all means preserve it. All I have any right to say, is, that whenever you shall see that we have come so near to you, that you can for Christ's sake come so near as to be one with us, you shall have such a welcome as shall be to your honor in Christ Jesus. And we have no doubt that upon your side you will take us into the arms of Christian love. Not intending to strive unduly to hasten any such communication, we simply salute you in the name of our Lord Jesus, present you our fervent expressions of Christian love and fellowship, and request the appointment upon your part of fraternal messengers to our church. We pray for your growth in grace and spiritual power. We invoke in your behalf the aid of the Holy Ghost to give spiritual energy to your ministry, and pray that whether we ever become one in organization or not, we may ever be one in true spiritual unity in Christ Jesus.

In response the Rev. Mr. Wills, the President, made a brief speech full of true catholicity and charity, and cordially reciprocated all the sentiments of fraternity. Good and hearty speeches were made by Rev. Messrs. Whitefield, Paris, Batcheler, and Dr. Shaver. The whole subject was then referred to a committee.

Union of Methodists in Canada.—The various branches of Methodism in Canada are discussing the question of union among each other. Rev. Dr. Shepherd, of the M. E. Church, in a letter to the Canada Christian Advocate, proposes a general union on the following plan:

1st. Dropping all the present names, and taking that of Methodist Church of Canada.

2d. Admitting lay delegations to the Conferences.

3d. The non-ordination of local preachers.

4th. Electing general superintendents by a General Conference, and regarding such appointments as sufficient, without ordination.

And the proposition is, also, to make the new organization free from all home or foreign control.

Washing Feet.—Feet-washing, which was quite common among several denominations years ago, is now seldom practiced. For this reason the following description of the rite, as practiced by the colored people in Southeastern Virginia, by a correspondent of the National Baptist, will be interesting: "The ceremony began on the midnight preceding Christmas, by the leader reading from John's Gospel the account of our Lord washing his disciples' feet, upon which he argued that the rite was obligatory upon all Christians. A procession of men and white turbaned women marched up the aisle, carrying bowls of water and towels, the men going to their side of the house and the women to theirs. A man then girded himself with a towel, and pulling off the boot and stocking of a brother, placed the bowl of water under the naked foot, washed and wiped it with the towel wherewith he was girded.' Then replacing the stocking and boot, he took the seat of him whose foot he had washed, and had his own foot washed by that brother. The women washed the feet of their own sex, and the men of theirs."

How Much has the Church Lost?

A DREAM THAT WAS NOT ALL A DREAM.

Mr. Editor: Some years ago I took passage, with a friend, on a floating palace, going up the Mississippi river. The levee, as we left New Orleans, was covered with cotton bales, and over the various lots and parcels floated little flags, showing to which commission merchant the owners had consigned them. Each commission merchant had his own flag, with white, red, blue, stars, checks, etc., on it, by which it was known in that busy mart.

Passing along the forest of shipping that hugged the left bank of the river, I and my friend were entertained with the various national flags that floated from the tall masts. All civilized nations seemed to be represented there.

What wealth spread out, on that day, to the eye of the traveler, as he floated along that stream! For extent and massiveness of display, the world has no equal to the agriculture of this delta. No blank spots, no untillable acres—alluvion all. The corn and sugar cane and cotton fields join each other, one unbroken scene of productiveness, for hundreds of miles. The negro quarters, like villages—the sugar-house, like a royal factory, and the family mansion, under the shade of pecan trees and embossed in evergreens and orange groves, not unworthy of princes! We talked of this great wealth, the uses of it, what good it was capable of doing, and so on.

Next morning my friend told me he had had a singular dream, which he thought was produced by the sight of those flags on the cotton levee and the shipping, and by our conversation just before we turned into our state-rooms. Though he could explain it, the dream impressed him nevertheless; and the times we live in calls it to mind. Here it is:

"Last night, after we retired to rest, I lay thinking on the wealth on both shores we were passing through; and the question came up, why the kingdom of God moved forward so slowly, and was continually halting in the way, for lack of means, when His providence had lavished such abundance beyond the necessities of those who held it. The annual income of one of these sugar plantations exceeded, perhaps, the income of the Missionary Society, gathered up here and there from a score of Conferences. Thus my cogitations troubled me. Whether sleeping or waking, I don't know; but I seemed to stand on the pilot house, in full view of all the coast, and the steamer kept propelling along. A stranger joined himself to me—whether man or angel I don't know, but he was acquainted with the history of all these places and their proprietors.

"I said to him, 'The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof,' and that since we left the Crescent City we had seen enough surplus properly to convert the whole world. 'Enough,' he replied in a tone of sadness, 'if it was dedicated to that end; but little of it goes that way. Look,' said he, (and he put into my hands a glass,) 'and you will see the white flag hanging out over the places and plantations consecrated to God. Their owners hold them as his stewards. Occupy till I come, is the word of the Master. They draw enough for their own and their families' proper support—the rest they give to the poor, to the circulation of the Holy Scriptures, to the spread of the Gospel.' Over all those plantations and places which belong to the Devil you will see the black flag.'

"Applying the glass to my eye, I saw that no plantation, or farm, or house, was without its banner. But the black banner of the god of this world flaunted over nearly all of them. 'See,' said my companion, 'what a heritage that is just on the right!' Dives had nothing better than the scene presented. The slaves toiling in fields looked like ants, so busy and so numerous; the mules, as though two or three Kentucky droves had met. The great sugar-house and the mansion towered above other buildings. Sheep and cattle grazed on the white clover, and blooded colts gamboled in the pastures. The hogsheads of sugar made there counted by hundreds and the barrels of molasses by thousands.

"'What is the history of this place?' I asked. 'It has been for a hundred years under the dark banner of sin. The revenues are large, but they are spent on the Metairie race-course, the Opera, at Saratoga and Newport, and in all the places of Vanity Fair.'

"'And what of this estate, its next neighbor, and its equal?' I inquired. He pointed to a cluster of venerable trees. 'There was the beginning—small and thrifty. All the revenues are self-consumed, devoted to eating up adjacent arpents, adding field to field, increasing the possessions. Nothing is spent in rioting and luxury, but nothing goes to God's cause in any shape. The black flag floats in the breeze there.'

"The bell tolled, and the boat landed for a passenger. He was a young man, but already bloated by drink. He met boon companions on the deck, who went with him to the bar for a dram. They profaned and blasphemed, and then sat down to the card table and played long and deep; and the newly arrived lost heavily. We had now reached the cotton belt, and I learned that he was the son of a planter who sent to market 1400 bales of cotton the last season. His only brother spends his time in Paris and Baden Baden. A brother-in-law (and this wakes up all the children) resides with his family on Staten Island, and keeps a steam yacht and fast trotters. I remembered how eloquent speakers at missionary anniversaries plead for one bale of cotton for the China Mission, and here Satan receives 1400 bales in a year. The dark emblem of his authority flaunted bravely over this vast plantation, which reached from the river for miles around.

"Blessed white flag, here it flutters to heaven's breeze! There stands the chapel, with its bell and tower. The Gospel is preached there. The minister receives half as much as the overseer, and he is allowed and encouraged by the proprietor to extend missionary labors to the adjoining regions of darkness. This same proprietor fears God and works for his cause. He has contributed handsomely to the Bible Society for many years, and intends, if he makes a good crop the coming season, to endow a professorship in a religious college—laying a foundation large enough not only to furnish tuition free, but to pay the board of a number of poor scholars of merit. Here God reigns. This man considers that he is not his own. May the dews of heaven fall graciously here!

"But how few are the white flags! Here and there only, for a long distance, they were seen, and on some small and meagre estates. How ungrateful are men! How insanctified is wealth! To all the great things which Christian benevolence has enterprised and effected, the vast and productive estates contribute but little. Well has Satan been styled the god of this world.

"With these reflections, my companion disappeared. The deep fogs of the delta closed suddenly round me, shutting from view the shore on either hand—and I awoke."

Now, reader, was that a vision of fancy or a vision of fact? Might not a man dream it with his eyes open?

Come to think of it, has the Church of God really lost much of the property that has been wantonly destroyed by the war? Not much. Viewed from the point of political economy, a large basis of taxation and revenue has been dissolved. The incomes have been crippled, and will be long in recuperating. But viewed from the churchman's point, much of this loss will not be deplored. These riches were not only withheld from God, but in many instances waged war against Him. They were antagonistic to everything moral and religious. By all their corrupting influences they opposed Christianity.

Let not the Church, therefore, go into mourning. Here and there you find a man or woman who cannot do as well for its causes as before the war. Their means are cut off—they can't give as much as formerly. But these cases bear a very small proportion to the whole number of broken fortunes. Much of the riches that have taken wings and flown away were spent upon those who controlled them—devoted to the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life.

The poor widow can yet cast into the Lord's treasury her two mites. Others will do what they can, and if they make, out of straightened means, a smaller gift, they will accompany it with more prayer. Many who have lost all formerly gave nothing, and they can give as much now. Others, out of their abundance, consecrated to God only the parings of their fingers, and those parings will be as valuable as ever.

Wake up, O Christian man! The Church is not broke. Her exchequer is not bankrupt. She is but a little if any worse off in her finances than she was before the Southern fields were overrun and despoiled. To what extent she is poor, the riches of liberality, by a marvel of grace, may yet abound. Count the fields that are fallow because there are no laborers. How many of them ever yielded anything for God? This and that man have lost all, but will there be one Bible less distributed, one orphan less cared for and educated? Not one. The history of their selfish possessions deprives them of the benefit of clergy or Christian sympathy.

"Go to, now, ye rich men," (over whom the black flag waved,) "weep and howl for the miseries that have come upon you." But don't expect the Church to weep and howl with you. "Your riches are corrupted, your gold and silver is cankered. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts as in a day of slaughter."

Let us estimate calmly the pecuniary losses and resources of the Church. It is an easy mistake, an illusion, to suppose the Church has lost anything that had not been consecrated to her Lord. The sinews and hearts, the faith, love and devotion, the zeal and prayers and ancient poverty of her members were her wealth of old; and these are left her still. Let us undertake great things, and expect to do great things. All the real available resources of the Church have survived the war.

M. P.

Dr. Lovick Pierce's Sermon.

A correspondent of a Northern Methodist paper, giving a detail of the proceedings of the late General Conference, speaks of the Rev. Dr. Lovick Pierce's sermon before the ordination of the Bishops as a feeble effort of a debilitated old man, and thinks it was wrong to impose on one so infirm to preach on such an occasion. How doctors differ! Every intelligent, educated minister, who was present at the conclusion of the services, spoke to us in raptures of the discourse and was truly anxious for its publication. We, too, heard the sermon, and though not professing to be competent to decide where intelligent persons differ, we regarded it thought the effort very fine, considering all the circumstances. Indeed the whole scene was sublime. The house was a large, intelligent audience, in the midst were more than one hundred ministers of the Gospel; the pulpit and around the altar were seated the Bishops of the Church and those to be ordained; the group sat Bishop Pierce, the father of the venerable preacher. The great and good man, having passed his four score years, arose, and with a majesty and pathos marvelous in one of his years, preached a sermon of nearly an hour in length, delivered with strength of voice and force of thought that caused us to wonder at his physical and mental preservation. It was probably the last sermon in the hearing of the ministers, who all honor and revere him; a valedictory which deeply impressed every attentive, and impartial auditor.

Dr. Pierce has been a prince among preachers; for more than sixty years he has stood as a watchman on the walls of Zion, and few, if any, American preachers ever occupied a higher position. He has been abundant in labors and irresistible in appeals; and, after a life of more than eighty years, he stands in the midst of his brethren and still in the Gospel, urging them forward in the great work of converting sinners from the error of their ways. It was appropriate—it was sublime—to put the venerable man forward on an occasion so interesting. The heart felt on that day he should have been the preacher, if he could have spoken no more than the Evangelist John's "Little children, love one another."

Nashville Christian Advocate.

In the Old School Presbyterian Assembly at St. Louis last week a resolution to appoint a committee to investigate the case of the Louisville Presbytery was taken up and adopted.

Dr. Nelson, a messenger from the New School, was then received, and warmly greeted. He thought there was now little difference in the two schools. The Moderator, in response rejoiced at the prospect of a speedy union between the two branches.

Protestant Episcopal Convention of Louisiana.

ELECTION OF A BISHOP.

The Protestant Episcopal Convention of the Diocese of Louisiana was in session in this city last week. The chief business before the body was the election of a Bishop in place of the late Bishop Polk, who was killed in the Confederate service. Friday was the day appointed for the election. We copy the proceedings in relation thereto from the N. O. Crescent of Saturday:

The hour of noon having arrived, the President announced that it was the order of the day that the Convention should now proceed to the election of a Bishop. Article seven of the Constitution requires the clergy to select a fit candidate, and the laity to approve him, before he could be elected. This necessitates a separation of the orders, and provision had accordingly been made for the accommodation of one of the orders in the chapel in the basement of the church. The clergy would retire thither, and the lay delegates remain in session until they received an announcement that the clergy had agreed upon a nominee, when they would proceed to determine upon the choice. Under the provisions of article seven of the Constitution, already referred to, there not being two-thirds of the clergy or two-thirds of the laity present, entitled to vote, the vote would have to be decided by two-thirds of the whole vote taken. He then directed the Secretary to call the roll.

It was found that of the clergy there were 24 present, 2 absent; and that of the parishes, twenty-three were represented by lay delegates.

Mr. McConnell contested the declaration of the President, that one order should retire to deliberate. The delegates under the Constitution had a right to be present while the clergy deliberated on the nomination, and the clergy had a right to be present while the laity deliberated on the ratification or rejection of that nomination. All the Constitution required was that the orders should vote separately—not in separate rooms or buildings, but by separate ballots; while it expressly directed that the whole Convention shall deliberate as one body.

A very lengthy discussion took place upon this point. Before it was decided a recess was taken. On resuming, the President said:

"I wish to say one word to the members before the house is divided. The Convention is about to proceed to the election of some fit person to be consecrated Bishop of the Diocese of Louisiana. It is the most important and responsible duty which they are ever called to discharge, involving the highest and most lasting interest of the Kingdom of Christ upon earth—and so it has ever been—the godly custom of the church, according to the pattern of the apostles, before entering upon that sacred duty, to lift up our hearts to God, and during a brief interval of impressive silence to ask from Heaven the grace and guidance of the Holy Ghost, that their lot may fall upon one who is fully qualified to administer the office of a Bishop to the glory of God and the edifying of the people.

"Following this apostolic example, a few moments will be afforded to the members of this Convention to offer up silent prayers and supplications to Almighty God; after which we will join in the Lord's prayer and a short collect—in which acts of devotion, it is not to be doubted, these Christian people, whom the interest of the occasion has called this morning into the house of God, will be glad to unite."

The Rev. Mr. McCoy then read from the third chapter of the first epistle of Paul the Apostle to Timothy, and from the first epistle of Paul to Titus, the requisite character of a Bishop. He paid a very high eulogy to the lamented late Bishop Polk.

A motion being made that the clergy should retire to deliberate and vote for a nominee, it was, on motion,

Resolved, That Bishop Green, of Mississippi, should be requested to give his opinion upon the practice of dividing the house as proposed.

Bishop Green stated that in his experience, either the laity or the clergy proposed candidates to the Convention; that after the nominations, the clergy retired to a chamber near at hand, deliberated, and if a majority agreed, reported their choice to the laity. After this, the laity either retired, or without leaving their seats confirmed or rejected the nominee.

After some further discussion, and various motions, the clergy retired. On returning, it was announced that on the seventh ballot Bishop Lay had been chosen as the nominee by a vote of 16 to 8.

Another lengthy discussion took place on the question of the orders' separation to deliberate. Eventually the Convention, by a vote of 26 to 14, resolved to permit the lay delegations to retire for consultation.

At a quarter past five it was announced in Convention that the lay delegates considered that the Constitution expressly required the two orders to deliberate in one body on the subject, and that therefore the retiring of the bodies for the purpose of deliberating was unconstitutional.

A discussion ensued, at the close of which the clergy proceeded in Convention to ballot for a nominee. Four ballots were taken without any result, when, about 6 o'clock, the Convention took a recess till half-past 7 o'clock.

On resuming at that hour, the balloting recommenced; and after thirteen ballots had been taken in vain, on motion of the Hon. D. S. Cage, a recess of five minutes was taken to allow the clergy to consult and concentrate on a nominee.

The result was, that after two more ballots the vote stood: Lay 16, Wilmer 6, Beckwith 1.

The President then announced Bishop Lay as the nominee of the clergy.

A recess of ten minutes was then taken to allow the laity to consult.

On resuming and proceeding to ballot, the laity failed to ratify the nominee of the clergy.

The Rev. Mr. Girault then proposed, as the nominee of the clergy, Bishop Wilmer; and on their proceeding again to ballot, he was chosen, the vote standing: Wilmer 18, Mahan 4, Lay 1.

On this nomination being submitted to the laity, it was ratified by 17 to 5.

On motion of Mr. McDonnell, his election was declared unanimous.

The President then announced that the Rev. Dr. J. P. B. Wilmer, of Elk Ridge, Maryland, had been elected Bishop of this Diocese.

The Convention then chanted the Gloria in Excelsis, and adjourned.

The Presbyterian Assemblies.

OLD AND NEW SCHOOLS—BOTH AT ST. LOUIS—POLITICS IN THE CHURCH.

The General Assemblies of the Old and New School Presbyterian Church, convened, of course in separate churches, at St. Louis, on Thursday last, 17th inst., for the transaction of business.

On the evening of the 15th there was a preliminary meeting of the Old School Assembly, which was largely attended by delegates and others.—The Rev. Dr. Landis opened the meeting by reading the Scriptures, after which prayers were offered by Rev. Dr. Breckinridge, Rev. Dr. Stanton and others. After which a business convention was held in accordance with a call issued by Rev. Dr. Breckinridge.

This meeting was of a private nature.

The call issued by Rev. Dr. Breckinridge under which this business meeting was held, seems to have been intended as a move in the direction of union and consolidation. It will be seen that it is not addressed particularly to either "school."

To the Ministers and Ruling Elders of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A.:

I beseech you, brethren, to whom I have been so long subject in the Lord, to impute the freedom I use in thus addressing you to my great love for that church which is the common mother of us all. She is about to select by her Presbyters, which you constitute, the Commissioners, from amongst yourselves, who will soon constitute her next General Assembly. That great tribunal is, for us, the supreme organized and visible assembly of our portion of "the Holy Catholic Church;"—yes—however others may scoff at it—of that Holy Catholic Church, in which, as really in God the Father, in Jesus Christ, His son, in the Holy Ghost, in the communion of Saints, in the resurrection of the body, and in the life everlasting, we have every one professed to believe.

This tribunal, of last earthly resort for us in things spiritual, we know as certainly as we can know anything of the sort beforehand, may not—probably will not—be free from attempts hostile to some or even all of the precious testimonials the Church has borne for the truth of God, and the duty of his children, during the frightful years of sinful insurrection through which we have been led. And we need only cast our eyes over the controversies raging even now in the Church to understand how widespread and how diversified are the evil influences which threatened her, and how fatal are the principles upon which a counter revolution in her state and action is demanded, and how eager and fierce is the spirit of reaction against her solemn, deliberate and reiterated testimonials, which she cannot weaken, much less revoke, without apostacy.

What I have to suggest, therefore, is, that the same means of seeking Divine guidance and mutual enlightenment and support, may be adopted now, as have been so often put in practice with the manifest blessing of God, and were especially effectual in connection with the General Assemblies of the years 1834, 1835 and 1837. Let a Convention, for prayer and conference, meet in St. Louis at some fit place, to be provided by our brethren there, likeminded, with ourselves, on the evening of the second day preceding that on which the Assembly shall meet. Let that Convention, with full preparation of heart, and mind, discover and utter and propound to the Assembly, as God shall enable them, and with all reverence, the things needful to the Church, touching its present duties, dangers and necessities. Let the Convention consist of all such Commissioners to the General Assembly, as—instead of reviling the five preceding Assemblies—will obey them; to whom let there be added other fit persons, especially from such Presbyteries as are not represented in the Assembly, or as are represented there by Commissioners who will not or cannot sit in the Convention. What we need is a special blessing from God, whereby His people, being united in such right action as He will own and bless, anarchy and confusion in the Church may be put an end to, and heresy on the one hand, and schism on the other, and threatening corruption on all sides, may be effectually dealt with.

For myself, I look upon the present troubles in our own and all sister churches in this country as being little else than the sinful continuation and working, in a religious form, of the criminal spirit and designs of the insurrection in temporal affairs, and I am persuaded that neither the country nor the Church of God can have peace or security until the religious poison is healed or purged out. In both respects—both of the State and Church—it is better, immeasurably, to heal if it be possible. If that may not be, it is better immeasurably, to keep the Church pure, and restore it to peace, let that cost what it may. The Presbyterian Church welcomes to her bosom, joyfully, all who desire to be as she and her children are. If others will insist on sharing her blessings—which are neither few nor small—they ought not to revile her acts, contemn her authority, waste her inheritance, traduce her character, and tear her vitals.

In the hope of the gospel, I rest your servant and brother in Christ,

ROBT. J. BRECKINRIDGE,
Danville, Ky., Feb. 12, 1866.

On the morning of the 17th the General Assembly of the Old School Presbyterian Church met at 11 o'clock. There was a full attendance of delegates. After the introductory devotional services Rev. Dr. Lowry, the Moderator, delivered the opening sermon on the text:

Acts 1. 3.—"But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witness unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

Rev. Dr. Stanton, of Ohio, was chosen to preside as Moderator of the Assembly. His speech, on taking the chair, was in some respects notable. We make some quotations therefrom:

It has many times been said by members of this body and by others, as well as by the religious journals, that this would be one of the most important General Assemblies of the Presbyterian Church which has ever convened. While we ought not unduly to magnify our office as a Church Court, there may be some truth in the estimate thus put upon what may prove to be the result of our deliberations. Vital questions affecting the integrity of this Assembly, and the purity and peace of the Church at large, will claim from you a prompt and decisive solution. That rebellious defiance of lawful authority which has racked this nation to its foundations during four years of war, still rages within the precincts where it was born, the Church of God! It is the offspring of heresy, corruption, and all unrighteousness. To meet it promptly courageously, in the fear of God, and with the aid of His grace, is your manifest duty, as well as directly to deal with those who openly defy your most solemn injunctions.

To settle all these questions upon principles so clearly right that they shall command the confidence of the Church and give it rest, while they shall advance the Saviour's glory and secure his favor, should be the aim of the prayers and the labors of every member. Then, those who have gone out from us upon vain and wicked pretexts may be left to their own chosen way, and if any still remain to revile they may know the cost of setting at defiance the authority which Christ has given to his Church.

Rev. Mr. Hickock was elected Clerk of the Assembly.

Rev. Dr. McLain offered the following resolutions:

WHEREAS—It is rumored that the Presbytery of Louisville has openly separated from the General Assembly, and refuses to be subject to its orders, in a pamphlet adopted by it, of which the following is a specimen; to wit:

"We will not sustain or execute, or in any matter assist in the execution of the orders passed by the last assemblies on the subject of slavery and loyalty, and with reference to the conducting of missions in the Southern States, and with regard to the ministers, members and churches in the seceded and border States."

And whereas, said Presbytery has commissioned and sent to this Assembly at least one commissioner who, if the order of the last assembly had been faithfully executed by said Presbytery, there is the strongest ground for believing would have been suspended from the functions of the gospel ministry; therefore,

Resolved, That until the Assembly shall have examined and decided on the conduct of said Presbytery, the commissioners therefrom shall not be entitled to seats in this body.

Rev. Wm. Breckinridge moved that the resolution be laid on the table.

This was lost, by 31 yeas to 212 nays.

And the assembly then adjourned till the next morning.

NEW SCHOOL.

On the morning of the 17th, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., "New School," met, and Rev. Dr. Shaw, of Rochester, N. Y., preached the sermon from Ps 65, v 2—"O, thou that hearest prayer!".

Rev. Dr. Hopkins, of Auburn, N. Y., was chosen Moderator.

Several matters of routine were transacted, but nothing important was done the first day.

In the evening, the New School Assembly held prayer and conference meetings at their different churches. The Democrat of the next morning says:

That at Dr. Nelson's church was very largely attended—of the other, in a remote quarter, we did not hear. During the war, the Assembly, at its anniversary, has devoted the first evening after convening to a prayer meeting in behalf of the nation in its struggle with treason.

The present occasion was one of thanksgiving for the National triumph, and the sentiments uttered were of grateful patriotism Dr. Nelson presided. Some of the speakers dwelt impressively upon the duty of the country to establish justice as the sole hope of national safety, and deplored the prevalence of a disposition to fail in the exaction of this righteous security.

Johnson Meeting at Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, May 19.—The Academy of Music was crowded to-night to its fullest extent, by an enthusiastic audience of ladies and gentlemen, to listen to speeches by Senators Cowan and Doolittle, in support of President Johnson. Henry Semon, Esq., occupied the chair.

Senator Doolittle, after treating the subject of the rebellion and the present issue before the country, declared the man who denies the union of the States, under the Constitution, is himself a disunionist. [Enthusiastic applause.] He refuted the many calumnies that had been raised against the personal character of the President, and expressed his firm belief that no man living was more assiduously and conscientiously engaged in the discharge of his duty to his country than Andrew Johnson. [Loud applause.]

He illustrated the policy of President Lincoln in the recommendation of Louisiana and Arkansas to admission into the Union, which policy had been indorsed at the Baltimore convention, and by a majority in both houses of Congress a year ago, to show the policy of President Johnson was not a new one, but that it was in obedience to the wishes of the Union party. Instead of the President proving false, the men who were now leading the Union party were perverting its grand object and intentions, the restoration of the Union and enforcement of the laws.

Senator Cowan followed in an eloquent argument, in defense of sustaining the law, by virtue of which the rebellion had been crushed. The President's plan of reconstruction relies alone upon the authority of the Constitution—the law of the land. [Cheers.] If the Southern people had not forgotten their obedience to the Constitution, there would have been no rebellion. He was opposed to any amendment of the Constitution at the present time. [Great and continued applause.] As indorsers of the President's policy, he would mention Seward, Stanton, Wells, Grant, Sherman, Meade, Hancock and others. [Vociferous cheering.]

On the other hand, in opposition he placed the names of Stevens, Butler and others. [Mingled hisses and slight applause.] In conclusion, Mr. Cowan said his hope was in the virtue and integrity of the people both North and South. The Southern people had suffered severely, and now was the time to extend mercy, after they had surrendered to the law.

After others speeches by distinguished gentlemen the meeting adjourned.

DEATH OF A BISHOP OF THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—In our exchanges we find an announcement of the death of Bishop Burgess of Maine. He has been for some time an invalid, and had gone to the West Indies, hoping to regain his health. He was returning home, when he died. He was a native of Providence, Rhode Island. Dr. Burgess was one of the most accomplished members of that distinguished body, the House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States; a most faithful Diocesan, an able and eloquent preacher, a sound theologian, a ripe scholar, a poet of no mediocre pretensions, and in all the private, as well as professional relations of life, a most estimable man.

According to reports of a speech by John Bright, in support of the American freedmen's aid fund in London, on the 28th ult., £80,000 sterling had been sent to Exeter Hall for that purpose, and more was on the way.

HON. JACOB THOMPSON.—A Paris letter says that "Mr. Jacob Thompson, President Buchanan's Secretary of the interior, is in Paris, whither he arrived from Egypt three days since. Mr. Thompson says, were the ban removed from him upon the charge of having been engaged in the assassination conspiracy, he would go to Mississippi and do his best to aid in the reconstruction. He says there is ample evidence in the hands of the President that he had no connection with or knowledge, however remote, of the assassination plot. His son is carrying on his Mississippi plantation, and has, he says, made satisfactory contracts for work with his former slaves, about two-thirds of whom remain upon his plantation. Mr. Thompson is anxious to return to the United States, and expresses himself very freely in favor of the reconstruction policy of President Johnson, and upon the necessity of the Southern States accepting the situation and acting with loyalty and good faith."

A melancholy case of suicide is chronicled in the Cedar Falls (Iowa) Gazette. The wife of Mr. Thos. Chadwick threw herself into the Cedar river and was drowned on the night of the 1st. A short time since, she lost a child, and it seems that she upbraided herself with a lack of proper attention to it during its sickness, although without any reason, and on one or two occasions, in conversations with neighbors, she stated that she sometimes felt as though she would drown herself in the Cedar. On the night of her death she got up quietly from her bed kissed her child in its bed, went to the grave of her dead child, and from thence to the river and accomplished the fearful deed.

POLITICAL RIGHTS FORFEITED.—At the late election in Wisconsin a Mr. Heavers was elected town clerk in the town of Red River, Kewaunee county. It is alleged that he served in the rebel army, and Attorney General Gill has been consulted as to his eligibility to the rights under the United States government, and he says that Heavens is not eligible.

LONDON.—The London Times states that on the 8th of April, 1866, the population of the metropolis was estimated by the English Registrar General at 3,054,940. This is about one-sixth of the population of England and Wales, as reported at the last census, in 1861. The various parliamentary boroughs into which London is divided have an aggregate representation of eighteen members in the English House.

THE CATTLE PLAGUE.—The last cattle plague returns from England again show a decrease in the ravages of the disease. During the week ending April 28th, the number of animals attacked was 2765, as compared with 2823, the number attacked during the previous week. The total number attacked since the disease began has been 229,669, of which but 30,898 recovered.

The Tennessee Senate, on Saturday, passed the bill to disqualify certain Confederates from holding office in the State. All Confederate civil officers are excluded, and all Confederate army officers above the rank of captain.

THE LAST MAN OF THE RETREATING CONFEDERATE ARMY.—A correspondent of the Charlotte (N. C.) Times gives the following particulars of the North Carolina soldier who was killed at Pocahontas bridge, during the last retreat of General Lee's army. The name of the soldier has never before been given:

His name was Cummings Mebane, son of the late Rev. W. N. Mebane, of Madison, N. C.

It affords me pleasure to give the particulars of his death. On the night of the retreat of General Lee's army, Pocahontas bridge was left in charge of a lieutenant and a small body of infantry; with instructions to burn the bridge as soon as the troops crossed.

Before all the troops had crossed over, the enemy had commenced shelling the bridge, and it was exceedingly dangerous for any one to approach it. At this juncture volunteers were called for to burn the bridge, when young Mebane and Lindsey Wall, of Rockingham, stepped forward and their services. Young Mebane, notwithstanding the shot and shell were raking the bridge, reached its middle, and while applying the match was shot through the body with a grape shot. He walked back to the bank, and expired in a few moments. Although only sixteen years old, he was cool, intrepid and during as a veteran of thirty. His remains should be undisturbed, and a monument erected to his memory.

We have startling financial news from London, where the panic has not just culminated in the failure of some of the heaviest houses, including that of Sir Morton Peto and Mr. Betts, whose liabilities are set at £4,000,000. There was great excitement in consequence, and business was suspended.

There was a great fire in New York last week resulting in the destruction of the Academy of Music and other buildings. The loss is estimated at $3,000,000 and $1,000,000. Several firemen were killed.

THE OVERFLOW.—The country in Mississippi is nearly all inundated. The lands in Carroll, Madison, Tensas and Concordia are reported as under water and now, the wind reaches us that the great levee near Morganza has given way, and the largest portion of the rich agricultural lands on the Atchafalaya, stretching along that stream, are submerged. Several crevasses have also occurred on the east bank of the Mississippi. The plantations on Black river are reported as submerged, and many places on the Ouachita are also under water. Nearly the whole of the Red River lands are overflowed, and agricultural operations are, of course, entirely suspended. In addition to these calamities, the terrible rain storms that have prevailed all over the country, have seriously injured the chances for a crop throughout the hill lands. The prospects for the future are indeed gloomy, and not even the most sanguine now calculate upon more than one-fourth of a crop, even in the country that is free from inundation. On last Saturday the weather cleared up, and on Sunday and Monday the sun shone out as a May sun is expected to shine, and planters brightened up in view of a few days vigorous work but on Tuesday evening another storm swept over us, and floods of rain again descended upon the already saturated earth. The grass and weeds have attained a luxuriant growth, and the crops, what there are, are now struggling for existence, amidst the rank vegetation developed by the frequent rains.

There are rumors of a widespread conspiracy in Russia, of which the attempted assassination of the Czar was only a premature development. Great anxiety is said to prevail in Government circles; the police are on the alert, and the newspapers have been warned to be very careful in their articles.

A Genoa letter of the 1st, to the New York Tribune, contains the following sentences significant of war between Italy and Austria: "There is a general conviction that we are on the brink of a war in Venetia, and the commercial and political world are heaving with a great convulsion. Two facts tell the story: Italian bonds went down to 44 yesterday, and at the same hour the Parliament authorized the Ministry to adopt such extraordinary measures of finance as it may deem expedient, only one man voting against the bill. Nothing short of imminent danger could carry our bounds down from 64 to 44 in two weeks, and create unanimity in such a heterogeneous Parliament as ours."

NEGROES IN THE GALLERIES OF CONGRESS.—The Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Sunday Mercury thus writes:

The negroes at the capital have taken complete possession of all the public places, and on Wednesday last we counted 235 contrabands, of the filthiest character, in the gallery of the House, and as we left, in utter disgust and amazement, the darkies were pouring in. A large number of them had baskets, with their dinner, which they eat in the galleries, as though it were an eating saloon.

FROM WASHINGTON.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. Windle submitted an amendment, intended to be appended to the House resolution, No 127, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as follows:

ARTICLE —, SECTION 1. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty or property without the due process of law, nor deny any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

SEC. 2. No class of persons, as to the right of whom to suffrage any discrimination shall be made, shall be included in the basis of representation, unless such discrimination be in virtue of impartial qualifications, founded on intelligence or property, or because of alienage, or participation in the rebellion, or other crimes.

SEC. 3. The public debt of the United States, including all debt or obligations which have been or may hereafter be included in suppressing rebellion, or in carrying on war in defense of the Union, or for payment of bounties or pensions incident to such war, and provided by law shall be inviolable, and shall not be taxable by any State; but debts or obligations which have been or may hereafter be incurred in aid of insurrection or of war against the United States, and claims for compensation for loss of involuntary or servile labor, shall not be incurred or paid by any State, nor by the United States.

SEC. 4. The Congress shall have power to confirm, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

The News special says it is reported that some short diplomatic notes have recently passed between Mr. Seward and the French Minister in regard to the French and Austrian troops who have recently landed at Vera Cruz. Mr. Seward insists that no more French troops must be sent to Mexico than to take the place of those killed or disabled by wounds, or whose time has expired. The French Minister, it is said, stated that the landing of these or subsequent bodies of reinforcements will not prevent delay in the evacuation of Mexico by the French.

Washington specials to the New York evening papers say the belief prevails in diplomatic circles that a European war is inevitable; that Napoleon will withdraw his troops from Mexico at an early day and that Maximilian will find himself obliged to return for want of money.

THE CROPS.

AUGUSTA, Ga., May 20.—The newspapers contain accounts from Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, South Carolina and North Carolina, which represent the growing crop of cotton as very seriously impaired by cold weather, heavy rains and overflow of cotton lands, and stands bad. Defective seed, in a great measure, is the cause of its failure. The growing cotton is looking yellow and sick. Not more than one-third of a crop will be realized, as planters throughout the country are plowing up the bad stand and planting corn. The estimated crop cannot exceed one and a half million bales.

NASHVILLE, May 20.—In Bedford county, Tenn., whole fields of corn and cotton have been laid waste by the cut-worm, causing hundreds of acres to be replanted. Recently the army worm has made its appearance, and is committing extensive ravages. Many farmers are becoming thoroughly disheartened.

THE CHANGE OF MASTERS.—It now appears from the reports and testimony furnished at Washington, that in most cases the change of masters has not been so favorable for the unhappy African as the philanthropists of the North had wished the world to believe. The New York Times, referring to the action of the bureau agents, says:

There has been cruelty, too, in forms and to an extent almost incredible. The most prominent case adduced by the commissioners is that of a man, though a preacher, named Fitz, a native of Massachusetts, and a zealous worshipper of filthy lucre. This man presides over a colored colony in the neighborhood of Newbern, in the capacity of assistant superintendent of the bureau. Endowed with arbitrary power, he has employed it unmercifully to wring a large monthly income from the impoverished settlements under his care. Every hut, every boat, every horse and cart every store has been subject to heavy taxation, no one is exempted. As he has imposed barbarous punishments for the most trival offenses. He has imprisoned women because they spoke disrespectfully of him. He has imprisoned children because they played on the street on Sunday. He has punished a freedman with three months' imprisonment for wrangling with his wife. He has imposed a fine of sixty dollars on an old negro for telling a falsehood. In two instances—the commissioners say—he "suspended freedmen with cords around their wrists, their feet not touching the floor, and kept them in this position, in one case four, in the other case, six hours." Our own correspondent adds that thorns were placed under the poor fellows' feet "in such a manner as to cause them the most excruciating agony." These are but specimens of the freaks perpetrated of his own will and pleasure by this person, who, nevertheless retains his position under the bureau.

These statements, it must be borne in mind, do not come from unknown or irresponsible parties. They are from army officers, who have borne an honorable part in the war, and whose personal characters are beyond reproach.

MAXIMILIAN DISCHARGING CONFEDERATE OFFICERS.—The Times' Mexican letter says: three days before the death of ex-Governor Allen, Maximilian notified General Mejia, Surveyor General of the Empire of Mexico, and Col. Maury, who was then an attache of the Foreign Emigration Bureau, on account of his father's absence in Europe, that they should return the Secretary's portfolio on the 1st of May, and that on account of a lack of sufficient revenue those officers would be discontinued. Jubal Early left for Havana as soon as he heard of the discharge of the Confederates from office. Gen. Wilcox is the last to linger.

THE EAST TENNESSEE SEPARATION SCHEME.—The resolution introduced into the Senate some days ago for submitting to the people of the counties composing East Tennessee, the question of that section forming an independent State, was reported by the special committee to which the resolution had been referred. The majority report had recommended the rejection of the resolution, and the minority report favored its adoption. After considerable action, the majority was adopted by ayes 13, nays 8.

JEFF. DAVIS' HEALTH.—A telegram of the 18th inst., from Fortress Monroe, says the health of Jeff. Davis is now reported to be on the mend. A weekly report of the condition of his health is made by the post surgeon to Washington. He is allowed abundance of liquors, and many luxuries free, extended to him through the courtesy of the officers of the garrison. Mrs. Davis is allowed uninterrupted access to his cell at certain hours of the day. She has been assigned a casement, such as the wives of officers occupy. This privilege she has not availed herself of.

A HEROINE.—A band of outlaws went to the house of a man named Gunter, in Overton county, Tennessee, one day recently, and on some frivolous pretext, took him into the woods, stripped him, and were unmercifully whipping him. His daughter seized a hatchet, rushed to the spot, and succeeded by heroic bravery in killing two of the ruffians, and wounding others. The young lady and father have since been driven from the country. The origin of the difficulty is not known, but the family was Southern in sentiment during the war.

The Secretary of War has issued an order declaring that it was the purpose of the President's late Proclamation to put an end to the trial of civilians by Military Courts Martial, or Commissions; and, directing that the cases of all civilians now in military custody shall be "committed to the proper civil authorities." This order is not to be construed as affecting camp-followers, contractors, or others, whose offenses are, by the articles of war, or certain special acts, cognizable by military tribunals.

We learn from the Pine Bluff (Ark.) Dispatch, that a friend of Gen. Patrick R. Cleburne, is writing a history of that leader. He desires those of his soldiers who remember incidents or anecdotes of the "Stonewall of the West," to write out and forward the same to the office of that paper.

TESTIMONIAL TO CAPT. MAURY.—You will perhaps be surprised, says a London correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger, to learn no less a sum than fifteen thousand dollars has already been raised in England as a testimony to Capt. M. F. Maury, the former superintendent of the Washington Observatory, "in acknowledgment and appreciation of the eminent and disinterested services, which, through forty years of incessant labor, Captain Maury has rendered to science and mankind." The Duke of Sutherland heads the list, and the other names are chiefly those of men who sympathised with the South during the war.

SINGULAR.—The Lynchburg Express says a most extraordinary occurrence took place along the line of the Nashville and Decatur railroad, between Columbia and Pulaski, during the thunder storm there a short time ago. A half mile of the telegraph wires were melted, and divided over that whole distance into small fragments, irregular in shape, and many of them no larger than a buckshot or a small rifle ball.

A proposition is made in the Greensboro Journal to erect a monument to the memory of the Confederate dead from St. Helena, La.

There are two hundred and seventy four churches in New York, and one hundred and seventy-eight in Brooklyn.

TO ADVERTISERS.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has always been well known in this community as the very best advertising medium by which the business men of the city could bring their merchandise, trades, professions, and the like, before country readers in the States just named. This is easily understood when it is remembered that the four hundred preachers who are scattered throughout these States, in the Rio Grande, East Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Montgomery and Mobile Methodist Conferences, are all, more or less, active agents for the paper; and when it is also remembered that our paper circulates among a large class of people who seldom see any other New Orleans paper.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

	1 Month.	6 Mos.	12 Mos.
One square....	$ 5 00	$20	$30 00
Two squares....	7 50	25	40 00
Three squares..	10 00	30	50 00

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

The following piece was inimitably rendered at the recent anniversary exercises of the Methodist Sabbath School Union Society in this city, by a four-year old boy:

SATURDAY NIGHT.

Oh, why must my face be washed so clean,
And scrubbed and drenched for Sunday,
When you know very well, as you always have
It will be dirty again on Monday? [soon,

The soapsuds are down in my throat, and up in my nose—
To choke me you seem to be trying;
That I'll shut my mouth you need not suppose,
For how can I keep from crying?

You rub as hard as ever you can,
And your hands are hard, to my sorrow—
No one shall wash me when I'm a man,
And I wish I was one to-morrow.

Rocks.

A lad was taking his first trip by water, and as most boys do, rambled up and down the vessel, watching all about him with eager curiosity. By and by he stood beside the helmsman. Here and there over the water were scattered floating sticks of painted timber, and now he noticed that the vessel turned aside here and there to avoid them.

"Why do you turn out for those little sticks?" said the boy. "I would ride right over them."

The gruff old helmsman gave him only a glance from under his shaggy brows, and one word which seemed wrenched from the depths of his chest; one word, but it spoke a volume, "Rocks!"

That boy has long been a faithful pastor, and he often tells the lambs of his flock about the hidden rocks in their course, rocks that have wrecked a great many bright hopes and precious souls.

The dancing school is one of these rocks. It may look very innocent and pleasant, but there are fatal reefs there that may sink your soul in everlasting despair. Don't sip a little wine. Don't go in the society of boys who now and then utter an oath. You must turn out when you come to these rocks. There are buoys enough to warn you, good counsellors to tell you of your danger. Do not neglect their caution. When an old helmsman says to you, "Rocks," be sure there is danger ahead.

Your Bible is your only sure chart. Here you will find the buoys and lighthouses all marked down, telling you where the rocks are hid.

Christ our Guest.

When one of the boys in an orphan's home had said the grace, "Come, Lord Jesus, be our guest, and bless what thou hast provided," a little fellow looked up and said:

"Do tell me why the Lord Jesus never comes? We ask him every day to sit with us, and he never comes."

"Dear child, only believe, and you may be sure he will come; for he does not despise your invitation."

"I shall set him a seat," said the little fellow; and just then there was a knock at the door. A poor frozen apprentice entered, begging a night's lodging. He was made welcome; the chair stood empty for him; every child wanted him to have his plate; and one was lamenting that his bed was too small for the stranger, who was quite touched by such uncommon attentions. The little one had been thinking all the time:

"Jesus could not come, and so he sent this poor boy in his place; is that it?"

"Yes, dear child, that is just it. Every piece of bread and every drink of water that we give to the poor, or the sick, or the prisoners, for Jesus' sake, we give to him. 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.'"

Mr. and Mrs. Davis.

THEIR FIRST MEETING AFTER A YEAR'S SEPARATION.

A correspondent of the Norfolk Virginian, writing from Fortress Monroe, May 4th, says:

It is now understood that Mrs. Davis, with her little child, had an interview with her husband at half-past eight o'clock yesterday morning. The interview lasted nearly two hours, and must surely have been extremely gratifying to both. In the course of a twelve-month many very noticeable changes occur. It was on the evening of the 20th of April, 1865, that the steamer Wm. P. Clyde, from which a few hours before Jefferson Davis had been landed, slowly set sail, and while the steam and smoke issued from her engine and boilers, she moved slowly out of the harbor. The sole passengers on the Clyde were Mrs. Davis and Mrs. Clay, and her destination was Savannah, the Southern port from which she came.

For nearly a year Mrs. Davis has been refused the privilege of visiting her husband. The result of the many entreaties on her part, and those of her friends, has at last prevailed on the clemency of President Johnson, and the desired boon has been finally granted.

Your correspondent presumed yesterday morning at an early hour so much as to call on Mrs. Davis as she was awaiting, in the sitting room of the Hygeia Hotel, the presence of an officer from the Fortress. Sending in my card by the colored waiter in attendance, the desired object was at once acceded to.

The sitting room of the hotel has never, by any means, been noted for its comfort, or the expensiveness of its adornments. Entering the room, and passing through the requisite etiquette, occupied but a few seconds, and the agreeable conversation with Mrs. Davis which ensued, was far more than a recompense for the courage it required to solicit such an interview. The manner and conversation of Mrs. Davis was that of one perfectly at home on all subjects, and extremely lady like in all her remarks on the various topics of the day, which, perchance, were brought up. She had been allowed the privilege of correspondence with her husband, but of the exact state of his health she dared not hope.—The favorable opinions formed from the occasional correspondents of Northern papers were often dissipated by assertions perfectly contradictory, and in the long time which has elapsed since she has seen her husband it has often been a mere matter of doubt owing to the reticence of Mr. Davis in speaking of the subject of his general health. Of the terms of her visit she was not aware, but hoped it would be her privilege to remain at this place till her husband's fate was decided.

After conversing for the space of ten minutes your correspondent retired much impressed with the interview.

Mrs. Davis was accompanied by a large quantity of baggage. All of this was moved inside the Fort last night, and it is confidently presumed that she has made her home at the residence of Dr. Cooper, the Post Surgeon.

LETTER FROM THE EX-PRESIDENT.

The following letter from ex-President Davis, is in response to one from the ladies of Fayetteville, enclosing a check for Mrs. Davis:

FORTRESS MONROE, April 22, '66.

Mrs. J. K. Kyle, Fayetteville, N. C.:

MY DEAR MADAME: I have the honor to acknowledge yours of the 14th inst., enclosing a check to be forwarded to Mrs. Davis as a present from the ladies of Fayetteville.

Sadly remembering how your homes were desolated during the war, I could not have expected you, in the midst of the ruin, to have been mindful of the wants of those at a distance. Nothing could add to my admiration for the heroic, self-denying, Christian virtues of my countrywomen, for the measure was full to overflowing. Nor could anything increase the gratitude with which I will ever recur to their confidence and sympathy. It only remains to assure you, and the ladies whom you represent, that I am most gratefully and respectfully your friend and obedient servant, JEFFERSON DAVIS.

The Fortress Monroe correspondent of the New York Herald, after mentioning the arrival of Mrs. Davis, says:

"She was not long kept in anxiety. Mr. Davis had been apprised of her coming. Within fifteen minutes from the time of her admission to the fort she was with him in Carroll Hall. Lieut. Fessenden still here here company. She has remained with Mr. Davis all day, and took her dinner with him. An officer has been constantly in the same room. Their meeting was a tender and affecting one, as such a meeting must naturally be after such a protracted separation, and particularly under the circumstances attending their separation."

That which is a tempest to some, is to others a pleasant and prosperous gale.

Paying the Pastor's Salary.

A worthy miller—as the story is told in Dr. Dunbar's memoir—was once pained by hearing that the minister was going away for want of support, the church having decided they could no longer raise his salary. He called a meeting, and addressed his brethren very modestly, for he was one of the poorest among these comfortable farmers. He asked if the want of money were the only reason for this change, and if all were united in desiring the services of the pastor, could they still keep him. There was but one voice in reply. The pastor was useful and beloved; but the flock was so poor!

"Well," replied the miller, "I have a plan by which I can raise his salary without asking one of you for one dollar, if you will allow me to take my own way to do it. I will assume the responsibility for one year. Have I your consent?"

Of course they could not refuse this; although they expressed surprise, knowing the miller to be but a poor man.

The year drew to a close. The minister had been blessed in his labors, and no one had been called on for money. When they came together, the miller asked the pastor if his wants had been supplied, and his salary promptly met. He replied in the affirmative. When the brethren were asked if they were any poorer than at the beginning of the year, each one replied "No," and asked how they could be, when their church privileges had been so mysteriously paid for. He asked again, "Is any man here poorer for keeping the minister?" and the reply was the same as before. "Then," he said, "brethren, I have only to tell you that you have paid the salary the same as you always did, only more of it, and with greater promptness. You remember you told me to take my own way in this matter; and I have done so. As each one of you brought his grist to the mill, I took out as much grain as I thought your proportion, and laid it away for the salary. When harvest was over, I sold it, and have paid the minister regularly from the proceeds. You confess that you are no poorer; so you never missed it, and therefore made no sacrifice. Now I propose that we stop talking about poverty, and about letting our minister go, and add enough to his salary to make us feel that we are doing something." Mr. Dunbar used to say, "O, for a miller in every church!"

The story applies itself. No man ever yet made himself poorer by helping to pay the minister's salary, whether or not he knew when and how he paid it. We could, any of us, do twice as much as we do in that regard, and be just as well off at the year's end, if that be all. And then it is nothing to be able to "feel that we are doing something?"

The Evils of Tobacco.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF BLACK RIVER CONFERENCE ON THE USE OF TOBACCO.

Your Committee, to whom was referred the subject of Tobacco-use, would respectfully report:

That we believe the time has come when the Church of God should take high and advanced ground against the use of tobacco.—The united testimony of science and experience shows that tobacco is a poison that is now doing a fearful work of destruction on the bodies, minds and hearts of men. Although the first effects of its use are in some degree stimulative, its subsequent and great effect is narcotic and depressive, and thus it makes its devotees, in many cases surely, though not beastly drunk, and sometimes sends men to the madhouse, and causes a decided species of delirium tremens, and when used medicinally, has been known to cause death in a short time.

Although those who use tobacco are ordinarily possessed of reason, they are not so likely to reason consecutively and soundly; and more than this, it impairs the mind in its discriminations of things moral and religious, and benumbs the spiritual senses, so that most persons find it impossible to retain a pure conscience while continuing its use. Tobacco is thus sure to constitute a hindrance to progress of Christianity, both in individual experience and general society.

The use of tobacco excites an appetite for the use of alcoholic stimulants. If from education or otherwise, some tobacco-users reject alcoholic beverages, in many instances the young smoker braves every hindrance and rushes to the intoxicating bowl. What we now state has been denied, but it is too true. The extremes, stimulants and depressants, in turn call for each other, and together destroy the bodies and souls of men. So great is the estimation of this evil in many minds, that the question is being seriously mooted, which causes the greatest injury to mankind, the use of tobacco or of intoxicating drinks? We therefore recommend for adoption the following resolutions:

1st. That we hereby respectfully suggest to the members of our Church within the bounds of B. R. Conference, not to use, grow, manufacture or sell tobacco.

2d. That we congratulate the Conference in the progress which has been made upon this subject within the last few years, and sincerely hope that the good reform will go on, and the day come soon, when every member will be entirely free from the habit of using tobacco.

3. That we rejoice that the managers of our Tract Society have offered special prizes for suitable tracts on the subject of Tobacco-use, believing that such productions will do good.

4th. That next year the class seeking admission to Conference be inquired of by the Bishop, in connection with the disciplinary questions, whether they use tobacco or not.—If any one uses it, we will not vote his admission, unless he will agree to discontinue it.

5. That the next General Conference should provide by law, that no person who uses tobacco shall receive orders in our Church, or be admitted as a member of an Annual Conference.

6th. That we are glad to learn of the decided measures some of our Seminaries have taken for the prevention and suppression of this great evil; and especially congratulate the numerous friends of Falley Seminary in the highly commendable course taken by the Principal upon this subject.

J. B. FOOTE, Chairman.

The Ocean Bottom.

Mr. Green, the famous diver, tells singular stories of his adventures when making search in the deep waters of the ocean. He gives some new sketches of what he saw at the "Silver Banks" near Hayti:

The banks of the coral on which my divings were made, are about forty miles in length, and from ten to twenty in breadth. On this bank of coral is presented to the diver one of the most beautiful and sublime scenes the eye ever beheld. The water varies from ten to one hundred feet in depth, and is so clear that the diver can see two to three hundred feet when submerged, and with little obstruction to the sight.

The bottom of the ocean in many places is as smooth as a marble floor, in others it is studded with coral columns from ten to one hundred feet in height, and from one to eighty feet in diameter. The tops of these more lofty support a myriad of pyramidal pendants, each forming more, giving the reality to the imaginary abode of some water nymph. In other places the pendants form arch after arch; and as the diver stands on the bottom of the ocean and gazes through the deep winding avenue, he finds they will fill him with as sacred an awe as if he were in some old cathedral which had long been buried beneath old ocean's wave. Here and there the coral extends even to the surface of the water, as if the loftier columns were towers belonging to these stately temples that are now in ruins. There were countless varieties of diminutive trees, shrubs and plants in every crevice of the corals where water had deposited the earth. They were all of a faint hue, owing to the pale light they received, although of every shade, and entirely different from any plants that I am familiar with that vegetate upon dry land! One in particular attracted my attention; it resembled a sea-fan of immense size, of variegated colors and the most brilliant hues. The fish that inhabit these "Silver Banks" I found as different in kind as the scene was varied. They were of all forms, colors and sizes—from those of the symmetrical goby to the globe-like sun-fish; from those of the dullest hues to the changeable dolphin; from the spots of the leopard to the heads of the sun-beam; from the harmless minnow to the voracious shark.

There were also fish which resembled plants, and remained as fixed in their position as a shrub; the only power they possess is to open and shut, when in danger. Some of them resembled the rose in full bloom, and were of all hues. There were the ribbon-fish, from four or five inches to three feet in length; their eyes are very large, and protrude like those of a frog.

Another fish was spotted like a leopard, from three to ten feet in length; they build their houses like beavers, in which they spawn, and the male or female watches the egg until it hatches.

A NEW PRINCIPLE IN APPLICATION OF STEAM.—The London correspondent of the New York Times writes: "There is now a pretty steamer on the Thames, which runs ten miles an hour without paddle-wheel or screw. She takes in water well forward and expels it aft under each quarter, and can steer without her rudder, and can stop in less than her length when going at full speed." I saw this principle applied to a yawl boat on the river at Savannah, about the year 1818, by Samuel Howard of that place.—Augusta Chronicle.

A gentleman in Washington recently sent a telegram to Salt Lake City at 10.30 A. M., and received a reply at 5.30 P. M. The distance over which the telegram was sent was more than 5,000 miles. Another gentleman in Boston has received a telegraphic dispatch via San Francisco, from Japan, which was only twenty-six days coming. This is believed to be the quickest time yet made.

Love your enemies.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

We have but little animation to notice (says the Price Current of Wednesday) in the general market during the past few days. Nothing has been done in Molasses, only a limited retail business in Sugar, and less than usual in Western Produce. In Tobacco, however, there has been some demand for export, and our leading staple has been in fair request at full prices for the better qualities.

COTTON—We noticed in our last report that the market closed with a moderate demand, at 26 to 29c. for Ordinary, 30 to 31c. for Good Ordinary, 32 to 34c. for Low Middling, and 36 to 37c. for Middling. On Saturday buyers again came forward with a fair degree of spirit, and notwithstanding the moderate supply offering, and the high pretensions of factors for all desirable lists, 2200 bales changed hands at hardening prices for all kinds, but particularly for the better qualities, requiring in fact an advance of 1c. on the outside quotations for Strict Good Ordinary and Strict Low Middling. The same features marked the business of Monday, when stiffer prices were realised for Low Middling and purchases could no longer be effected at the inside rates of the previous day, while the sales summed up 1800 bales. Yesterday factors were still more stringent in their pretensions, and as but few buyers were willing to go on at the prices asked, the business was confined to 1100 bales, at stiffer rates for the better qualities.

The receipts proper for the four days ending on last evening comprise 2916 bales, against 3316 during the corresponding period last week, showing a decrease of 400 bales.

We now quote as follows: Ordinary, 27 to 29c; Good Ordinary, 30 to 32; Low Middling, 34 to 36; and Middling, 38 to 40c.

TOBACCO—Has continued in demand for export. There has been again considerable inquiry on foreign account, resulting in sales during the past few days of about 200 hogsheads. Holders are very stringent in their views, and the prices paid are said to be well up to our previous quotations, which we repeat: Low Refused, light, 5½ to 6; Good do., 6 to 6½; Common Leaf, 9 to 10; Fair, 12 to 14; Good, 15 to 17; Fine, 18 to 20; Choice Selections, 21 to 24. Heavy—6½ to 7; Good do., 7 to 7½; Common Leaf, 10 to 12; Fair, 13 to 17; Good, 18 to 20; Fine, 20 to 23; Choice Selections, 24 to 26—in currency.

SUGAR—The market has continued extremely dull and remains about a stand-still, there being no demand except in a small retail way. We quote 12 to 13c for Common to Fair, 14½ to 14¾c for Fully Fair, 15 to 15½c for Prime, 15¾c for Yellow Clarified and 16¼c for White. There were sales on Saturday of 31 hhds. Louisiana Yellow Clarified at 15¾c.

MOLASSES—The supplies of the domestic production are fair for the season, and those of foreign production are large, but there is still no demand. There have not even been any retail sales, and in the total absence of operations for some time we are again compelled to omit all quotations. We heard of the sale of a small lot of Cuba yesterday at 40c. per gallon.

FLOUR—The stock on hand is small and consists mostly of the lower grades, while the receipts are light. Dealers have nearly run out of supplies, and, with the probability of their being compelled to purchase soon, holders are very firm in their views and prices have been looking up. The sales on Saturday and Monday were confined to 1500 bbls., in small lots, to the city trade, at $7 50 for Fine, $8 for Unbranded, $10 for Superfine, and $11 75 to $12 50 per bbl. for Good Extra. Yesterday the market was very quiet and only 1000 bbls. were sold, in small lots, at $11 50 to $12 50 for Good Extra and $13 25 for Choice Extra.

PORK.—The market has been quiet but steady and firm with a small stock which is held at full prices. Mess has been retailing freely at $33 50 per bbl.

BACON.—Is scarce and in request, but insufficient supplies have prevented large sales and only retail sales were made at 14½ to 14¾c per lb for Shoulders, 18 to 18¾c for Ribbed Sides, 19½c for Clear Sides, 22c for plain Hams and 25 to 26c for Sugar-cured.

GREEN MEAT—The stock is small and there are very few Sides and Hams on hand. They are still retailing at 13 to 14c for the latter, 15c for Sides and 14c for Shoulders. Round lots may be quoted at 12½c per lb for Shoulders.

LARD—The stock on hand is light and the market is very firm. A lot of 75 tierces Prime sold on Saturday at 22½c, and 330 tierces on Monday at the same price. Prime in tierces has been retailing at 23c and in kegs at 24c per lb.

OBITUARIES.

Departed this life, on the 9th day of May, 1866, Mrs. LUCY G., wife of Rev. W. E. Doty, of Caddo parish, La.

The deceased was born in the State of North Carolina, on the first day of April, 1815. She was early instructed in the doctrines and precepts of Christianity. In the 14th year of her age she experienced, through the grace of God; and as the result doubtless of the religious culture which she had received, the regeneration of her moral nature. She identified herself immediately with the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which she continued to be an exemplary member until she was removed by death from the church militant to the church triumphant. God, in his providence, assigned to her a large share of Christian activity. She was married on the 18th of July, 1830, to the Rev. W. E. Doty, (then a member of the Tennessee Conference,) who has for nearly forty years been a faithful minister of the sanctuary. Sister Doty ever aided and encouraged her husband in the ministry. For more than twenty years past he has resided in this parish. During this time his home has been the abode of a refined and generous hospitality, from which also have issued streams of benevolence to soothe many an aching heart. Sister Doty, vivacious in intellect, constant and ardent in friendship, generous in the use of wealth, uniformly cheerful and happy, was ever the light and joy of that home. Death has transferred this Christian sister to a sphere of ampler activity, of more rapturous enjoyments.

"Let the world bewail their dead,
Fondly in their loss complain;
Sister! friend! by Jesus freed,
Death, to thee, to us is gain.
Thou art entered into joy;
Let the unbelievers mourn;
We in songs our lives employ,
Till we all to God return."

At Ease in Zion.

They may truly be said to be at ease in Zion who are not seeking to "grow in grace"—who are willing to live this year, as the last, without any increase in the elements of spiritual life—with no more love, joy, patience, zeal, or hope. The melancholy result of these attempts at spiritual inertia is that these people do not hold this spiritual position, but insensibly and surely lose ground. It is an invariable law of healthy life that it grows, and it is equally an invariable law of unhealthy life that it decays and tends to death.

They are at ease in Zion who manifest, by their cold indifference and non-zealous course, that they feel no concern for the salvation of souls—souls living in sin—souls traveling down to death—souls every hour in danger of perishing everlastingly—souls for whom the Lord of all did heavenly bliss forego—for whom he came down and died. That it is a solemn duty to feel for our perishing fellow-men and labor for their spiritual good, none can doubt who admit that Christ is our great example, and that we are to follow him. We see not how it is possible to be a Christian, in the proper sense of the term, without concern for the spiritual welfare of impenitent men. If the love of God flows within us, it will "constrain us" to labor for those for whom the Saviour died.

God's woe is upon those who are at ease in Zion. They shall have no spiritual joy. Their duties shall be a weariness. It shall not be sweet for them to meditate in the law of the Lord. The Gospel shall not be a joyful sound of glad tidings. They shall not be glad when it is said "let us go up to the house of the Lord." They shall not say on the mount of prayer, "It is good for me to be here." No, all their cold, reluctant service, shall be dull and joyless.

They shall not see any, by their shining and shining light, constrained to glorify God. Their children shall not be as the olive plants of peace around their table, but rather as the thorns of contention and sorrow. They shall see their joyless and powerless profession a blight upon the vineyard, and a stumbling-block in the path of the Gospel.

They shall have no deliverance in temptation, no help in loss, no comfort in affliction, no victory in death. How dreadful to have the woe of God impending over us, with more than the weight of a thousand mountains! It is more than all the wrath of earth or rage of hell. It leaves us to the nakedness of utter destitution, without inward or outward support, without hope, to the blackness and darkness of unmingled and unmitigated despair.

How can we be at ease when God the Father, Son and Holy Ghost put forth such mighty interest and mighty efforts to save the soul from death? When angels are hovering round or flying on swift wings, and ready to rejoice over one sinner that repents? when devils on wings that never tire, with burning hate that never cools, are seeking to destroy? while holy men are living, toiling and praying, to help the perishing to God? All below, all around, all above are astir, and only those who are at ease in Zion asleep. The voice from above, as with a trumpet blast, calls awake! prepare to meet thy God.

WORDS IN USE.—The peasants of England have not more than 300 words in their vocabulary. The ancient sages of Egypt, so far as we know from their hieroglyphic inscriptions, used about 685 words. A well educated person in England or America seldom uses more than about 3,000 or 4,000 words in actual conversation. Accurate thinkers and close reasoners, who avoid vague and general expressions, and wait till they find the word that exactly fits their meaning, employ a large stock, and eloquent speakers may rise to a command of 10,000. Shakspeare, who displayed a greater variety of expressions than probably any writer in any language, produced all his plays with about 15,000 words. Milton's works are composed of about 8,000, and the Old Testament says all that it has to say with 5,642 words.

From the German of Schiller.

THREE WORDS OF STRENGTH.

There are three lessons I would write—
Three words as with a burning pen—
In tracing of eternal light
Upon the hearts of men.

Have Hope. Though clouds environ now,
And gladness hide her face in scorn,
Put then the shadow from thy brow;
No night but hath its morn.

Have Faith. Where'er thy bark is driven—
The calm's disport, the tempest's mirth—
Know this: God rules the hosts of heaven,
The inhabitants of earth.

Have love; and not alone for one,
But man, as man, thy brother call,
And scatter, like the circling sun,
Thy charities on all.

Thus grave these lessons on thy soul—
Hope, Faith and Love; and thou shalt find
Strength when Life's surges cease to roll,
Light where thou else wert blind.

Causes of the Success of Methodism.

PART II.

BY REV. DR. A. STEVENS.

If we must narrow the explanation of this problem to the fewest possible conditions, I should say that there were two chief causes of the success of Methodism, one primary, the other proximate.

First, it was a necessity of the times, a providential provision for the times. The government of God over our world is a unit; the history of his Church is a unit; and however unable we may still be to correlate its diverse parts, yet in ages to come, perhaps after hundreds of ages, the world will behold its perfect symmetry. History is as much under the sway of laws as physics are. The apostolic ministry founded the kingdom of Christ in the world, but the apostles themselves predicted the rise of Antichrist and the great "falling away." The mediæval night, a thousand years long, followed; the Renaissance, with the Reformation, began the modern history of the world. The Reformation proclaimed the right and responsibility of the individual conscience in the interpretation of the word of God, and reproclaimed the apostolic doctrine of justification by faith. It went far, if not as far as it might have gone; but in the eighteenth century its moral power seemed about exhausted. It had made no great territorial progress after about its first half century; and in the eighteenth century the "Historical Criticism" and "Rationalism" arose, and with the prevailing popular demoralization threatened, as we have cited from Buruet, not only the Anglican Church, but "the whole Reformation." It had become necessary that some new development of Christianity should take place. It was a providential necessity, and God provided for it. At this very period of apparent danger the world was in the travail of a new birth. The American and French Revolutions were drawing near. The most important phases of the civilized world were to be transformed. Science, commerce, government, religion were to pass into a new cycle, perhaps their final cycle. The revolution in religion was to be as conspicuous as any other change in the grand process. The rights of conscience were to be more fully developed; the separation of the Church from the State, and the "voluntary principle" were to be introduced. For the first time in recorded history was about to be seen the spectacle of a great nation without a State religion. Mediæval dogmatism was to be more fully thrown into abeyance; ecclesiasticism and hierarchism to receive a shock under which they might still reel for a while, but only to fall, sooner or later, to their proper subordination or desuetude. The permanent essential principles, not so much of theology (so-called) as of religion, were to revive with the power of their apostolic promulgation. Missions, Sunday-schools, Bible societies, popular religious literature, all these powers which I have affirmed to have arisen with Methodism, were to come into activity in the religious world coördinately with the new energies of the secular world. The Church, in fine, was anew to become a living, working organism; and to be not only the Church of the present, but, if I am not much mistaken, the Church of the future. The old questions of rationalistic biblical criticism and of ecclesiasticism were not to be immediately laid, but they were to become only occasional incidents to the Christian movement of the new age. Colenso and the Essayists, Pusey and the Oxford Papal tendencies, were yet to appear, but not seriously to obstruct the march of evangelical truth. Methodism had its birth at the date of Rationalism in Germany. The Biblical criticism of Colenso and the Essayists was anticipated in the writings of Bolingbroke and other English authors before Methodism had fairly started. That criticism is much older. Spinoza's Politico-Theological Treatise is almost entirely made up of it, a much abler discussion than modern English doubt has produced. I know not how far modern critical skepticism may yet go; I know not what, if any, demonstrations it may reach; but one thing we absolutely know: that the ethical purity which speaks in the Gospel, the spiritual life which filled the primitive Church with saints, heroes, martyrs, and which is now filling the Christian world with good works, sanctified homes, and peaceful deathbeds, can never be overthrown; that against a living, loving, working Church the gates of hell can never prevail; and that the very existence of such a Church presupposes the coëxistence of all essential theology. The production of such a Church was the special, providential appointment of the eighteenth century, "a continuous revival," as Wesley was able to say after fifty years in the old world; a still continued "revival," as we are able to say to-day after a hundred years in the new world. If we may not venture to affirm that Methodism, distinctively so-called, is this modern development of Christianity, we need not hesitate to say with Isaac Taylor that the religious movement of the eighteenth century, called Methodism—Calvinistic and Arminian—is its true historical exponent, "the event whence the religious epoch now current must date its commencement."

Such was the providential origin of Methodism, such the primary condition of its success. But what was its other chief or proximate cause?

The "Holy Club" was founded at Oxford, and the title of Methodism given to it in 1729, ten years before the recognized epoch of the religious movement which it was to introduce. The Wesleys, Whitefield, and other mighty men were then or soon after in it; but they had no notable success, for they had not yet received power from on high. The Wesleys came to America and labored faithfully here, but still without success, and they returned home defeated. Something was yet needed. They preached and suffered in England, but still without appreciable effect. As Methodism was to be the next great stage of religious progress, after the Reformation, it was to have affinity with the Reformation. The salient doctrinal faith of the Reformation was justification by faith; Wesley had been feeling after this as in the dark during all these ten years; but now by the very writings in which Luther had declared it, at the Reformation, he was to find it. On the 24th of May, 1738, sitting in a little religious meeting in Aldersgate-street, and listening to the reading of Luther's preface to the Epistle to Romans, the great truth flashed upon his soul. "I felt," he writes, "my heart strangely warmed; an assurance was given me that He had taken away my sins, even mine, and saved me from the law of sin and death." There is the proximate cause of all the Methodism in the world to-day, for that was the "dispensation of the Spirit," which has since continued in a baptism of fire upon our Churches. On that memorable night genuine Methodism had its birth. What would have been Wesley's theological opinions without this quickening of the Spirit? tenets only of the brain, exciting him to unavailing struggles, as they had for ten years. What his practical system, had he ever been able to devise it, but a wretched failure, from which he and his people would soon have recoiled, as from a burden intolerable to be borne. This new spiritual life, this strange warmth of the heart, made his theology vital, his system practicable; gave power and demonstration to his preaching, and spread like contagion through his assemblies. It intoned their hymns, and kindled their prayer-meetings, classes and love-feasts. The manner of its inspiration, the time of it, its effects and evidences, and the extent to which it could be perfected, became the themes of discourse in their meetings and in their familiar converse all through the British realm. Conversion, the witness of the spirit, and sanctification, were but its corollary truths. It inspired men to enter the ministry, it inspired their preaching, and produced the peculiar power of their preaching, and of all their denominational methods, as witnessed throughout the world. Without it almost everything else that is characteristically Methodistic would have been not only ineffective but impracticable. The multitudes, the very mobs, recognized this power of personal religion, this divine power and glory of the regenerated man, in the representatives of the new movement; they saw it in their countenances, in their tears, and heard it in their tones. It was the magic power by which they controlled riots, and led persecutors in weeping processions from the highways and market-places to the altars of their humble chapels. If it be inquired what has been the one chief power in the success of Methodism, and what is the chief power for its future success, I reply, it is this "power from on high," this "unction from the Holy One."

Such, I think, were the primary and proximate conditions of the success of Methodism. Its theological and practical systems I have admitted were secondary, and, perhaps, indispensable. There were also many others, doubtless. I mention further but one, and particularly because it affords an important admonitory lesson: the character of its chiefs. And I mean not merely their greatness. They were, indeed, great men, as the world is beginning to acknowledge: Whitefield the greatest of modern preachers, Wesley the greatest of religious organizers, Asbury indisputably the greatest character in the ecclesiastical history of this hemisphere by at least the results of his labors. But it was not so much by their great abilities, as by qualities in which we may all share, that they made Methodism what it is. Its leaders were its exemplars, and that fact expresses more of the philosophy of our history than any other except that of the baptism from on high of which I have spoken. There is no human power above that of character. The character, not the genius, of Washington has made him chief among the military or civic sons of men. The character of a military leader can make a whole army an array of heroes or a melee of cowards. The greatest of talents is character, and character is the most attainable of talents.

Had John Wesley, when his cause was somewhat established, retired from his self-sacrificing labors, and acted the dignified, well-endowed prelate in City Road parsonage, his whole system would soon have fallen through. By traveling more, and suffering more than any of his preachers, he kept them all heroically traveling, laboring, suffering. Asbury kept Methodism astir throughout this nation by traveling from Georgia to Massachusetts on horseback yearly, preaching daily. None of his preachers exceeded him in even the humblest labors of the ministry, in praying in families, in leading classes, or in prayer-meetings. His power was military, and he used it with military energy; but he imposed on the ministry no task that he did not himself exemplify. Under his command the conferences moved as columns in the field of battle, for they knew that their leader would be in the thickest fight, would be chief in suffering and labor as in authority and honor. Asbury's daily life was a challenge to the humblest of them to endure all things. It became a point of chivalric honor among them to evade no labor or suffering; they consented to be tossed from Baltimore to Boston, from Boston to beyond the Alleghanies. The post of greatest trial became the post of greatest honor. How would all this have been changed if Asbury, at his episcopal ordination, had housed himself in Baltimore, reposing on his dignity, and issuing his commands without exemplifying them? Let us understand, then, that our great men must be great workers in whatever sphere they occupy; that this is the requisite of the age, and was always a requisite of Methodism. An itinerant superintendency or episcopacy has ever been a favorite idea of the Church. She has instinctively perceived its importance; and her fathers declared in her constitutional law that the General Conference shall not "change or alter any fact or rule of our government so as. . . to destroy the plan of our itinerant general superintendency." The unity of the denomination, the fellowship of the Churches, their cooperation in great common undertakings, and the self-sacrificing spirit of the ministry generally, have been largely attributable to this fact of our system—a fact peculiar to Methodism among Episcopal Churches. And I apprehend that they who speculate occasionally among us in favor of diocesan episcopacy have not well studied the genius of Methodism. Let us rather rejoice that the war which has restored the republic has restored also to the Church its primitive, its one diocese, coextensive with the nation.

Such is a brief review of the conditions or causes of the success of Methodism—too brief but yet such as our limits will allow.

For persons to plead head, tooth, or sidoache as an excuse for neglecting public worship on the Sabbath, when they are running all about in the mud and rain on Saturday and Monday, is a species of moral swindling, which merits, and which receives, the sarcastic comments of an eagle-eyed infidelity! Alas that so many professed followers of Christ should thus put him to an open shame!

Prussia and Austria.

The present conflict between Austria and Prussia, and which now threatens to involve both countries, if not all Europe, in war, has grown out of the Schleswig-Holstein troubles; but it is only a new phase of an old problem which must be settled sooner or later. It is the irrepressible question of the supremacy of the one or the other power in Germany, and implies at the same time the broader question of German unity. After the liberation of those German Duchies from the rule of Denmark, by the combined forces of Austria and Prussia, the victors divided the spoils without any regard to the wishes of the people, as if they were merely a flock of sheep. Prussia pocketed Schleswig, and bought Lauenburgh; Austria took temporary possession of Holstein. But it was generally understood, after the convention of Gastein, that Prussia would before long buy out Austria, which is separated from Holstein by several intervening sovereignties, and has no natural affinities with the people of Northern Germany. A permanent foothold of Austria in Holstein is out of the question, although it is but natural that she should be unwilling to relax her hold for the mere gratification of her rival. It would undoubtedly be better for Schleswig-Holstein to be incorporated with Prussia, instead of forming a separate state under the Duke of Augustenburg, and thus increasing the number, already too large, of conflicting German sovereignties. Only it ought to be done, not by arbitrary power, but by the voice of the people themselves. The Duchies belong together, and ought never to have been separated. Their possession is necessary to Prussia for the development of her naval power, and this is desirable for the good of Germany, which needs the protection of a navy for the extension of her commerce, and the defense of her interests against France, England, and Russia.

The rivalry between Austria and Prussia dates from Frederick the Great and the seven years' war. Austria is old and waning, but haughty, tenacious, and strong in resources. Prussia is a young and rising power, which has steadily and irresistibly grown since it became a monarchy. Austria is nearly bankrupt, but has passed through severer trials than the present one and recovered herself. Prussia is in a flourishing financial condition, and boasts of an admirable military organization, and a civil administration which moves with the regularity of clock work, and is said to be more honest than that of any other of the great powers of the world. Austria is a mixture of half a dozen nationalities—German, Slavonic, Hungarian, Italian, etc. Prussia is a purely German power, and hence far better adapted to represent and protect German interests at home and abroad. Austria is strongly conservative, and has always been, with Russia, the backbone of despotism on the continent of Europe. Prussia, although at present ruled by a king who boasts of being a soldier, and nothing else, and a prime minister who, next to Napoleon, is the ablest and boldest champion of absolutism on the continent, is a limited monarchy with a liberal constitution which must ultimately prevail. Austria is far behind Prussia in science, art, and popular education, in which Prussia stands in front of the civilization of the age, her universities being the first in the world, and her public schools the model of our American common system. Austria is predominantly Roman Catholic, and, next to France, the strongest support of the papacy. Prussia, although embracing six millions of Catholic inhabitants, is essentially a Protestant power, and intrusted with the defense of Protestant interests on the continent of Europe. She is a natural ally of England in all the great questions of modern progress; and the crown prince of Prussia, who is married to a daughter of Queen Victoria, is said to be imbued with English ideas of constitutional liberty. We look upon the present despotic regime of Bismarck, who plays with the Prussian Chamber of Deputies as a cat with a mouse, as a mere temporary affair. Prussia must ultimately stand out as the champion of constitutional freedom in politics, and of evangelical Protestantism in religion. Here lies evidently her great historical mission.

By being true to this mission Prussia can best subserve the cause of German unity, which must ultimately prevail over all the little selfish interests of several dozen conflicting dynasties. The day for small rival powers has passed away. The world will be governed hereafter by a few mighty empires or republics. The Italians are nearly a unit, and if it were not for the temporal power of the Pope, backed by the bayonets of Napoleon, and for the Austrian rule in Venice, they would all come under the scepter of Victor Emmanuel. The Germans have a much better right to a national unity than the Italians. Unity is the desire of the vast majority of the people, and has been thwarted only by the little kings, princes, and dukes who would thereby lose their occupation and power. United, the forty millions of Germans would become a powerful nation, and exert a political influence commensurate with their high intellectual culture and vast resources.

Now this German unity will probably be brought about by the growth of Prussia, and the decline of Austria, which has always supported the small dynastic interests and made use of them for her own ends. Prussia will acquire the supremacy in Germany, and gradually absorb the small states in the north and middle of Germany. The Parliament of Frankfort actually offered the late King of Prussia the crown of a new German empire; but he refused from honorable, conscientious scruples, and from fear of an inevitable collision with Austria. Nor was Frederick William IV. the man for the crisis. Frederick the Great would not have shrunk from it, and would have maintained his ground. He once said if he was king of France he would not allow a cannon to be fired in Europe without his permission. An emperor of Germany united might say the same.

The present collision between the two great rival powers of Germany, whether it lead to actual war or not, will probably force this question of German unity to an issue, or at least advance it some steps towards its ultimate solution. Count Bismarck, who is eminently a man of action, has himself given it this turn by a bold and truly Napoleonic stroke of policy, the proposal of a reorganization of the German Confederacy by a national Parliament elected by universal suffrage. He hoped in this way to checkmate Austria, and to gain the popular sympathies, which he had lost by his repeated dissolutions of the Prussian Chambers. The German liberals, much as they dislike the man, may yet seize his proposal and use it as an instrument for the realization of their darling scheme.

Unfortunately the liberal and democratic party in Germany, and on the continent generally, is strongly tinctured with skepticism and infidelity. They have yet to learn that true liberty is not liberty from law but in law, and that the fear of God is the beginning of political wisdom and sound statemanship.

But of one thing we are sure, that Germany ought to be united, as France, England, Russia, and the United States; that she ought to be organized and reconstructed on the basis of a compact federal union, whether monarchical or republican, as distinct from a loose confederacy; and that the weight of her power and influence in the history of the world should be wielded in favor of the cause of constitutional freedom and of Protestant Christianity.—Philip Schaff in the Evangelist.

A Baby Proves its Mother's Innocence.

A poor, pale, wan seamstress was arraigned for theft. She appeared at the bar with a baby of eleven or twelve months in her arms, her child. She went to get work one day, and stole three gold coins of 10! each.

The money was missed soon after she left her employer, and the servant was sent to her room to reclaim it. She said to the servant: "I was going to carry the coins back to you." Nevertheless, she was carried to the commissioner of police, and he ordered her to be sent before the police court for trial. She was too poor to engage a lawyer, and when asked by the judge what she had to say for herself, she answered: "The day I went to my employer's I carried my child with me. It was in my arms as it is now. I was not paying attention to it. There were several gold coins on the mantle-piece, and unknown to me it stretched out its little hand, seized the pieces, which I did not observe till I got home. I at once put on my bonnet, and was going back to my employer to return them, when I was arrested. This is the solemn truth as I hope for Heaven's mercy."

They could not believe this story. They upbraided the mother for her impudence in endeavoring to palm off such a manifest lie for the truth. They besought her for her own sake to retract so absurd a tale, for it could have no effect, but oblige the court to sentence her to a much severer punishment than they were disposed to inflict on one so young, and evidently steeped in poverty. These appeals had no effect except to strengthen the poor mother's pertinacious adherence to her original story. As this firmness was sustained by that look of innocence which the most adroit criminal can never counterfeit, the court was at a loss to discover what decision justice demanded. Three gold coins were placed on the clerk's table. The mother was requested to assume the position in which she said she stood at the employer's house. There was then a breathless pause in the court. The baby soon discovered the bright coin, eyed it a moment, smiled, and then stretched forth his tiny hand and clutched them in its tiny fingers with a miser's eagerness. The mother was acquitted.

Simplicity in Language.

Don't part with your common sense when you write. You need not make an idiot of yourself, because you have a pen in your hand. Be simple, be honest, be unaffected in your speaking and writing. Never use a long word where a short one will do.—Call things by their right names; never smother your thought with a cloud of phrases; let a spade be a spade, not a well known oblong instrument of manual industry; let home be homo, not a residence; a place a place, not a locality. Write much as you would speak; speak as you think. With your inferiors, speak no coarser than usual; with your superiors no finer. Be what you say, and say what you are. Avoid all oddity of expression. The wise man will so speak that no one may observe how he speaks. Above all, do not bore your company with an affectation of precision and accuracy. One of the worst nuisances is the talker who is always setting you right. If some one says that 10,000 men were killed in some battle, do not tell him that it was only 9,970. Allow for a little latitude of statement in the freedom of easy talk, and be not shocked with a certain degree of harmless embellishment, when no false impression is given or intended. Talk not to please yourself, but your neighbor; give him the refreshment of sitting by a cheerful, modest, sensible talker; one who is equally ready to give or to take; and who leaves his facts and his opinions on your memory; not the words in which they were uttered. Be a gentleman in openness of demeanor, in simplicity of language, in freedom from singularity, if not by birth. Show your good taste and good breeding in your speech and style, if not in the fashion of your dress or your knowledge of etiquette.

THE PRINCESS OF WALES.—The Home Journal furnishes some gossip about the Princess of Wales. One of its London writers says: I saw, recently, an autograph letter of eight pages, written by the princess royal to an artistic friend. The letter was in French, and was expressed in a remarkably clear and simple style. Many of the remarks on art subjects proved her royal highness to possess both knowledge and originality. I also saw some drawings that had been done by the princess. One of them, the likeness of a lady at the Prussian court, was so excellent that it would have gone far to establish the artistic reputation of any private person. It may be interesting to mention, what I happen to know as a fact, that the princess receives at her court, with great kindness and distinction, all persons who are remarkable for their artistic or other acquirements. I understand that she possesses a singular charm of manner and address.

The wind is a musician by birth. We extend a silken thread in a crevice of a window, and the wind finds it and sings over it, and goes up and down the scale upon it, and Paganina must go somewhere else for honor, for, lo! the wind is performing upon a single string. It tries almost everything on earth to see if there is music in it; it persuades a tune out of the great bell in the tower, when the sexton is at home sleep; it makes a mournful harp of the giant pines, and it does not disdain to try what sort of a whistle can be made out of the humblest chimney in the world. How it will play upon a tree until every leaf thrills with a note on it, while a river runs at its base in a sort of murmuring accompaniment. And what a melody it sings when it gives a concert with a full choir of the waves of the sea, and performs an anthem between the two worlds, that goes up, perhaps, to the stars, which love music most and sung it first. Then, how fondly it haunts old houses, mourning under the eaves, singing in the halls, opening doors without fingers, and singing a measure of some sad, old song around the fireless and deserted hearths.

Many flowers unfold their petals to the sun, but only one follows it constantly. My heart! be thou the sun-flower, not only revealed to thy God, but obedient to his influences.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate has always been well known in this community as the very best advertising medium by which the business men of the city could bring their merchandise, trades, professions, and the like, before country readers in the States just named. This is easily understood when it is remembered that the four hundred preachers who are scattered throughout these States, in the Rio Grande, East Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Montgomery and Mobile Methodist Conferences, are all, more or less, active agents for the paper; and when it is also remembered that our paper circulates among a large class of people who seldom see any other New Orleans paper.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

	1 Month.	6 Mos.	12 Mos.
One square....	$5 00	$20	$30 00
Two squares...	7 50	25	40 00
Three squares..	10 00	30	50 00
Four squares...	12 50	35	60 00

Larger advertisements in proportion.

TO OUR AGENTS AND SUBSCRIBERS

1. The price of the paper is Five Dollars per annum, in advance: and it will be sent for 12 months only, unless the subscription price is renewed. We propose to keep no other books than the one containing the names of subscribers and their address. Due notice will be given in the paper a few weeks previous to the end of the subscription.

2. All traveling Preachers in the several patronizing Conferences throughout the Southwest are our Agents. They will receive a paper for five subscribers, and be paid one dollar for each subscription over that number.

3. If money forwarded by mail is registered at the Postoffice when it is mailed, we will take the responsibility of its safety. But where it can be forwarded by private hands, the security is greater.

4. Be explicit in writing names and offices and routes—especially in directing to the "New Orleans Christian Advocate," as the Church North has already issued a sheet in this city entitled the "New Orleans Advocate."

The Pic-Nic of the Carondelet street Church Sabbath School, which was postponed yesterday, on account of unfavorable weather, will be held next Saturday, at the City Park. The members of the Church, and especially the parents of the children, are cordially invited to be present and co-operate with the Managing Committee, of which Mrs. Walmsley, 246 Baronne street, is President, in rendering the affair successful in every particular.

The children will meet at the Church at 9 o'clock precisely, and all basket contributions should be at the same place by the same hour.

In case the weather should be again unfavorable, the pic-nic will be held in the Church, and made as interesting to all as the circumstances will admit.

Rev. Thos. B. Sargent, D. D.—The Rev. Thos. B. Sargent, D. D., late of the East Baltimore Conference, who located at the session of that body, has been received by Bishop Early into the Virginia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and appointed as the successor of Bishop Doggett to the charge of the Centenary congregation of Richmond.

Personal.—On Tuesday last the Rev. Bishop Kavanaugh and lady left this city for Louisville on the steamer "Arthur."

We are happy to state that the Bishop's health was improving.

Revival at Carrollton, Miss.—The Mississippi Conservative of a recent date, reports an extensive revival of religion in progress in the Methodist Church at Carrollton, Miss.

Tennyson is almost as notable at home for his personal beauty as he is for his genius. He, is, we are informed by those who have met with him in England, like the late Bishop Bascom, almost the perfection of manly beauty.

A WORD IN SEASON.

Personalities.—We are not surprised that Dr. J. P. Newman is not pleased with the course we have felt constrained to take respecting the attempts at "fraternity" with the Church South by the two New York Conferences, in which he took some part. But in our remarks upon the subject we were careful, neither directly nor by implication, to utter nothing against Dr. Newman personally, nor did we severely criticise his part of the proceedings. We are surprised, therefore, and grieved, to find in the New Orleans Advocate (Dr. Newman's paper) a coarse and ungentlemanly personal attack upon us. In that kind of writing we assure our brother we are no match for him, and shall leave that whole field to his undivided occupation. Dr. Newman certainly has his excellencies and his capabilities, but we suspect that they do not lie either in controversy or negotiation.—N. Y. Christian Advocate and Journal.

The above is in good time. Being somewhat of a stranger to the Rev. Doctor we did not attempt anything of the kind, lest our motives should be misconstrued. He can hardly donbt those of his brother, Dr. Curry. It is indeed of great service to be plainly dealt with; to a truly good man, rather an occasion of grateful record. We, in common with his Northern friends, could not fail to observe the editorial discourtesy of the Rev. Doctor, which, in more than one instance, passes into positive grossness; to notice that, when his wit failed him, which unfortunately happened more than once, he fell to making faces and calling names—indeed speaking of us as "his bloodless soul," "the unscrupulous," "Mr. Dr.," and other such like impotencies. At first we saw only their intent, and felt to complain of one who assumed to be the chief representative in the Southwest of so august, so considerable a body as the M. E. Church, and to say, with Agamemnon,

"Grant that the gods his matchless force has given,
Has foul reproach a privilege from Heaven?"

But afterward we saw that such coarse personalities, scattered through an article, only detracted from its strength; that they were neither aromatic, piquant nor pungent; reminding one of a bladder of "Lorillard's Best Scotch," without the snuff. Having naturally some pride in "the profession," we had pretty much concluded not to say anything more which might load him to expose himself, for certainly, as Dr. Curry "suspects," his "excellencies and capabilities do nat lie either in controversy or negotiation." As our silence might have been misconstrued, we are relieved by the timely lecture of the New York Christian Advocate and Journal, the great official of the Northern Methodist Church, to the Rev. Dr., an agent of that Church.

We wish that, while he was about it, Dr. Curry could have corrected the Rev. Dr.'s notions of right and property, as well as of wit and controversial propriety—dissipating those singular conceits which lead him to inveigh against and be quite horrified at our efforts to obtain repossession of churches which were built by our own ministry, for our own colored people; while he could only be persuaded to give up churches which were not his own by the forcible ejection of President Johnson; which declaims with infinite relish against a people who find business and support in the day-labor of the "poor African," and against Southern missionaries to the colored people who consent to receive any part of a support from them; but which does not hesitate to eat, drink and flourish upon funds collected by missionary societies for the purpose of sending the Gospel to the heathen and the negro, though mainly employed in the more pleasant and congenial task of preaching Christianity to white people. And we cheerfully add, in this connection, that if we are shrine-makers to the "great goddess Diana," as the Rev. Dr. thinks he has discovered us to be, he has a right to call us to repentance, for he is paid generously to preach to the heathen.

The "Quartette"-lecture, and this "Personality"-lecture both mention another unpleasant trait in Dr. Curry's patient: we allude to a certain seeming consciousness of being by far the most important man to "the front," in the present attitude of the "two Methodisms." This imaginary conspicuousness has betrayed him into a sufficient amount of poorly sustained telegraphic suggestive unities and "fraternities." It has also led him to sit in judgment upon men who for more than half a century stood foremost, in the opinion of the Christian world, as among the most gifted, the most devoted, the most laborious, and therefore the most venerable of Christ's ministers—such men as Dr. Lovick Pierce and Bishop Andrew; men who have been remarkable for an overflowing power and depth of unaffected common sense, both in the pulpit and out of it, and who therefore could hardly be supposed to cross the field of vision of the Doctor's patient, or else at so great a distance as to be quite beyond his space-penetrating power. Well, upon these most venerable, godly men he has remarked that one, indeed both of them, have fallen into great mental decay, and instances the addresses of the Bishop, and the Episcopal-ordination sermon of Dr. Pierce. The addresses speak for themselves, as replete with wisdom, the undimmed glory of our beloved Andrew. That Valedictory of the Man, the Minister, the Aged, the Friend, the Father, the Bishop, the Faithful Watchman, and the servant of all "for Jesus' sake"—its sweet simplicity, and genuine humility, and conscious rectitude withal, reminding one of Samuel's review of his life as the prophet of God—we shall never forget it, as one of the most eloquent we ever listened to. And as to that ordination sermon, we know not by what rules this learned critic estimates sermons; but if the elements of correct and profound analysis, of varied, graceful and forcible expression, of pertinent, pointed application, enter into an able discourse, then was this all that, and more; characterized by appropriateness of theme, marvellous touch, those turns of speech at once striking and practical, for which this great preacher has always stood pre-eminent; and, above all, the gray hairs, the unction, and the glorious presence of one who had been preaching with unabated force for sixty-two years. We felt while listening to it that the old warrior could yet draw a bow which not one man in ten thousand could bend. Yet here we have a mere sprig in comparison taking that sublime Pulpit Prince to task for not having declined to preach on so important an occasion! This height of conceit is the same that blunders into congratulatory notes to Bishops elect, an appropriate recognition from one high functionary of one Methodism to another high functionary of another Methodism—absolutely estimating itself on an equality with the very highest.

"Upon what meat doth this our great Cæsar feed?" etc.

Hadn't Dr. Curry better have his Diplomatist swapt off for something tamer and safer? It is very easy to discover a trace of sadness in the tender reproof of our text. We don't wonder at it, for the case is somewhat hopeless. But maybe, after all, the exhortation will not be without good effect. Let us hope, in regard to the Rev. Dr., that "Though ye have lien among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold."

The General Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church.

Rev. W. H. Wills, from Committee on the Communication of Bishop McTyeire, reported the following, which was adopted:

The special committee to which was referred the communication of Bishop McTyeire, together with a copy of the report of the special committee of the Methodist Episcopal General Conference, lately in session in New Orleans, to provide a plan for the introduction of lay representation into such church, submit the following report:

Your committee beg leave to express their great gratification at the reception of the bishop's letter, and do most sincerely reciprocate the sentiment of brotherly kindness which it breathes.

From the bishop's letter we learn, that in addition to the adoption of the report of the committee, the General Conference appointed a commission of seven of its distinguished ministers to confer with a commission of this body, who should have power to devise, and, if practicable, to consummate a plan of union between the Methodist Protestant Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Your committee feel profoundly impressed with the frankness, kindness, and confidence with which such a proposition is made; but, with the lights before them, your committee do not feel prepared to recommend the appointment of said commission.

In the opinion of your committee, the General Conference has not authority to act in the premises, this power alone being with the people. As, therefore, this General Conference has already recommended to our several annual conferences the calling of a general convention for other purposes, to sit in Montgomery, Alabama, on the first Tuesday in May, 1867, your committee recommend that the commission appointed by the Methodist Episcopal Church South be invited to confer with the convention aforesaid; or, if our several Annual Conferences shall decline to call a general convention, then the invitation to the commission be continued to meet and confer with our next General Conference, to be held at Montgomery on the first Tuesday in May, 1870; especially as by this last named period the subject of lay representation in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will have been decided either affirmatively or negatively by their several Annual Conferences, to whose arbitrament it has been referred by the General Conference.

In view of the foregoing, your committee submit for adoption the following resolutions:

1st. Resolved, That the President of the General Conference be authorized and directed to forward Bishop McTyeire a copy of the foregoing report, and these resolutions, with the assurance of the high regard of this General Conference for the bishop, and for the Conference which he represents; and to express the hope that the time may come when all obstacles to a closer union shall be removed.

2d. Resolved further, That Bishop McTyeire be requested to give to the brethren composing the commission above referred to such official information as will enable them to act understandingly on the subject confided to them.

The "Fete Champetre."—Dr. Deems pays a tribute to the ladies who at so great pains enlivened the dull monotony of the General Conference. He says:

"Last Saturday 'the women of New Orleans'—an immortal title henceforth—did a Christian thing in making us break away from the wearing labors of the Conference and ride with them four miles away to a delightful park, where under old oaks, among gipsies, in the beautiful light of a pleasantly warm Louisiana Spring afternoon, we were permitted to enjoy a most charming Fete Champetre, amid music, flowers, food, smiles, delicate attentions, and genial speechifications. This is too wide a subject to be entered upon broadly, and I must condense it into this: that I have never before been at a pic-nic which was not a bore, but this was perfectly agreeable and interesting from noon 'till dewy eve.' No one can estimate all the labor and care necessary to bring about such perfect arrangements, but the ladies may have their reward in the remembrance that they did this for the servants of their Lord, who 'will not be unrighteous to forget their work and labor of love.' Heaven bless the 'women of New-Orleans,' a phrase that has nerved many a man up to heroism, as it will send the name of one man down to the infamy of increasing contempt."

American Bible Society.—The Fiftieth annual meeting was held in New York, May 10th, at the Academy of Music. Mr. Lenox, president, delivered the opening address, in which he reviewed the various customs of the ancient Jews in observing times and seasons and particularly the jubilee, the year of freedom of gratitude, of rejoicing. Receipts from all sources $642,625, of which $365,000 were from sales, $50,000 in legacies, and $182,879 by donations. The issues of the last five years—6,555,231—exceed those of the first thirty-three years of the Society — 6,347,140 — by 107,091 volumes. The distribution by the United States Christian Commission of books granted to that body for the army and navy, during the war, was 1,466,748 volumes, valued at $179,824. Dr. Spring moved the first resolution, thanking God that he, having been present at the inception of the Society, was today permitted to see that jubilee occasion. Other addresses by Bishop M'Ilvaine, Dr. Anderson, of the American Board, Robert C. Winthrop, Esq., several foreign delegates, Bishop Janes, and Major-Gen. O. O. Howard.

The Emperor of Austria, on Good Friday, went through the annual ceremony of washing the feet of twelve poor old men, and as many old women, their aggregate ages amounting for the former to 1069 years, and for the latter 1063 years. The eldest of the group was 96 years of age, the youngest 85.

The Monthly Church Meeting.

There has been a growing conviction for some time past among our leading thinkers that there was in our Church a want of Christian communion, and that too little interest is felt by our people in church operations generally. Something more than we had seemed to be needed. True, our Love-Feasts are eminently promotive of Christian fellowship and zeal, but they are occasions too infrequent to accomplish the desired end. Our Class-Meeting institution, too, tended to Christian fellowship, but only partially so, for in large congregations there were several classes, and only a few come to know each other socially and spiritually. On the Circuits, in consequence of the increased Sabbath services, necessitated by the practice of sister denominations, the preachers have found it impracticable to meet and lead the classes, as formerly under the old system of week-day preaching, and not unfrequently impossible to find any other suitable man who could or would do this work.

The necessity for society lies deep in the constitution of human nature. It is one of the profoundest and most universal wants of the soul in all relations, and we apprehend eminently so in our spiritual relations.

With these facts and convictions pressing strongly upon them, the General Conference addressed themselves to the task of providing some remedy (if they might) for this defect in our system. To meet this need of our Church, the Monthly Meeting has been devised and made an institution in our system, to be observed in all the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

These meetings will be held in the rural districts on the Sabbath, but at such hours as not to interfere with stated public services. In the towns and cities they will often be held on week-day evenings. As I understand, and as I have practiced, these meetings are to be composed exclusively of the members of our Church—the exercises to be opened by reading the Scriptures, singing and prayer. Then the pastor is to give a short account of what has been done during the month or quarter past—informing the members how many have joined the Church, how many have been baptised, children and adults; if any have died, mentioning anything about the dead calculated to awaken zeal, inspire hope, or impart consolation; how the membership are attending upon the means of grace; his opinion as to the spiritual condition of the church; and any suggestions which their circumstances may seem to render proper. These meetings should be made as interesting as possible, by as much variety as practicable. Sometimes read the roll of members—ask after the missing, and if need be, appoint a committee of persons most convenient or suitable to visit them, to inquire what may be the matter, to let them feel the church is concerned about them, and to stir them up. Sometimes, if there are leaders present, they may be called upon to report the attendance and condition of their classes. At other times, let the superintendent (if there be a Sunday-school) report the state and special needs of the school. Whenever it is deemed expedient, the stewards can present a report of the receipts and wants of the Board to meet the expenses of the Church. It will be well to let the congregation know what they are doing for the promotion of the various benevolent interests of the Church—in order to provoke unto good works, to state what other congregations and charges are doing, financially and spiritually. It would be well to ascertain how many of our periodicals are taken by the congregation, and on such occasions to say a word on behalf of this important arm of our aggressive service.

The meetings should not be long, nor tedious. Let the statements be short and clear, and only so much presented at each meeting as may seem most necessary and interesting. Let at least half of the hour, or at most, hour and a half, be devoted to devotional and experimental exercises. After the manner of the Love-Feast, let the members voluntarily express their feelings as to their personal state, or suggest what they think would promote the piety of the membership, or the enlargement and success of the church.

I think these Monthly Meetings may, in various ways, be made promotive of followship and zeal. First, the membership, as nearly as possible, meeting together once a month or once a quarter, will come to recognize each other as brethren, and, to some extent at least, form each other's acquaintance. This will greatly help the young, and such as may be so circumstanced as to have no Christian friends in their domestic or social circle. Secondly, the knowledge of what the church is doing, or ought to be doing, and what other congregations are doing, will, I think, powerfully tend to awaken interest and kindle zeal in relation to all the interests of the church. Thirdly, the devotional and experimental exercises will tend to keep aglow and fan the flame of holy affections and heavenly aspirations.

I devoutly hope our ministers will exert themselves to make this new social feature in our church a blessing, and largely promotive of Christian fellowship and spiritual power.

Ministerial Support.

"The Lord hath ordained that they which preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel."

I remember once to have heard a non-Calvinistic preacher quote this text in proof of his position, that God's ordinations were not always irresistible and of certain fulfillment; "for," said he, "some of us who preach the Gospel know but too well that we do not live of the Gospel." "This witness is true;" there are "other some" of us that have the same knowledge. Indeed I know of but few ministers among us who have traveled twenty consecutive years who have not contributed, besides their whole time, thousands of dollars towards their own support. I have known rich men, with incomes of from ten to fifty thousand dollars per year, who gave (or rather, paid) towards the support of their pastors from twenty-five to a hundred dollars annually, and thought that they were doing liberally—doing their full proportion. Three or five hundred dollars per year towards the support of the pastor is usually thought to be generous, even among our richest men; but I have known pastors who had a little property, which they or their wives had inherited, yielding five or ten hundred dollars per year, who, besides devoting their whole time to the work of the ministry, contributed this little income also in order to eke out a support. Now, so far as my hearing goes, I have not heard anybody express any admiration at these instances of liberality on the part of ministers towards the support of the Gospel. We say these were contributions towards the support of the Gospel in the communities where these pastors labored, for without them these pastors and their families must have been seriously inconvenienced, or the pastors compelled to retire in part from their ministerial work and engage in some secularity in order to live.

These annual contributions were taken from the patrimony of their families—from the comfortable settlement of their children, or from the support of their families in case of their death or physical inability to preach. Contrasted with the gifts of these poor pastors, (frequently their entire income,) the contributions of rich men, of fifty, one hundred or five hundred dollars, do not appear so generous and so grand, and there is no great ground for complacency and self-congratulation.

Another error of men of means may be properly noted in this connection. We have heard them say, "This appointment has one hundred, two hundred, or five hundred members, and if each would pay five, ten or twenty dollars, it would be ample to meet all the expenses for the year." Certainly, but who are these one, two, or five hundred members? Many of them boys and girls, poor widows and poor people, who have no resources, and whose contributions can be little more than nothing—some of them, indeed, worthy objects of charity. As I read the Book, we are to do in this matter according to our ability and as the Lord hath prospered us.

Methodist.

Sir Samuel Romily says: "There is nothing by which I have, through life, more profited, than by the just observations, the good opinions, and the sincere and gentle encouragement of amiable and sensible women."

African Methodist Episcopal Church.—The General Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Church was held, a week or two since, in Washington City. Bishop Payne presided, assisted by Bishops Quinn, Wayman, and Campbell. This year is the fiftieth of the existence of this Conference as a body, and Bishop Wayman delivered, by appointment, the semi Centenary sermon before the Conference. The African Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church embraces 10 Annual Conferences, 4 Bishops, 200 traveling preachers, and 75,000 members. They own 236 churches, have 39 circuits, 40 missions, and 50 stations. Their Sunday-school scholars and teachers number 21,000, and they have over 18,000 volumes in their libraries. Their church property is valued at over $850,000 and they expend more than $84,000 a year for the support of their preachers.

Incidental Benefits of Missions.—During his recent visit to England, Dr. Livingstone stated that there was unfairness in estimating the benefits of missions by demanding specific results. We must look to the general effect on a people or nation. Not long ago an eminent college professor declared that the Missionary Herald of the American Board was, separate from all religious considerations, the best journal of science in the country. The contributions of the foreign missionaries to our antiquarian and philological acquirements have been very great. Considered from a sanitary stand-point, the late two letters of Dr. Hanlin, of Constantinople, on the cholera, are likely to be of more value to the American people, this year, than the total expenses of the Board for the same period.

The London Times.—We learn that the London Times establishment employs three hundred and seventy persons; every branch and department of which is managed with the most systematic precision and discipline. It has now reached a daily circulation of sixty-five thousand copies, requiring eleven tons of paper per day. The paper used is of linen. Its subscription price is $45 per annum. The large cylinder press on which the paper is printed, turns out eight papers every second and a half, or, allowing for stoppages, about twelve thousand five hundred per hour—equal to one thousand every four minutes. After the type is set for the day's paper, stereotype copies are made of it, in order to supply forms from which to print a sufficient issue for the day. No papers are issued to subscribers directly from the office, they being supplied by the newsmen.

Results of Moderation in Diet.—Health and longevity are not the only results of moderation in diet. Its influence is far from being limited to the body; its effect on the mind is still more important. Julius Cæsar, constitutionally addicted to excess, when resolved on some great exploit, was accustomed to diminish his diet to an extent truly marvelous, and to this diminution be ascribed the clearness and energy of mind which distinguished him in the hour of battle. When extraordinary mental vigor was desired by the First Napoleon, he used the same means to attain it. To his rarely equaled moderation in diet, Dr. Franklin ascribed his "clearness of ideas" and "quickness of perception," and considered his progress in study proportionate to the degree of temperance which he practiced. While Sir Isaac Newton was composing his "Treatise on Optics," he confined himself to bread and a little sack and water.

Scarcely less rigid was the abstinence of Leibnitz when preparing some parts of his "Universal Language." D'Aubigne relates of Luther, on the authority of Melancthon, that "a little bread and a single herring were often his only food for a day. Indeed, he was constitutionally abstemious; and even after he had found out that heaven was not to be purchased by abstinence, he often contented himself with the poorest food, and would continue for a considerable time without eating or drinking." Dr. Cheyne, a celebrated physician, reduced himself from the enormous weight of 448 pounds to 140 pounds by confining himself to a limited quantity of vegetables, milk and water, as his only food and drink. The result was a restoration of health and mental vigor—and, amid professional and literary labors, uninterrupted health and protracted life. An eminent man once made the remark, "that nobody ever repented having eaten too little."

The Northern overland telegraph enterprise is a gigantic affair. Through British America, 1200 miles; through Russian America, 900 miles; across Behring Strait, 184 miles: across the Gulf of Andyr, 210 miles; and thence overland to the mouth of the Amoor river, 1800 miles, or a total of 4294 miles. At the Amoor it is to be continued by a Russian line connecting it with Irkoutsk, through Western Siberia, communicating with Nijni-Novgorod and Moscow, and thence to St. Petersburg. The capital involved amounts to $10,000,000.

The latest advices from Guadeloupe, West Indies, state that the cholera is disappearing. The mortality has been 10,806, out of a population of 149,107.

It is probable that the maximum of the regular army will be fixed at 40,000 men. A new bill is being matured in the House.

WEEKLY SUMMARY OF NEWS.

FROM WASHINGTON.

In the House, on Tuesday last, Mr. Williams submitted a preamble of resolutions, requesting information from the President whether any employe of the Government in the Southern States has offered public honors to dead or living Confederates. Mr. Nicholson objected to the resolution, and it was laid over.

Thad Stevens introduced a bill declaring that the States lately in rebellion have forfeited their rights under the Constitution, and can be reinstated in the same only through the action of Congress. It provides that they form valid governments, the present being continued for municipal purposes until they shall be duly altered and their executives and legislatures recognized. Constitutions are to be formed by conventions, and submitted to the people, a majority of the whole being necessary for their ratification; all males about 21 years of age to vote; no Constitution to be presented for Congressional sanction which denies civil rights to any person.

The bill was committed to the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union.

Thad. Stevens also offered a resolution instructing the Committee on Pensions to double the pensions of Federal soldiers engaged in the civil war.

Mr. Stillwell offered a resolution instructing the Committee to report extending the provisions of the pension laws to provost and deputy marshals, enrolling officers, killed or disabled. He declined to modify it so as to make it one of inquiry. It was adopted by yeas 65, nays 55.

Mr. Whaley offered a resolution directing the Committee on Printing to report a bill limiting the hours of labor of the employes of the Government printing office to eight hours per day. It was rejected.

Mr. Lynch, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported adversely on exempting the currency of State banks, outstanding from the 1st of July, from the tax of ten per cent. imposed by law. The report was laid on the table.

During the debate on Saturday, Mr. Stevens referred to a recreant and apostate Senator. He was understood to mean Mr. Doolittle, of Wisconsin.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The Senatorial caucus on the reconstruction report was in session to-day, but the proceedings were secret. They will consent not to the section disfranchising the South until 1870. This is believed to be the occasion of Thaddeus Stevens having introduced another reconstruction bill in the House to-day.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—The tax bill which passed the House contains provisions for an export duty on cotton of 5 per cent. on each pound.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—Senate.—The Colorado bill passed over.

The reconstruction resolution was considered. Mr. Johnson made a motion to strike out the third section, which disfranchises the Confederates until 1870. This section was stricken out by a unanimous vote of 43 yeas. Several amendments were offered embodying views of republican caucus. They exclude from Federal and State offices those who have been members of Congress, and legislative or judicial officers who took part in the insurrection, or who gave aid and comfort thereto. Congress, however, may remove such disability by a vote of two-thirds.

House.—The bill to continue in force and amend the Freedmen's Bureau bill passed by yeas 96: nays 32.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—Appointments of Assessors of the Internal Revenue: Alex. P. Hall, for Mississippi; Chas. C. Hascall, for Charleston, S. C.; Horace Broughton, for Marshall, Texas; Lucius J. Burnett, for Little Rock, Arkansas; William H. H. Watson, for Atlanta, Georgia; Richard L. Watkins, for the Third District, Russellville, Alabama; Aldward La Croix, for the Second District of Alabama.

J. B. C. Stith, of Louisiana, has been appointed consul to Athens, Greece.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—Senate.—The following joint resolution is a complete proposition to the Constitutional amendment, and is said to be the result of the deliberations of the Republican Senatorial caucus:

SECTION 1. All persons born in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the States wherein they reside. No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any persons within its jurisdiction the equal privileges of law.

SEC. 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within the Union according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed; but whenever in any State the elective franchise shall be denied to any portion of its male inhabitants being citizens of the United States, not less than 21 years of age, or in any way abridged except for participation in the rebellion or other crimes, the basis of representation in such State shall be reduced in the proportion which the number thus excluded bears to the whole number of male citizens not less than twenty-one years of age in such State.

SEC. 3. Senators, Representatives in Congress or electors of President or Vice President, or any office holding civil or military position under the United States, or under any State who, having previously taken an oath as a member of Congress or as an officer of the United States, or as member of any State Legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof, Congress may by a vote of two-thirds of each House remove such disability.

SECTION 4.—The obligations of the United States, incurred in suppressing the rebellion and in defence of the Union, or the payment of bounties or pensions incident thereto, shall remain inviolate.

SEC. 5. Neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or claim compensation for loss or emancipation of any slave, but all such debts, obligations or claims shall be forever held illegal and void.

SEC. 6. Congress shall have the power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of these articles.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—Senate.—The reconstruction resolutions were taken up and various attempts made by the minority to modify the different sections, but every one was voted down. Pending the consideration of the third section the Senate adjourned. There seems to be no doubt, from the unanimity of the Republicans today, that it will pass by a two-thirds in the shape reported from the Republican caucus.

WASHINGTON, May 30.—Mrs. Davis has left to rejoin her husband at Fortress Monroe. Her departure was hastened by advices from Dr. Cooper, that Mr. Davis was reduced to such physical prostration that he is unable to take his daily walks across the plat of the Fortress without lying down to rest several times.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, May 20.—Rumors concerning a European Congress are conflicting. It is said Austria has refused to join.

No direct negotiations have yet been addressed to the Courts of Vienna and Florence. The latest vague rumors are that hostilities have already commenced.

The situation of continental affairs remains unchanged. War seems imminent as ever.

Marshal Benedick has issued an order to the army, expressing confidence in the army and the justice of the Austrian cause. Warlike news is pouring in from various quarters, from Italy particularly.

Lord Clarendon admitted in the House of Lords that confidential communications were passing, but expressed his conviction that there was no hope for a peaceful adjustment.

The panic in the English money market had sensibly subsided. Securities had generally improved, but still heavy suspensions continue, and fears are entertained that many more will follow. The weekly returns of the bank of England is the most extraordinary one in its history. The bankhad increased in its private advances on one week over £10,000,000 sterling, but has not availed itself of the liberty given to exceed its charter.

In the House of Commons, Mr. Watkins called attention to the reciprocity treaty, and pointed out the danger of assembling United States war vessels on the fishing grounds. He animadverted on the conduct of the British Government. Mr. Layard defended its policy, and said the British Government was not responsible for the termination thereof, but the United States would listen to no negotiations for its renewal. He deprecated the speech of Mr. Watkins as calculated to arouse hostilities throughout America.

This Government was actuated by friendly motives in sending to prevent difficulties. Mr. Cardwell said the Government had received satisfactory reciprocity from the American Government.

AUSTRIA.

The Vienna correspondent of the London Times, writing on the 8th says:

In three weeks or a month Austria will have 600,000 men and 1000 guns in the field, and you may be sure that she will not disarm until she has come to a perfectly satisfactory understanding with Prussia. If I am well informed on the subject not more than 150,000 men will be left in the southern part of the Empire, as the possessors of the Quadrilateral and of Venice will have an immense advantage over their enemies. It is a pity that Italy consented to co-operate with Prussia against Austria, for the Emperor was beginning to listen patiently when the question relative to the cession of Venetia was mooted in his presence.

PRUSSIA.

The Berlin correspondent of the London Times writes on the 8th:

By royal order of yesterday the three corps d'armie, which had been but partially affected by the two preceding orders, are mobilized. After this step—a consequence, by the way, of the mobilization of the entire Austrian army, ordered on the 6th—the whole of the Prussian regular forces will be ready to take the field two or three weeks hence. The main army, if the aspect of affairs does not improve, is to consist of about 250,000 men, under the command of the king, with Gen. Moltcke as chief of the staff. It will be so disposed as to hinder the Austrians advancing upon Berlin by way of Saxony. Another army of about 120,000 men will be stationed near Nisse, a strong fortress in Southwestern Silesia. The formidable character of the Austrian preparations may be gathered from the fact that while the main army, whose strength will be about equal to Prussia, is assembling on the western frontiers of Bohemia, a second body is being concentrated in the eastern counties of that kingdom, and a third to the west of Cracow. The latter has already reached the number of 40,000 men. Reckoning up the sum total of the available forces, it appears that Austria and Prussia will confront each other with between 300,000 and 400,000 men on either side. Over and above these, Austria has 180,000 men free to move upon Italy. The Austrian muster of troops is somewhat ahead of the Prussian; but while the more exposed of the Prussian fortresses are already in a perfect state of defence, much remains to be done in the Austrian strongholds in Bohemia and Moravia.

ITALY.

A letter from Florence says:

Were it possible to obtain a bird's-eye view of Italy at the present moment, we should see all the principal roads swarming with troops moving north and east. Austria was before hand with us in preparation, and great diligence is necessary to obviate the risk of a surprise. Although all these matters are enveloped in the profoundest mystery here, I have reason to believe it is only just now that the military chiefs begin to feel confident in their power to resist a sudden attack. The railways have been and continue hard at work, and on the line northward only one train in twenty-four hours now runs for the use of the public. All the necessary preparations for a great war are proceeding with the utmost activity. Things have got to that point that it is quite impossible for Italy to recede.

The reports of Garibaldi's arrival have of late been numerous, some saying that he was to land at Leghorn, and others at Genoa, but it is quite possible his coming may be a little delayed, as constituting of itself almost a declaration of war. For the same reason the formation of the volunteer corps is kept quiet, and the decree remains unpublished. When it appears, I believe it will be found to declare that the twenty battalions of volunteers (probably 15,000 or 16,000 men) are to be "under the command of Gen. Garibaldi and under his entire responsibility, or words to that effect. It is quite possible that Garibaldi may take off his corps to some unknown destination. A descent on the Dalmatian coast would not be at all unlikely. With Hungary still unsatisfied, hopes may be built on an insurrection there, to which an Italian force on the Adriatic might extend a hand of amity, while the name of Garibaldi would act as a spark to light it up.

The Nazione goes so far as to say that even the cession of Venetia could not now disarm Italy, and she could only reply, "it is too late." In any case, the staving off the war now so imminent is not likely to be accomplished by English influence. England is in a fair way to be considered on the continent as no longer forming part of the European family, so careless does she show herself of its affairs.

Jefferson Davis.

VISIT OF RADICAL SENATORS TO FORTRESS MONROE.

[Fortress Monroe Correspondence of the New York World.]

A dearth of news most distressing is prevalent on this point, which nothing can dispel, not even rumors or gossip concerning Mr. Davis. The past two or three days it has been raining most incessantly, which contributed not a little to the general dullness. In days of yore we used to have an occasional arrival of vessels from remote regions, but at present not even a schooner boards in easts and [illegible] to the roads, but proceeds on her [illegible] either to Norfolk or up the James riv[illegible]s a slight change in the above prog[illegible]. I can only state that this morni[illegible] have had a distinguished arrival [illegible]ve Senator, though he be a radical. Maj. P. Poland, United States Senator from Vermont, reached this place to-day, via Baltimore, and is the guest of Col. A. P. Blunt, quartermaster of this district.

Whether the distinguished Senator came here to ameliorate the condition of the "natives wards," or inquire into the general health of Mr. Jefferson Davis, has not transpired. One thing, however, is certain, that Mr. Poland, in company with Senator Wilson, from Massachusetts, have been expected here for the past two weeks, and only to-day the former arrived singly and alone. The great radical, from Massachusetts, however, is represented by his son, a dashing young man, holding a commission in the 5th United States cavalry. This noble scion is apparently enjoying himself, judging from his rides with young ladies from the fort, even if his parent is not here.

THE TRIAL OF JEFFERSON DAVIS.

This important event is now the all-absorbing topic of conversation. The fact of the United States District Court, lately in session at Norfolk, adjourning over to meet in Richmond next month, and on top of it, a bill having passed in the Senate, making only two terms of the court, in May and December, smacks of a desire on the part of the radical faction to keep Mr. Davis confined until the last of the year. It seems that Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase wishes to defer the trial, if not shirk the responsibility of presiding at [illegible]gether.

The opinion of most eminent men whom I have consulted is, that, according to the adjournment of Judge Underwood, his May term is extended into the next month, and the grand jury who found the indictment against the ex-President of the Confederacy were no doubt anxious to try Mr. Davis as much as to find an indictment against him. Will the trial come off as soon as June?

The indictment which has been found against Davis is said to be a very weak document; and if Mr. O'Connor is the counsel for the defense, or any other of your eminent jurists, will find very little trouble in picking it to pieces. There is one count in it, and that relating to a particular day and date. However, that is a matter for the lawyers to descant upon; and as I am only to give you outside opinions, I will not intrude my own upon you.

It is stated that the counsel for Jefferson Davis will demand his immediate trial, or if Government ask a postponement, which possibly they will, a demand for his release on bail will be made. They are ready to give bail to the amount of $10,000,000.

FORTRESS MONROE, May 28.—Charles O'Conor and Geo. Shea, the counsels for Jefferson Davis, left for New York this evening. They were in consultation with Mr. Davis most of yesterday. They say they found him in better health than they anticipated, and although worn from long confinement, he was in possession of his keenest faculties, and fully alive to the important issues involved in his trial. They said they only obtained permission to visit him after many futile attempts during the past year.

The Horrors of Point Lookout and Elmira.

We have been anxious, says the Charlottesville (Va.) Chronicle, to see from some competent hand an account of the manner in which our Confederate soldiers fared as prisoners of war, and we are, therefore, happy to announce that Mr. A. M. Kelley, of the Petersburg Index, has published in a small and very readable volume his experience of a protracted confinement at Point Lookout and Elmira. There is so much said about Andersonville and Salisbury, that it is well to know how these things were managed by the parties whose virtuous indignation has been so much aroused against Capt. Wirz and Major Gee.

It is proper, however, to bear in mind that the opportunities for providing some tolerable degree of comfort to those held as prisoners of war were very different at the North from what they were at the South. For the last two years of the war the population of the Southern Confederacy were not only deprived of the luxuries of life, but it was really a struggle to procure food of the plainest kind. Most persons consumed no tea, coffee, or sugar; many lived without meat. The clothing was of the rudest material, and the wardrobes of the wealthiest exceedingly scanty. By a rigid blockade the Federal ships and troops rendered it difficult to procure medicines, which, if obtained, were sold at fabulous prices.

It is well known also that our armies subsisted on the scantiest rations, and that frequently they were almost in a starving condition.

At the North there was everything in abundance—corn, wheat, pork, beef, vegetables, woolen and cotton fabrics, medicines, wines, fruit, tea, coffee, etc.

Notwithstanding this, at the prisons of Point Lookout and Elmira, where thousands of prisoners were confined, our men were always hungry, and in the winter were never protected from the cold.

Mr. Kelley gives the following as the following as the bill of fare at Point Lookout: For breakfast, four or five ounces of meat (pork or beef) and a slice of bread and "rather over half a pint of water slop, by courtesy called soup." This was all a man got to eat in twenty-four hours.

At Elmira the ration of bread was a full pound per day. The meat ration, on the other hand, was invariably scanty. "It sometimes happened that the same man got bones only for several successive days." Rats were eaten in numbers. "I have seen," says our author, "a mob of hungry rebs' besiege the bone cart, and beg from the driver fragments on which an August sun had been burning for several days.

At Point Lookout the water was so impregnated with some mineral as to offend every nose, and induce diarrhea in almost every case. It colors everything black in which it is allowed to rest, and a scum rises on the top of a vessel if it is left standing during the night, which reflects the prismatic colors as distinctly as the surface of a stagnant pool." There are "wells" outside the prison pen from which the Federals supplied themselves with good water.

Speaking of this same prison, the writer says: "During the scorching summer, whose severity during the day is as great on that sand-barren as anywhere in the Union north of the gulf, and through the hard winter, which is more severe at that point than anywhere in the country south of Boston, these poor fellows were confined here in open tents on the naked ground, without a plank or a handful of straw between them and the heat or the frost of the earth. And when, in the winter, a high tide or an easterly gale would flood the pen, and freeze as it flooded, the sufferings of the half-clad wretches may be easily imagined. Many died outright, etc. Even the well-clad sentinels, although relieved every thirty minutes, (instead of every two hours, as in the army rule,) perished in some instances, and others lost their feet and hands, through the terrible cold of the season."

"During all this season the ration of wood allowed to each man was an armful for five days, and this had to cook for him as well as to warm him."

This is not all: Only one blanket was allowed to each man. There were regular inspections, and every extra blanket was seized.

"You could receive nothing in the way of clothing without giving up the corresponding article which you might chance to possess." All money was also taken away.

Every third day there were negro sentinels on duty, whose "insolence and brutality were intolerable." If a prisoner crossed the dead line, their warning was the click of the lock, sometimes the discharge of the musket.

The shelter at Point Lookout was at the rate of one "A" tent—covering about six feet square—to each squad of five; one of the Sibley tent—diameter fifteen feet—to every eighteen men.

The author was transferred from Point Lookout to Elmira, where a number of the officers in command were civil and kind, and a number brutes and villains. One Capt. Bowden, at this prison, had up before him, on some occasion, a prisoner named Hale—of the old Stonewall brigade—for drunkenness, and he sought to know where he got his liquor. Hale refused to tell, as it would compromise others. He was accordingly tied up by the thumbs, suffering exquisite torture; but he refused to peach, and called on his fellow prisoners to remember this when they get home. Bowden grew exasperated, and attempted to gag him by fastening a heavy oak tenpin in his mouth sufficiently—a difficult operation,—he struck him in the face with the oaken billet—a blow which broke several of his teeth and covered his mouth with blood!

At Elmira the most scandalous neglect existed in the hospitals in the matter of providing his patients with proper food. "I do not doubt that many of them perished from actual starvation."

There was also "an inexcusable deficiency in medicine." Several weeks, in which dysentery and inflammation of the bowels prevailed, there was not a grain of any preparation of opium in the dispensary, and many a poor fellow died for the want of this medicine. The doctors were also extremely ignorant. The mortality which took place exceeded even the reported mortality at Andersonville.

At Andersonville, out of a population of 36,000, six thousand, or one-sixth of all, died from February 1, 1864, to August 1, 1864. At Elmira the quota was not made up till the last of August, so that September was the first month during which any fair estimate of the mortality could be made. Now, out of less than 9500 persons on the first of September, three hundred and eighty-six died that month. At Andersonville, it was one-thirty-sixth of the whole per month; at Elmira it was one-twenty-fifth. At the first it was less than three per cent. per month; at the latter it was four per cent. per month.

Another Steamboat Disaster.

MEMPHIS, May 31.—The steamer City of Memphis, from New Orleans for St. Louis, exploded at the foot of Buck Island, forty miles below here, at 8 o'clock this morning, tearing away the forward cabin and setting the boat on fire. She had twenty-eight cabin passengers and sixty on deck. The following are lost: Mr. Smith, of Evansville, Ind.; Mrs. Donne, of Deagle's Varieties; Pilot Frank Perdue; Geo. Britton, steersman; Geo. Hunger, of St. Louis: First Engineer Harrison Fox, Second Steward C. A. Hambleton, Cabin Boy Jas. Robinson.

The following are scalded: Mr. Wakefield, of St. Louis; Mrs. Seldon, of Jefferson, Texas; Sam. Harris, second mate, leg broken; Nick Barns, second engineer, leg broken; H. Smith, third engineer, slightly. About sixty persons are supposed lost and injured. The steamer St. Patrick brought the survivors up to Memphis. The City of Memphis was owned by the Atlantic Steamship Company, and valued at $90,000, on which there is no insurance.

Important from Mexico.

The N. Y. Herald's correspondent, writing from the City of Mexico on the 10th inst., says:

The news from the United States occupies everybody's time. It has caused great stringency in the money market. Nobody seems to know what course to pursue. Business men immediately prepared to curtail expenses, improvements ceased, and bankers refused to lend a dollar to the best houses. General distrust pervaded all classes, and will until further developments are made. At present the probabilities are in favor of the abdication of the Emperor—perhaps before the time for the ultimate withdrawal of the French troops expires. In the meanwhile contingencies may arise that may render it desirable for security of the country that Maximilian should continue its ruler for a longer period; but this could only be with the consent and assistance of the United States, for his supporters among the Mexicans are very few; and although he has proved himself a very mild and just monarch, still he has wholly failed to attach the Mexican people to him; indeed, he is personally more popular than any other European ruler would have been; but the Mexican heart revolts at any except a Mexican ruler. Such an impetus has the news given liberal sentiments here, that should a few regiments of French and Austrians be sent from the capital to the defence of some other point, it would be comparatively easy for the leaders to create a revolution, which might run the streets with the blood of thousands, but would be successful in driving the Emperor. It is astonishing the sudden elevation of liberal feeling and consequent depression of the Imperialists, and it can scarcely be realized abroad.

The Cholera.

NEW YORK, May 30.—An official report says the steamship Union, from Liverpool, sixteen days out, arrived at quarantine yesterday with upward of four hundred passengers. Thirty-three died of cholera on the trip. Fifteen cases are still on board.

NEW YORK, May 30.—The steamer Peruvian has arrived at Sandy Hook, from Liverpool, with 750 passengers. She lost 35 by cholera during the passage. Twenty-eight are now sick on board, who will be transferred to the Hospital ship.

TERRIBLE MULE DISEASE IN ARKANSAS AND MISSISSIPPI.—A gentleman in this city, says the Nashville Union and American, informs us that he has received letters recently from Arkansas and Mississippi, stating that a terrible disease has broken out among the mules, in the neighborhood of Helena, Ark., and Vicksburg, Miss., which threatens the most serious consequences. Already above one thousand mules have died. In one neighborhood, near Helena, two hundred died in one night. So far no means have been found to arrest the epidemic, nor any remedy after the animal is attacked.—Strange to say, there are no premonitory symptoms attending the disease, which does its work in about eight hours. The planters held a meeting, recently, at Lacconia, Ark., to devise means for arresting the plague, which threatens the destruction of all the mules in that section of the country.

DEATH OF GEN. SCOTT.—A dispatch from West Point May. 29. says: Lieutenant General Scott died at 11:15 this morning. The General was out on Saturday afternoon, and showed no signs of his early demise. On sunday he began failing fast, although his physicians did not anticipate his death immediately. He was entirely conscious, until the moment of his death, although he lost speech two hours previous. He recognized the chaplain of the post ten minutes before his death, and closed his hands in silence.

Five more of the staff of Santa Anna have arrived in Washington. It is said their business here is to manipulate Congress in favor of Maximilian; to counteract the present disposition of Congress to favor and sustain the Juarez government. It seems to be a pretty well settled opinion, and one originating with Senor Romero, the Mexican minister, that Santa Anna has visited this country in the interest of Maximilian.

FRUIT.—The indications now are that there will be a heavy yield of all kinds of fruit in this section of the State. We have already seen a fair specimen of apples, and we learn that the fruit prospects are good indeed. Soon our market will be supplied with apples, water-melons, peaches, etc.—Montgomery Mail.

The very valuable leases held by Wm. B. Astor, of Trinity church, in New York, terminated on the 31st of last month, and put the church into full control of property worth at least $6,000,000. Ms. Astor held possession of three hundred and thirty-six lots, which were let in 1767, at a very low interest, for the term of ninety-nine years. His income out of the houses built on them reached, in one year, the sum of $1,300,000.

Gen. Grant has directed the muster out of six colored regiments, while 17,000 will be retained in service. It is intended to send a number of them out to the far West.

OBITUARIES.

THE SACRED DEAD.

It seldom falls within the province of the pen to commemorate the name and character of a more devout and perfect Christian lady than Mrs. EMELINE MAYO, of Harrisonburg, La.

The fearful carnage and devastation of war, together with the rapid and complete revolution in the social, civil and political aspects of the country during the last four years, have prevented the world from being advertised that many such patterns and exemplifications of our holy religion have exchanged the cross for the crown—have gone up to "the inheritance of the saints of light," and have left behind them that priceless legacy, the savor of a good name. These are the "cloud of witnesses" by which the church is "compassed about," and which encourage and urge on the contestants for "glory, immortality and eternal life." These reminiscential treasures of the church should be exhibited and presented to the view of all for emulation, ere they are redeposited in the sacred archives of the church.

Sister Mayo was born in Rapides parish, La., on the 5th of March, 1810, and died, while on a short visit to her Black River plantation, July 21st, 1865.

Sister Mayo was eminently a good woman—exemplifying and "adorning the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things." She was a woman of great equanimity of temper, seldom ascending or descending below the point of a happy medium. In her religious experience she seldom exulted, and as seldom feared. Tranquil amid alarms, quietly, patiently, unostentatiously she pursued the even tenor of her way. Uniformity—that beautiful and admirable element of the Christian character—seemed to be the great permeating principle of her being. This trait co-existed with the many excellencies and virtues which adorned her life and conduct. In everything she was "fervent in spirit, serving the Lord, rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation, distributing to the necessity of the saints, given to liberality." She was a woman of most commendable beneficence. Never do I remember an instance of one in need being turned away empty, and thousands, could they speak, would attest the same. Whether the applicant's plea may have been that of relative, friend, neighbor, stranger or poor, it always met in her a hearty and liberal response. She was as universally kind, obliging and benevolent as she was large-hearted. Her house was one where the kindly hospitalities of friendship knew no bounds. The weary itinerant, the afflicted and lonely widow, the stranger, sick and destitute, were always comforted, and under her hospitable roof ever found welcome. That there is no future where such generous and lovely spirits are to unfold and develop their energies is revolting; but that "their angels do always behold the face of our Father in Heaven," and that "now we see through a glass darkly, then face to face," and that "it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is," is the Divine enunciation in the Word, and which must accord with the promptings of our higher nature.

Sister Mayo had been a member of the Methodist Church for many years, and no concern was too great to divert her from attending upon the means of grace and the ordinances of God's house. The courts of the Lord's house were her delight; the sanctuary was her feast of soul, the spiritual "Jerusalem her chief joy." But now we miss her at the generous board, and at the domestic prayer and anthem; we miss her in the social relations of life, where she shone brightly; we miss her in the temple, where

"Hearts in sacred covenant join To bless the Eternal Three."

But there is an holier anthem of a sweeter strain; there is a concert of spirits dearer still; there is an "house not made with hands" where saintly voices adore, "There in her lot she stands in the presence of God."

Her children mourn, her relatives and neighbors mourn, thousands of the distressed, hungry and sick in the late war would mourn did they know that she is gone. But we "mourn not as those who have no hope." Our Surety has announced, "I am the resurrection and the life," and truth divine records "those who sleep in Christ will God bring with Him at the last day." We have committed the body of our sister to the earth, and "the spirit to God who gave it," feeling assured that "He is faithful and just, and will keep that which we have committed to Him against that day."

Her death was sudden—rather unexpected, and we have no usual dying language to rehearse; but we are willing to rest the case on the greatness and grandeur of the Atonement, of which Christ is the representative, and on her uniform consistency and devotedness in exemplifying those doctrines of which she was the living, speaking representative.

Since the demise of sister Mayo her widowed daughter, Mrs. ELIZA LEWIS, has gone to eternity. An excellent Christian woman—meek, confiding, gentle, affectionate. Mother and daughter, "they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

"Thus star by star declines,
Till all are passed away—
As morning high and higher shines,
To pure and perfect day;
Nor sink those stars in empty night,
But hide themselves in heaven's own light."

THOMAS B. WHITE.

White Hall, Sicily Island, La., May 16th, 1866.

Mrs. EMMA JANE VASS (born Townsend) died in Mobile, April 27th, aged 27 years.

She formally assumed her baptismal vows before the church and received the communion in her eleventh year, and gave evidence of that renewing by the Holy Ghost by which the children of men become the children of God. As a child of God she became his heir—first, to those dispensations of grace and providence by which she was made meet to become a partaker with the saints in light, and finally, to that actual, heavenly inheritance upon which she has now entered. She was endowed, to an unusual degree, with that gift which has been a snare to many of her sex—beauty. But it was no snare to her, for, to a still greater degree, she had the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit. Of her three little orphans left, none had more of that child-like spirit which is of the kingdom of heaven. In her bosom dwelt no anger, wrath, malice, hatred, envy; but rather, the charity which speaketh no evil and thinketh no ill. I think she inherited seven out of the nine beatitudes pronounced by our Saviour in the sermon on the mount, (Mat. V.) Her character, though lacking in self-assertion, was not lacking in positiveness; its elements were those of unity, and all its forces were gentle and noiseless. Reticent, through that modesty which belongs to the more refined natures, she had the better aptitude and opportunity for communing with God. To the ways of providence and the purifying processes of the Spirit, she yielded readily. The preparation of such for Heaven is shorter work and easier than most require. Her whole character is represented by the pet name given her in infancy, and which, from its descriptive fitness, followed her through life—DOVIE.

The summons to die was sudden; the pain of dying was great. She had only time to leave a few kind messages to those whose hearts are in the grave with her, and to express, in these words, her hope and ours: "I trust I shall be saved; I believe it all." M.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

A Good Reason.

"Mother," said little Nezzie, one morning, after having fallen from bed—"Mother, I think I know why I fell out of bed last night. It was because I slept too near the place where I got in." Musing a little while, as if in doubt whether he had given the right explanation, he added, "No, that was not the reason. It was because I slept too near where I fell out."

Surely, the last was the true reason. Nezzie slept too near the place where he could fall out. Let all boys learn a lesson from this in moral things. The dangerous edge is along the places of sin. The reason why so many of the young are suddenly ruined is that they get too near the place of falling. If a boy goes near temptation, into bad company, where persons swear, or lie, or drink, he is in great danger. Many great men have fallen by venturing too close to the tempting power of sin. Boys, keep far away from the place where you may fall. Some, in a wicked course, go so near hell that they fall in. Many a man, after he has lost his good character, could say, "It was not because I kept too near the innocence with which I began life, but because I went too near the place where I fell."

A Light in the Window.

When a boy, twelve years old, says the writer, I worked hard to support my mother and two young brothers, and usually carried my earnings home. One night, it being very dark and muddy, and having three miles to travel, and a heavy bundle to carry, I did not reach home till late. My mother, feeble and weary, had retired, but quickly aroused when she heard my footsteps, and met me at the door with a warm heart and warmer tears, and a kiss, and a "God bless you, dear boy! after this, my son, I'll set a light in the window for you." And, true to her word, the bright light in the window appeared. Oh, how it cheered my heart ever after, for years!

Health failing me, I left home—after my brother could help my mother—and went to sea. When three years from home, and on the Pacific Ocean, my mother died; and just before she expired she said to those around her, "give Edward my dying blessing, for he has been a good boy; and tell him I have gone to Heaven, and will set a light in the window for him."

Tears in a Bottle.

I wonder how many of my little friends would like to have their tears preserved in a bottle—tears of anger and spite, tears of pride and naughtiness, that well up sometimes from every human heart, and flow freely from the eyes. What reproof and shame would they bring to us—these bitter, bitter tears—if we could look upon them in our after moments, when the passions that caused them were quiet!

What the sweet Psalmist David meant when he said unto God, "Put my tears in thy bottle," where the tears of penitence for all his wanderings from the right way, tears of sorrow for his many sins, and tears of anguish for his offenses against the pure and holy One. Such tears as these our heavenly Father will always have in remembrance. He will treasure them up as the signs of a real grief. Perhaps you do not know where the shepherd-king borrowed this strange figure; it was from the Greeks and Romans, who used to put the tears which were shed for the death of any person into small vials, and offer them on the tombs of the deceased.

I think it would be very nice if our tears of penitence could be placed upon the graves of our sins! I should like to put away down into a deep tomb all my naughty thoughts and words and deeds, and then shed such tears of sorrow over them that Jesus would treasure them in his bottle as proofs of my sincere repentance. Should not you?

Little children, let us not shed any more tears of anger and hatred and pride and malice. These Satan cherishes; but let us henceforth shed only such sweet tears of penitence for sin as God puts into his bottle.—Child at Home.

Luther and his Dying Child.

He approached the bed, and said to her, "My dear little daughter, my beloved Margaret, you would willingly remain with your earthly parents; but if God calls you, you will also go to your Heavenly Father." She replied, "Yes, dear father, it is as God pleases."

"Dear little girl," he exclaimed, "O, how I love her! the spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak." He then took the Bible and read to her the passage, "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they rise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust, for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead!"

He then said, "My daughter, enter thou into thy resting place in peace."

She turned her eyes towards him and said, with touching simplicity, "Yes, father."

Never too Old to Learn.

Cato, at eighty-eight years of age, thought proper to learn the Greek language.

Plutarch, when between seventy and eighty, commenced the study of them when between fifty and sixty years of age. After this time he became a most learned antiquarian and lawyer.

Ludovico, at the age of one hundred and fifteen, wrote the memoirs of his own time; a singular exertion noticed by Voltaire, who was himself one of the most remarkable instances of the progress of age in new studies.

Accareo, a great lawyer, being asked why he began the study of law so late, replied that indeed he began it late, but he should therefore master it sooner.

Dryden, in his sixtieth year, commenced the Iliad, and his most pleasing productions were written in his old age.

Franklin did not commence his philosophical pursuits until he had reached his fiftieth year.

Ogilvy, the translator of Homer and Virgil, was not acquainted with Latin and Greek till he was past fifty.

Colbert, the famous French Minister, at sixty years of age returned to his Latin and Law studies.

Boccaccio was thirty-five when he commenced his studies in polite literature, yet he became one of the three masters of the Tuscan dialect—Dante and Petrarch being the other two.

Felling Trees by Fire.

The idea of burning down a tree six and eight feet in diameter, and solid and green, would have seemed to me as simply absurd and ridiculous. But the thing is done in Oregon every day, at a vast saving of time and labor. The operation is effected in this wise: A hole is bored into the tree horizontally, the nearer the centre the better. Then directly under this hole another is bored, at an angle of elevation such that the holes meet together near the centre of the tree. A coal of fire with a little kindling is introduced into the orifice thus formed, and the lower hole causes a draught and the upper one performs the functions of a chimney. The heart of the tree is dry and contains a considerable quantity of pitch, and when manipulated as I have described, burns briskly. It is generally necessary to feed this fire with some fresh fuel from time to time. But one man can keep a large number of trees thus burning, and will get twenty or a hundred trees down thus much quicker and easier than he could otherwise do. In a similar manner, when the tree is down, it is cut into pieces by being burned in two. A hole is bored into the log from the top, and another from the side, till they meet as before described, when the perpendicular hole acts as a flue, and the horizontal one furnishes the draught. It often happens that in burning a large tree into lengths for saw-logs, there is not more timber wasted than would result from chopping of the log with an axe.

Plant Strawberries.

All should have as many strawberries as they want to eat, and Spring is the time to set out the vines. They will grow in almost any situation, and under almost any circumstances. It is nearly as cheap to have a bed of strawberries as a bed of sorrel. They will grow upon the same kind of land, and with as little care, but, perhaps, there is no fruit that pays better for having good cultivation.

If you are determined to have strawberries, and not take care of them, plow the ground, and set the vines about a foot apart, and let them cover the ground as soon as possible, merely pulling up the weeds as soon as they get high enough, and you have strawberries in due season, and all that you deserve.

But we hope you will do better than this and dig up the ground as deep as you can afford to, and set the vines about two feet apart, and keep them hoed, and cut off the runners as they come, and see what nice, large hills they will be by next fall (as large as a peck measure;) and such fruit as you will get off such vines! Try as large a bed as you can of the best varieties that you can find and you will not be sorry.—Farmer's Almanac.

Casting out Devils in India.

The Carnatic (India) Telegraph says:

Casting out devils in India is extensively practiced by the natives; but it is as difficult to get at the truth as it is to get the spiritualists (the Davenports) to declare themselves consummate cheats. We were present a few weeks ago at an exercise of exorcism. The possessed was a young woman of about sixteen, halo and hearty in appearance, and withal "very good looking," as is the expression applied to native women. She was much excited as she accompanied, or rather preceded her exorcist, and broke out occasionally into singing and dancing with an energy and manner which showed that she had no self-control. The party which went with her stopped at a tree on the way, when the exorcist desired her to halt. His command instantly brought her prostrate before him, and she rolled on the ground in violent contortions. But her father objected to fixing the demon to that tree, and accordingly the exorcist addressed his patient in a tone of sternness to rise and go on further. She did so, and with a running dance to the sound of the tomtom and the Pujari's hand-drum, she rushed along, seemingly unconscious of all around her.

They halted then under a Palmyra tree, in a desert place, near the foot of a hillock, where the poor girl was desired to balance herself gracefully to the music of the priest's hand-drum, and approach the tree. She did so, and then embraced it with a tremor, the effect of compulsion rather than free-will. The exorcist went through a few strophes of incantatory singing; then taking a few locks of her hair and knotting them together, he fastened the bunch to a tree by a nail, and then holding a live cock in one hand over her head, with the other he cut its throat and shed its blood freely over the stooping, trembling girl. He then cut off her hair, and thus freed her from her fastening to the tree. The blood-stained bunch of her hair thus left behind, it is said, detains the devil also, and that he, or a legion thus exorcised, will haunt that tree till he or they shall choose to take possession of some other unfortunate. The girl seemed now weak and exhausted, and could hardly walk forward with a steady pace.

She was held by one of the mule assistants of the priests, and conducted to a tank, where she was bathed, somewhat like our Baptist sisters, in her clothes, and came out of her own accord, hatdly yet in her right mind. But the scene was not yet over. The Pujari broke a cocoanut, and after placing it over the smoke of incense for a little while, he lifted the smoking ceuser to her with the usual incantatory music and singing. She again gradually lost her consciousness, and swayed to and fro with wild disheveled locks. The exorcist demanded of her to tell him her demoniacal name. She sharply turned upon him, and with a scream uttered her name. He then inquired how many devils had possessed her; to which she replied, five. "Have they all taken their departure?" he asked. "Yes," was the reply, and immediately she ran along dancing frantically, while the party ran after her to her house, where, after, other devilish ceremonies, she recovered consciousness, and the following day was married.

From the Crescent Monthly.

LEE TO THE REAR.

AN INCIDENT OF THE AMERICAN WAR.

Dawn of a pleasant morning in May,
Broke through the Wilderness, cool and gray,
While, perched in the tallest tree-tops, the birds
Were carolling Mendelssohn's "Songs without words."

Far, from the haunts of men remote,
The brook trawled on with a liquid note,
And nature, all tranquil and lovely, wore
The smile of the spring, as in Eden, of yore.

Little by little, as daylight increased,
And deepened the roseate flush in the East,—
Little by little, did morning reveal
Two long, glittering lines of steel;

Where two hundred thousand bayonets gleam,
Tipped with the light of the earliest beam,
And the faces are sullen and grim to see,
In the hostile armies of Grant and Lee.

All of a sudden, ere rose the sun,
Pealed on the silence, the opening gun—
A little white puff of smoke there came,
And anon the valley was wreathed in flame.

Down on the left of the rebel lines,
Where a breastwork stands in a copse of pines,
Before the rebels their sank can form,
The Yankees have carried the place by storm.

Stars and Stripes o'er the salient wave,
Where many a hero has found a grave,
And the gallant Confederates strive in vain,
The ground they have drenched with their blood to regain!

Yet loudor the thunder of battle roared—
Yet a deadlier fire on their columns poured—
Slaughter, infernal, rode with despair,
Furies twain, through the smoky air.

Not far off, in the saddle there sat,
A grey bearded man, with a black slouch hat;
Not much moved by the fire was he,
Calm and resolute Robert Lee.

Quick and watchful he kept his eye,
On two bold rebel brigades close by—
Reserves, that were standing (and dying) at ease,
Where the tempest of wrath toppled over the trees.

The Yankee batteries blazed away,
And with every murderous second that sped
A dozen brave fellows, alas! fell dead.

The grand old gray-beard rode to the space,
Where Death and his victims stood face to face,
And silently waved his old slouch hat—
A world of meaning there was in that!

"Follow me! Steady! We'll save the day!"
This was what he seemed to say;
And to the light of his glorious eye
The bold brigades thus made reply—

"We'll go forward, but you must go back"—
And they moved not an inch in the perilous track;
"Go to the rear, and we'll send them to ——!"
Then the sound of the battle was lost in their yell.

Turning his bridle, Robert Lee
Rode to the rear. Like the waves of the sea,
Bursting the dykes in their overflow,
Madly his veterans dashed on the foe.

And backward in terror that foe was driven,
Their banners rent and their columns riven,
Wherever the tide of battle rolled.
Over the Wilderness, wood and wold.

Sunset, out of a crimson sky,
Streamed o'er a field of a ruddier dye,
And the brook ran on with a purple stain,
From the blood of ten thousand foemen slain.

Seasons have passed since that day and year—
Again o'er its pebbles the brook runs clear,
And the field in a richer green is drest
Where the dead of the terrible conflict rest.

Hushed is the roll of the Rebel drum,
The sabres are sheathed, and the cannon are dumb,
And Fate, with pitiless hand, has furled
The flag that once challenged the gaze of the world.

But the fame of the Wilderness fight abides,
And down into history grandly rides,
Calm and unmoved, as in battle he sat,
The Grey-bearded Man, in the black slouch hat.

(From the French of Napoleon Roussel.)

There must be a Religion for the People.

The year 1834 was one of great excitement in France; the riots in Lyons and Paris, the preaching of the followers of St. Simon, and the theories of the Buerrierists, disclosed the absence of all religious faith and moral principle among the French people.

It was at this time I learned that, in one of our French cities, in the midst of a population, composed of Catholics and Protestants, who for a long time had neither heard a sermon from a pastor nor mass from a priest, some religious feeling was manifested, and that they desired the establishment of a more lively form of worship than could be found either at the church or chapel; I resolved to go to this place, to offer my services as a minister of Jesus Christ, and to open there an Evangelical Chapel.

No sooner was it determined upon than accomplished.

Before opening the place for preaching, I thought it needful to study the wants of the locality, and with this view I went first to visit the sub-prefect; and having entered the house, I told him my intentions. He answered: "I am ready to help you, for I am deeply sensible that the authority of religion is alone capable of controling this population, so destitute of principles of order and morality. I have fresh proof of it every day; and to mention only one instance to you, see what passed at our last elections. A clever, upright, moral man presented himself as a candidate for our department; we expected to see him chosen by a large majority; but the very qualities which ought to have insured his success, were precisely those which prepared the way for his defeat. As each elector was desirous of imposing upon him some condition in accordance with his private interests, he gave all to understand that he would not go to Paris to do the business of a solicitor, and that in the Chamber he would only speak and vote according to his conscience. What happened? Our candidate has been set aside, and our electors have united their voices in favour of one who made them more promises.

"A banker charged him to vote against the income tax; another begged from him a speech in favour of railroads; he was a proprietor through whose country-seat the new road would pass, and who wished to procure compensation; a third requested him to obtain for his son a free admission into the military school; a fourth for his nephew, a place with the minister of finance; and thus our dear Edward, my poor cousin, who might perhaps have found for me some prefecture near Paris, was set aside, and a man who has sold himself to all parties is sent to Parliament. If there were among our rulers any moral principle—any religious feeling—should we see such selfishness prevail? No, no. Again, I repeat, I am ready to help you with all my power, for there must be a religion for the people."

I wished much to reply to this gentleman, but he had not time to hear me; and he rose from his chair, assuring me that he would attend my first preaching. Being compelled to rise also, I bade him good bye, and went out.

I went directly to the house of the banker, to whom the sub-prefect had alluded, to make known to him also my desire to sow the seed of the gospel in the hearts of the inhabitants of this city.

"You are welcome," he said, "since you are a minister of order and peace, for we have great need of you. What an overthrow there is, in our times, of all formerly-received principles—the sacredness of hereditary wealth—respect to property—everything is called in question. It seems the rich must labour, and then impoverish themselves to enrich the poor. Upon what can we trust henceforth to make our rights respected? If religion does not come to our aid we are lost. All the police of our governors, all the laws of our magistrates, have shown their impotence during the republican riots. We must have a higher police—a police that can watch, not only over the body, but over the mind. All the municipal guards are insufficient; we must have spiritual ones. Do you know that these movements have more than once shaken my fortune? But, had there been any religious feeling among the multitude of small tradespeople, who have preferred losing their honour in failing to pay their debts rather than preserve their reputation by giving up their property, should we have seen so many fraudulent bankruptcies? Would my desk have been filled with dishonored bills? All these phrases—'liberty,' 'policy,' 'glory'—are very high-sounding because they are hollow. We want something more to maintain order among certain classes of society. The republic, the empire, the restoration,—even these glorious things have not brought about what they promised, because we want a religious faith to govern the nation, and it is now evident that we want a religion for the people."

"Yes," I replied; "there must be a religion for the people. And"——

Here a coachman presented himself at the door of the bank.

"It is three o'clock," said the banker to me: They are waiting for me at the Exchange. Adieu. When do you open your chapel?"

"Next Sunday."

"Well," said he, jumping into his phaeton, "I shall send all my clerks there, and my family, for there must be a religion for"——

The carriage drove off, and the noise of the wheels upon the pavement prevented my hearing the end of the sentence.

"For the people, without doubt," said I to myself. "That is true; but, then, where is this people which must have a religion, and who are they that desire it? So far, these two scarcely appear to me to wish to have a share in it for themselves. However, let me try a third visit; perhaps I may be more happy; and if the banker, for whom the sub-prelect would have a religion, does not wish for it himself, perhaps the small tradesman, whom the banker thought wanted it, will receive it on his own account."

I then went to the house of a draper, to whom I had an introduction. I arrived, and presented my letter.

"Ah! I know how it is," said he. "You are a minister of the gospel; my correspondent has written to me on that subject; he knows what interest I take in it." At the same time the draper laid his yard-measure down on the counter, and took me with him into his little counting-house, surrounded with compartments. "My wife will be very glad of your arrival," continued he, when we were seated; she was formerly a Catholic, and became a Protestant, because she did not like confession, nor indeed did I! now she seldom goes to any place of worship. You know that on the Saturday evening the bell closes late, and on Sunday morning my wife has not time. I have said to her many times—'Whilst I write my business letters, go to hear the sermon;' but she always has some excuse—either she must dress the children, or she must prepare for the afternoon play; and thus the day passes without her having had time to go to hear the preacher. I confess I should not be sorry if you would say a word to her. Between ourselves, this somewhat worldly life fatigues me much—balls, plays, dress-promenades—all this is expensive; and besides that, a woman gets no good there. Her place is in her house with her children, is it not? I have spoken to her about it twenty times, but always without effect. If I make her feel that it becomes expensive, she replies that I am getting rich. I have said that the neighbours would criticise her extravagance; she answers, that she would rather be envied than pitied. When I have spoken to her about her reputation, she tells me she does nothing but what is common in the fashionable world. I confess that I am at my wits' end, and I now believe that religion only can change her. You, sir, will succeed with her without doubt, because women have all, more or less, a leaning towards religious belief, and my wife has much of it."

"But," said I, "do you then think that religion is only good for females, and that it is useless to men, and to all of us?"

"It is true—true," he interrupted. "I grant that there must be religion for the people."

For a moment I was choked with impatience; thoughts rushed into my mind, and words too numerous for utterance.

"Will you go up stairs?" said the draper to me; "my wife is on the first floor; she will receive you with pleasure, and you will say a word to her. Good bye, sir. I leave you to go alone; you will speak more at your ease, and, moreover, my clerks are waiting for an invoice."

I went up stairs. The first sound that caught my ear was the cry of a child, who was receiving a severe beating, and who, in the midst of his tears, constantly repeated, "Mamma, mamma, forgive me! I will never do it again; I will be very good!"

"Wretch!—good-for-nothing fellow!" cried the mother; "you shall pay for it;" and she went on beating him—"I will punish you—you shall be kept on bread and water for eight days! Mary! Mary!—come when I call you!"

"I am here, ma'am!"

"Shut up Julius for me in the closet, and do not let him stir out until evening. See—go along!"

I had my hand resting upon the bell, and hesitated whether I ought to enter at such a moment. At last, my hand, being entangled in the string, the bell rang, the door opened, and I found myself in the presence of a woman whose face was flushed with anger. As she appeared ashamed for herself, I endeavoured to find some means of relieving her from her embarrassment. I said to her—"It appears your son has behaved improperly to you."

"Sir, it is the same every day; children in our times have insolence and insubordination without parallel. Ah! if, in my young days, I had answered my mother in that way! Sir, we were eight children at home, and not one would have failed in respect to his parents; but now they understand nothing about it. I don't know where the children go, to learn these insolent answers that they give us. But pardon me, sir; will you take the trouble to walk in? To whom have I the pleasure of speaking?"

I declined giving my name, and only told her the design of my journey.

"Thank God!" said she. "You will doubtless have a school for boys?"

"Yes madam."

"And religious instruction for children?"

"Yes madam."

"Ah! so much the better. I shall send my little rascal to you; and I beg you to punish him severely, if he do not behave well. Since you are a minister of religion, make him understand that, above everything else, a child owes respect and obedience to his parents. I remember that our priest told us that Jesus was subject to Joseph and Mary. You will tell him all that. Perhaps, when he has a little fear of God, I may be able to make something of him. You must give me a catechism for him, and a German Bible for his nurse, who is an Alsacian; and I will send him to you every Sunday to the sermon, for I feel that till religion shall be better known, parents will always have disobedient children, and masters unfaithful servants, whilst a good sermon on morality would benefit them; for, as my husband said yesterday, there must be religion for the people."

I was about to answer, when we heard some noise in the next room: it was the froward child, who was kicking his feet against the walls of his prison.

"Be quiet," cried his nurse to him, "be quiet: if you are not still, I will go and tell the black man come and take you." But the child redoubled his cries and his knocking.

"Ah!" cries the nurse, who seemed to be at the end of her means of restraint—"here he is!—here he is!—here is the devil who is coming to take you!—No no, devil; go away, Julius will be good."

"Well," said I to myself, it appears that the nurse also thinks it necessary to make this child believe what she does not believe herself; and most clearly she also tells me, that there must be a religion for the people, and for the children."

Suddenly, a thought occurred to me. "Madam," said I to the mother, I could have answered many things to what you have said, but I reserve them for another occasion."

"Willingly, sir; will you permit me to send to you my little Julius?—will you reason with him a little?"

"By all means; I shall expect him at my house in an hour; here is my address."

[To be Continued.]

There is no end to the improvements which are being made upon the science which Daguerre introduced. Every little while somebody is making improvements or getting up something entirely new. The latest one—porcelain pictures—which are taken upon plates, are said to be more durable than any thing which have preceded them. They very much resemble the fine portraits taken upon ivory, and which have always been valued for their faithfulness and tone. They are really susceptible of a higher and more delicate finish than the ivory picture.

A person may believe as he pleases about things; but things will not, therefore, be as he pleases.

Words cannot heal wounds that words can make.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

WEEKLY REVIEW.

The general market (says the Price Current of Wednesday) shows no material change since our last report, the movement in most departments of trade being on a very limited scale, while prices have exhibited but few important variations. A moderate business has been done in our leading staple at about previous rates, mostly for the Northern spinners, who have again come forward with same spirit, while buyers for Great Britain have mostly withdrawn, and the operations for foreign export have been mostly for the Continent.

COTTON—We noticed in our last report that after quite an active demand on Friday the market closed at the advanced rates of 27 to 30c. for Ordinary, 31 to 33c. for Good Ordinary, 35 to 37c. for Low Middling, and 39 to 40c. for Middling; since which there has been no quotable change.

The receipts proper for the four days ending on last evening comprise 2219 bales, against 2916 during the corresponding period last week, showing a decrease of 697 bales.

Referring to our remarks above, we continue to quote as follows: Ordinary, 27 to 30c; Good Ordinary, 31 to 33; Low Middling, 35 to 37; and Middling, 39 to 40c.

TOBACCO—The stock on hand is accumulating gradually, and is now amply sufficient and of that style and description to draw foreign buyers to this market. There has been considerable inquiry for export and for the city trade, resulting in sales of 175 hhds., of which 1, 18, 23, 28 and 78 hhds. were taken on foreign account and a few hhds. taken for the trade, at prices fully up to the following revised quotations: Low Refused, Light, 4 to —; Good do., 6 to 6½; Common Leaf, 9 to 10; Fair, 12 to 14; Good, 15 to 16; Fine, 18 to 19; Choice Selections, 21 to 22. Heavy—... to 5; Good do., 7 to 7¾; Common Leaf, 10 to 12; Fair, 14 to 17; Good, 17 to 18; Fine, 19 to 20; Choice Selections, 23 to 24—in currency.

SUGAR—There is very little Louisiana but an ample stock of Cuba Sugar on hand. The market continues very dull, however, and there is only a retail or jobbing trade doing at 12 to 13c for Common to Fair Louisiana, 14½ to 14¾c for Fully Fair, 15 to 15¾c for Prime, 15¾o for Yellow Clarified and 16¼c for White.

MOLASSES—The market is bare of Louisiana, but is well supplied with Cuba Molasses. There is very little or no demand, however, and in the total absence of sales of any importance we have to omit all quotations. A lot of 40 hhds. Muscovado sold at a price we did not learn, said to be below 50c. per gallon. The previous sales of Cuba were at 40c. and Porto Rico at 50c. per gallon. There is a stock on hand of about 5000 hhds. of Cuba Molasses which is held for better prices. Cuba Molasses is retailing at 48 to 50c. per gallon, according to quality.

FLOUR—The stock on hand is small and has been more firmly held, the receipts being very light, but the market continues dull. An advance of fully 25c. per bbl. was realized, however, for Superfine on Monday, when $9 50 per bbl was obtained. The sales on Saturday and Monday were confined to 2000 bbls., in small lots, at $9 25 to $9 50 for Superfine, $9 75 for Choice Superfine, $10 75 for Low Extra, $11 25 to $12 for Good do., and $13 50 for Choice Extra—some very Choice Extra, desirable for family use, commanded $16 per bbl.

PORK—Is in moderate supply and in request, and the market is steady and firm. There were sales of about 1000 bbls. Mess, in several lots, on Friday and Saturday, at $32 75 to $33 per bbl. Round lots are quoted at $33 50, and Mess has been retailing at $33. 50 per bbl. Yesterday the market was firmer and an advance of 50c. per bbl. was realized, a lot of 100 and another of 200 bbls. Mess having brought $33 50 per bbl. and dealers asking at retail $34 per bbl.

BACON—Is in light supply and in demand, and prices continue steady and firm, with a further upward tendency. There have been sales of 9 and 15 casks Ribbed Sides at 18¼c, 10 do. Clear Ribbed Sides at 19¼c, and 22 Clear Sides at 19½c per lb. Yesterday there was a very good demand, and prices were about ¼c per lb. higher. There were sales of 20 casks Clear Sides at 19½c and 20 casks do. at 19¾c per lb. It is retailing freely at 14½ to 15c per lb for Shoulders, 18½ to 19c for Ribbed Sides, 19½c for Clear Ribbed Sides, 19¾ to 20c for Clear Sides, 22c for plain Hams and 25½ to 26o for Sugar-cured.

GREEN MEAT—What little is on hand is mostly held by dealers who are obtaining 14c per lb. for Shoulders and 16c for Sides.

LARD—Is scarce and in request, but owing to insufficient supplies the movement is only in a small or jobbing way. There were sales of 70 tierces Prime, in two lots, on Saturday at 23c, and on Monday lots of 25 kegs sold at 25c per lb. It is retailing at 24c in tierces and 25c in kegs.

BUTTER AND CHEESE—The supply of Butter is liberal and in excess of the demand, and prices have further given way. Choice Northern is selling at 50 to 55c and Choice Western at 35 to 40c per lb. Common Butter is dull at 25 to 30c per. Cheese is in good supply but dull at 15 to 20c for Western and 16 to 20c Northern, and English Dairy at 27c per lb.

CORN—Has been in fair demand, but large receipts have caused a reduction of 2½ to 5c per There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 15,000 sacks at 85 to 87½c for Mixed, 87½ to 90c for Yellow, and 90 to 95c per bushel for White, the inside prices ruling on Monday. Yesterday the market was quiet but steady, and 9000 sacks were sold at 85c for Mixed and Yellow, 90c for Yellow, and 90 to 95c per bushel for White.

OATS—Are in fair demand, but with better supplies prices have fallen 4c per bushel. On Saturday about 700 sacks sold at 57c per bushel, and on Monday 1800 sacks at 54 to 55c.

MALT—Is in good supply but dull. Canada is retailing at $1 75 and Western at $1 50 per bushel. Round lots of Western cannot be quoted better than $1 25 per bushel.

BRAN—Has been in very little demand, and the previous inside figures have been barely sustained. About 600 sacks were sold on Saturday and Monday at $1 15 per 100 lbs., and 200 yesterday at the same price.

HAY—We have to note a well supplied but dull market. There were only small sales at $20 for Ordinary and $22 per ton for Prime Western, until yesterday when a boat load of 1200 bales Prime sold at $22 per ton.

INDIA BAGGING—The stock is small and there have been no important movements. The last round sales were at 30c per yard. Dealers are supplying the demand for the country at 29c in rolls and 31c in bales.

BALE ROPE—There is no demand for round lots and very little at retail. The last round sales was at 17¼c per lb. Dealers are obtaining 18c per lb. Iron Cotton Ties are selling at 12c per lb.

COFFEE—There has been very little demand for the country which dealers have supplied at 25¼ to 29¼c per lb, currency, for Ordinary to Prime Rio, a reduction of ¼c per lb owing to the fall in gold.

GUNNY BAGS—The stock on hand is small. There was no demand, however, until the past few days, when 10 bales two bushels bags sold at 24¼c a piece, and 8 bales four bushels bags at 28c.

STAR CANDLES.—There is a fair retail business doing at 19¼c per lb for 12 oz., 21c for 14 oz. and 25c per lb for 16 oz.

WOOL—There is nothing doing and we quote nominally 15 to 25c for unwashed and 21c per lb for washed. There is a good stock on hand.

NAVAL STORES.—There have been sales of Common and No. 2 Rosin at $3, No. 1 at $5, Virgin dip $7, Pitch $3. Tar $2 50 per bbl; Spirits Turpentine 92½ to 95c per gallon.

SALT.—A cargo of 3,000 sacks sold in store on private terms, said to be a full price. Coarse has been quoted by the cargo at $1 55, and Fine at $1 60 per sack. There is some demand for the latter for which dealers are supplying at $1 80 to $1 85 per sack for Liverpool Coarse and $1 90 to $2 for fine, in store. The stock on hand is fair.

HIDES.—Very few have come in. They have continued in demand, and the supplies were taken up readily at previous prices, Green Hides at 7 to 7½c; Kip Skins, 7 to 8c, and Dry country Hides 10c per lb.

ESCULENTS.—New Potatoes are selling at $3 50 to $4 00. New Onions $3 00 to $3 75 per bbl.

POULTRY AND EGGS.—Chickens sell on the landing at $8 to $8 50. Geese at $9 00 and Turkeys at $32 per dozen. Western eggs have been selling at $17 to $19 per bbl.

It should be understood that the above quotations generally represent the wholesale prices. In filling small orders higher rates have to be paid.

The Christian Race.

The following sketch of a sermon was taken the 19th September, 1852, from the lips of Dr. Wm. Winans, at Natchez, Miss.; and although it but poorly represents his sermon, (for it was preached with his usual fervor and force,) yet some who used to hear him preach may see in it his style and manner.

W. C. C.

TEXT—12th chapter of Hebrews, 1st and 2d verses: "Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about by so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight," etc.

In the life of a Christian there are three great points to be observed. Our lives are to be shaped to conform to God's law; we are to remember our duties to our fellow-men, both special and imperfect obligations; and also our duty to ourselves. The natural man generally acts as if he belonged to himself alone; he says my character, my body, my property, are all my own. This is a mistake. "We are not our own; we are bought with a price." We belong to God. He has a heavy claim upon us, and He will hold us accountable how we conduct ourselves toward ourselves, as well as towards Himself and towards our fellow-man.

The Apostle has used, for a figure, the Isthmian games of his own time. There were two kinds of races run. In one the competitors run against each other, and only one could win; the other was when they run against time—then all could win. This latter is the one made use of by the Apostle.

In the preparation for the races, the candidates were in the habit of carrying weights whilst training. But when they started for the race, the weights, and everything that would hinder them in the least, were laid aside; and it was a difficult matter to come up to time and win the prize. Those who did win were crowned, etc.

Now, what preparation is necessary in order to run the Christian race and win the crown of glory?

Our own sinful desires and evil propensities, ambition, desire of fame, of wealth, or carnal pleasures, are heavy weights, and if they are not laid aside, will defeat us, and we shall lose the crown. I cannot stop to enumerate all the hindering causes, but you had better find them out with all care yourselves, that you may lay them aside, even if you have to pluck out right eyes or cut off right hands.

And the sin that easily besets us. We often throw the blame upon God, as Adam did when he said, "The woman thou gavest me," etc. We often say, "It is constitutional; I cannot help it; it is my nature." Is it of mind? is it of disposition? is it too much credulity? is it skepticism, or inclination, or indolence? Whatever it is, be sure you find it out and lay it aside, or it is vain for you to run. This old nature must be destroyed. We must be created anew in Christ Jesus in order to be able to discern ourselves aright; and this cannot be done by baptism or outward washings, but an inward, radical change our moral nature. "We must be born again;" "born of the Spirit."

The instrumentality is Faith;

The agent is the Holy Spirit;

And when this instrumentality is used by this agent, then you will be prepared to run with success.

The Manner of running—

The race is to be run with "patience," not by fits and starts, stopping awhile and starting anew. Patience is a conservative principle. Step by step with patience—long forbearance—steadily, even to the end; and that is only when God shall say, "It is enough; come up higher, and receive the crown."

The Witnesses—

Are all those holy men who have already won the crown, and are now looking upon us from their standpoint in the heavens, and are hovering over us in anxiety. They are like a cloud in number, and this should encourage us and influence us to run boldly onward to the end. Can a soldier be a coward while his general's eye is upon him? Never! Amongst this cloud of witnesses are Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Elisha, Elijah, Moses, Gideon, Barak, David, Samuel. And what shall I say more? for time would fail me to tell of those who, through faith, subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, etc. etc. The first of these was Abel, whose offering was acceptable to God—a sin offering pointing to the Saviour, acknowledging his own inability to atone for his sin, and looking to the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. His brother Cain appears to be a Deist, and offered only a thank-offering, which did not please God. Enoch had the testimony that he pleased God, and God took him to himself. And Noah had such faith that he wrought for one hundred and twenty years building the ark, and through all the scoffings and jeerings of the world he kept his faith, and was saved, he and his family. Abraham staggered not when God commanded him to offer his son a sacrifice, knowing that God was able to raise him up again, even from the dead. Yes, my hearers, it is a great victory to maintain our faith against our short-sighted reason, knowing that God is able to do and will perform His promises.

John, in the island of Patmos, thought that the angel was God. If the angel was so resplendent that John thought him to be God, how glorious must be that innumerable company of saints and angels who are now watching our course! It should call forth all our energy to run the race successfully.

Finally, we are to look unto Jesus for guidance and direction. We are to follow in his footsteps. His course should also be our course. We should turn neither to the right nor to the left; allow nought to allure us, by its false light, but keeping the eye steadily on the prize, should run so as to win. Faithful, you shall win the crown. Is the prize not worth contending for? And for it, what is your loss? A few fleeting, unsubstantial pleasures, not one of which merits your attention. No real good shall be denied; therefore "run with patience, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of your faith."

Amen!

WHAT CONSTITUTES TRUE BRAVERY.—The Duke of Wellington seeing a man turn pale as, without moving a muscle, he marched up to a battery, remarked: "That is a brave man; he knows his danger and faces it." The bravest men have ever been those of a high-toned finely organized temperament, Cæsar, Bonaparte, Nelson, Washington, and all men of great purpose and daring were of this nervous temperament. The man who delights in scenes of bloodshed, and is utterly unmindful and reckless of danger, cannot be called the brave man. This courage is merely that of the brute, without reason or judgment.

SLANDER.—Slanders, says one, are but as soap, which, though it soils for the present, makes the garment more clean and shining. Scorn and reproach are but a little cloud, that is soon blown over. But suppose you are not vindicated in this world, but die with a cloud upon your names; be sure that God will clear it up, and that to purpose in the great day. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. If Christ will be our advocate, we need not fear who are our accusers. If your name, for his sake, be cast out as evil, Christ will deliver it you again in that day, whiter than snow. Be patient, therefore, my brethren, unto the coming of the Lord.—Flavel.

Scientifically, the oyster is a lamelli-branchiati mollusk. Each single oyster can produce 1,200,000 eggs. Each young oyster is the one hundred and twentieth of an inch in length, and about two millions may be packed within the dimensions of a cubic inch. About one-half of all the young oysters are eaten up by old fish. Oysters attain their majority in two years. The oyster trade in New York alone is estimated at $5,000,000 annually.

TWENTY MILLIONS SWALLOWED DOWN.—The Massachusetts Legislature reports that there are $25,000,000 invested in the liquor trade of Boston. They think that there are 100,000,000 drinks sold in Massachusetts annually. At 20 cents a drink that would be $20,000,000 literally "swallowed down."

Our Foreign and Domestic Missions.

DR. E. W. SEHON'S CIRCULAR.

Agreeably to the action of the General Conference, our Missionary work for the future is divided between two Boards—one for Domestic Missions, located at Nashville, with Dr. McFerrin as Secretary; the other for Foreign Missions, located at Baltimore, with the writer as Secretary.

In 1861, just previous to the war, the debt of the Missionary Society was about $60,000. Provision was made for its payment, by dividing the amount equally between the several Annual Conferences. Every reason existed to give hope of the prompt payment of the debt; but war came, and all its sad consequences, preventing the accomplishment of this desired object.

This debt still remains unpaid: provision has again been made for its payment by the late General Conference. As fair and equal a distribution as could be, under the circumstances, was made. To some Conferences perhaps a larger amount was assigned than should have been, but a united effort of every Conference will, we humbly trust and believe, realize far more than the amount required. It is very desirable that those collections should be made at the earliest day practicable.

If all the preachers in our whole work will present to the Church, in every congregation, the present want of funds, and the subject of Missions generally, urging the importance of immediate action, we fully believe that an amount far beyond what is necessary to pay the present debt would be immediately raised.

We would earnestly press upon the whole Church—ministry and membership—the necessity of an early, prompt and united effort in favor of these collections. As already advised by Dr. McFerrin, the special collections which are taken up for the payment of the debt can be forwarded to A. P. McFerrin, Treasurer of the Domestic Board, at Nashville, or to W. T. Smithson, Treasurer, at Baltimore.

The collections made for Missions generally, if taken in one collection, the donors will make their own selection, giving the direction they wish to their contributions, which direction will be duly observed in forwarding the several amounts as respectively designed.

We hope to hear of a general and united effort upon the part of the whole Church in favor, not only of paying the debt, but for raising funds for the Missionary cause generally.

E. W. SEHON, Secretary
Foreign Board of Missions.

DR. J. B. M'FERRIN'S CIRCULAR.

To the Preachers in Charge of Circuits and Stations, and to the Presiding Elders in our Connection:

Rev. and Dear Brethren—In entering upon the work to which I have been assigned by the General Conference, I beg your hearty co-operation. We have two branches connected with Domestic Missions, which will claim our special attention. The first is the organization of Missions and Missionary Churches, and the second is the collection of means to sustain this important department of our work.

To the first I call your attention at present. There are three separate and distinct fields in which we are expected to work.

1. The destitute portions of the American population. There are hundreds, yea, multiplied thousands, in the suburbs of our cities, who never attend the house of God—never hear the Word preached. They are poor, they are godless, and have no one to teach them the way of life. They will not come to your regular churches; they will not seek the preacher; but the preacher must hunt them up. Like lost sheep, they must be sought out by the shepherd and brought into the fold.

And then in many sparsely settled neighborhoods in the country there is little or no preaching. Those scattered sheep must be cared for and visited by ministers of the Gospel, that their souls perish not.

2. There is the foreign population. These are coming upon our shores, and are settling in our midst, and will become permanent citizens. It is vastly important to meet them with the Gospel and the means of grace, that they may be brought under the restraints of Christianity.

3. The colored population. These are among us by millions. Many of them have been taught the first principles of Christianity, but within the past few years they have become disorganized; their societies and churches in many places have been scattered, and a large portion of the "freedmen" of the country are wandering about without moral instruction or religious restraints. These people have claims upon us, and look to us to lead them in the ways of righteousness. If we do not teach them and preach to them, they will be left in ignorance, and lapse into a state of barbarism.

The late General Conference inaugurated a plan for their future prosperity and moral elevation. That body recommends:

1st. That we encourage among them the establishment of schools for mental instruction of the race, especially the children; Sunday-schools, where the young may be nurtured for future usefulness in the Church of God.

2d. We must preach to them wherever practicable, organize Churches and Quarterly Conferences, and finally form Circuits, organize Annual Conferences and a General Conference.

Now one object of this communication is to request our brethren to look after the colored people. Preach to them, catechise them, organize Sunday-schools, form societies, collect them into regular churches, baptize the children, organize Quarterly Conferences, employ local preachers and intelligent colored men to preach to them and to lead the classes and conduct prayer-meetings. Make your return to the Annual Conferences, and soon the work will so magnify that our Bishops will have to meet them in Annual Conferences, and send men out by scores and hundreds to look after the spiritual interests of these people, who are so susceptible of religious impressions. Let all work and work together in this field, and we will reap a rich harvest.

J. B. MCFERRIN, Secretary
Board of Domestic Missions.

The following rule is the law of the Church, to be inserted in the Discipline for the regulation of the people of color who may adhere to the Methodist Episcopal Church South:

Question 1. What shall be done to promote the religious interests of the colored people?

Answer 1. Let our colored members be organized as separate pastoral charges wherever they prefer it, and their number may justify it.

A. 2. Let each pastoral charge of colored members have its own Quarterly Conferences, composed of official members, as provided in the Discipline.

A. 3. Let the colored persons be licensed to preach, and ordained deacons and elders, according to the Discipline, when, in the judgment of the Conference having jurisdiction in the case, they are deemed suitable persons for said office and orders of the ministry.

A. 4. The Bishop may form a district of colored charges, and appoint to it a colored presiding elder, when, in his judgment, the religious interests of the colored people require it.

A. 5. When it is judged advisable by the college of Bishops, an Annual Conference may be organized, to be presided over by one of our Bishops.

A. 6. When two or more Annual Conferences shall be formed, let our Bishops advise and assist them in forming a separate General Conference jurisdiction for themselves, (if they so desire, and the Bishops deem it expedient,) in accordance with the doctrine and discipline of our Church, and having the same relations to this General as the Annual Conferences have to each other.

A. Let special attention be given to Sunday schools among the colored people.

Christ is never more wounded in the house of his friends than when they murmur; nothing seemed so much to overcome his forbearance with the Israelites.—Lady Powerscourt.

Lay Representation.

It has often been asserted by those who have strenuously opposed the introduction of Lay Representation into the council of our church that the membership did not desire it; that they were not, by memorials or otherwise, except to a very limited extent, asking for it; that the agitation of the subject was wholly, or almost so, with the preachers. Now that the General Conference, in a spirit of unsurpassed magnanimity, has tendered this right and privilege to the Laity, we shall see whether or not the membership desire it. If we are not mistaken in our estimate of the intelligence of the laity of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and the appreciation of their rights in the premises, we shall hear from a thousand sources the pleasure and satisfaction with which they will hail this new feature in our church government.

The Rev. Dr. Palmer, of New Orleans, who is so widely known in this country as a leading preacher and theologian in the Presbyterian Church, remarked that the history of the church presented no parallel to the action of the late General Conference in its tender to the laity of equal representation in the ecclesiastical councils of Southern Methodism. Here, he observed, substantially, is a great aristocratic church government, with absolute power, held for a hundred years in the hands of the clergy; and, at a time when there is no charge of any flagrant abuse of that power, either by the Bishops or by the General Conference, and when there is no clamor upon the part of the laity for representation, a large and intelligent body of ministers, clothed with legislative and executive functions for the whole church, magnanimously relax their grasp on the power with which they are invested, and invite the laity, by equal and untrammeled representation, to their chief legislative council. It was an evidence, as he regarded it, of the shrewd and statesman-like forethought of the body, holding a power which was liable to abuse, and might, in time, be abused, as the history of the church warrants us in saying; and without waiting for any occasion on the part of the laity to demand representation, the ministry had taken a wise and timely move, which would save the church from agitation, if not revolution, at a future day. This is the light in which the subject is viewed by a thoughtful, cultivated and liberal-minded man, from an outside and unprejudiced stand-point.

It is true that neither the Bishops nor the General Conference, clothed as they are with absolute legislative and executive power, have abused the responsibilities entrusted to them; but there is an evil to be deprecated, that is worse than tyranny, and should be most sedulously guarded against: it is the alienation of the great body of the membership from the persons of their rulers. It is even now patent to every observant mind that this alienation is doing its secret work. It is well to arrest it in its incipiency. It springs out of the absence of representation and co-operation, on the part of the laity, in the government of the church. We have in the laity of our church men of foresight, and great breadth of view. They have been weighing and scanning this subject. They see how the lay element is recognized and fostered in the councils of other churches. They see how their interests, as church members, are involved in the proceedings of General Conferences. They review the journals of the great council of the church, and find that there are comparatively few subjects that engage the attention of that body in which the laity are not as deeply interested as the clergy; and the inquiry naturally arises, why are not the laity represented in these questions of general concern to the whole body of the membership? Why is it that they can have no voice on questions relating to Sunday Schools, Educational movements, Boundary questions, Publishing interests, Salaries of ministers, and all those matters that relate to forms of worship and changes of economy, that, more or less, affect every member of the church? Their exclusion from the councils of the church, more than any other one thing, alienates, and must alienate in the long run, the affections of that portion of the laity who give tone to the church, from the persons of their rulers. It is wise to incorporate Lay Representation in the General Conference. It will guard against an evil even worse than tyranny, or any possible abuse of power now lodged in the hands of the ministry. We may differ as to the details of the plan for the introduction of the laity into our church councils; but, with very few exceptions, we have reason to hope that the ministry of our church will be found to favor the principle. That man places himself in rather an awkward and unenviable position who opposes the introduction of Lay Representation under any form or modification.

The laity, in due time, should prepare memorials to the ensuing sessions of the Annual Conferences, expressive of their views and wishes on that subject. The action of the General Conference, providing for Lay Representation, will be submitted to the next round of Annual Conferences for a three-fourths concurrence, in order to make it the law of the church. If the laity shall fail to canvass this matter, and express their views, by memorial or otherwise, the ministers, some of them at least, may plead the absence of such expression as the proof that the laity do not desire it; and thus the most important action of the late General Conference, affecting the future peace, prosperity and permanent welfare of the church, may be defeated. In our judgment it will be a sad thing for Methodism in these Southern States if the action of the General Conference should fail of securing the concurrence of three-fourths of all of the members of the several Annual Conferences who may be present and vote on this vital question.

The Mason-Spider of Corfu.

The mygale nest varies much in size, from one inch in length to three or four, and even six or seven inches. In the West Indies, where the spiders are crab-like, the insects measure six inches or over. One nest, especially mentioned, and minutely described by Mr. Oudouin, was three inches and a quarter long, and eight-tenths of an inch wide. The nest, of cylindrical form, is made by boring into the earth; making his excavation; the next thing, having decided upon the size of his habitation, is to furnish it, and most beautiful are his hangings. The whole of the interior is lined with the softest possible silk which the "major-domo" spins all over the apartment until it is padded to a sufficient thickness and made soft enough. This done, and the interior finished, taking steps to keep out intruders, making, not only a door with swinging hinges, and sometimes one at each end of the nest.

A gentleman at Corfu saw the spider make his door, and thus described the work: Lying out in one of the sandy plateaus covered with olive groves, with which Corfu abounds, lounging about in the sandy soil, he came to a spider's nest. Examining it, he found the lid or door would not open, and seemed held firmly within by the proprietor — as if Jack were at home; so he applied forthwith the leverage of a knife-blade, upon which the inmate retired to his inner chamber. The aggressor decided not to disturb him any more that day, but marking the place—a most necessary thing to do—thought he would explore further the next day, if fine. Accordingly, the next day he called early, intending to take off the door, and to watch the progress of restoration, and how it would be accomplished.

After waiting a long time, out came Monsieur Mygale, and looking carefully around, and finding all quiet, commenced operations by running his web backward and forward across the orifice of his nest, till there was a layer of silken web; upon this he ejected a gluten, over which he scratched the fine sand in the immediate neighborhood of his nest; this done, he again set to work webbing, then gluten, sand; then again web, gluten, sand, about six times. This occupied in all about eight hours. But the puzzling part was that this time he was cementing and building himself out from his own mansion, when, to the astonishment and delight of his anxious looker-on, he began the finishing stroke by cutting and forming the door by fixing his hind legs in the centre of the new covering, and from these as a centre, he began cutting with his jaws right through the door he had made, striking a clear circle round, and leaving about one-eighth of the circumference as a hinge. This done, he lifted the door up and walked in.

My friend then tried to open the door with a knife, but the insect pulled it tight from the inside. He therefore dug round him and took him off bodily—mygale and nest complete. The hinge is more carefully and beautifully formed, and there appears to be an important object in view when the spider covers over the whole of the orifice, for immediately the door is raised, it springs back as soon as released, and this is caused by the elasticity of the web on the hinge, and the peculiar formation of the lid or door, which is made thicker on the lower side, so that its own weight holds it to be self-closing, and the rabbeting of the door is wonderfully surfaced. Bolts and Chubb locks, with a latch-key, the mygale family do not possess; but as a substitute the lower part of the door has claw-holding holes, so that a bird's beak or other lever being used, Monsieur Mygale holds on to the door by these, and with his legs against the sides of his house, offers great resistance against all comers.—London Journal.

Sponge Divers.

The mode of operation preparatory to a dive is very peculiar and interesting. The diver whose turn it is takes his seat on the deck of a vessel, at either the bow or stern, and, placing by his side a large flat slab of marble, weighing about twenty-five pounds, to which is attached a rope of the proper length and thickness (one inch and a half), he then strips, and is left by his companions to "prepare himself." This seems to consist in devoting a certain time to clearing the passages of his lungs by expectoration, and highly inflating them afterwards—thus oxydizing his blood very highly by a repetition of deep inspiration. The operation lasts from five to ten minutes, or more, according to the depth; and during it the operator is never interfered with by his companions, and seldom speaks or is spoken to. He is simply watched by two of them, but at a little distance, and they never venture to urge him or to distract him in any way during the process. It seems to a spectator as if the diver were going through a sort of mysterious ceremony or incantation.

When, from some sensation known only to himself after these repeated, long-drawn and heavy inspirations, he deems the fitting moment to have arrived, he seizes the slab of marble, and, after crossing himself and uttering prayer, plunges with it, like a returning dolphin, into the sea, and rapidly descends. The stone is always held during the descent directly in front of the head, at arm's length, and so as to offer as little resistance as possible and by varying its inclination it acts likewise as a rudder, causing the descent to be more or less vertical, as desired by the driver. As soon as he reaches the bottom he places the stone under his arm to keep himself down, and then walks about on the rock or crawls under its ledges, stuffing the sponges into a netted bag with a hooped mouth, which is strung around his neck to receive them; but he holds firmly to the stone or rope all the while as his safeguard for returning and for making known the signal at the time he desires it.

Now let us notice the proceedings of his companions in the boat floating some twenty or thirty fathoms above him. The two men who were nearest to him previously to his making the dive, but who systematically seem to place themselves so as prevent him from conceiving the idea of being impatiently watched by them while undergoing the preparation, spring to their feet as soon as he disappears, and rush to the rope, which one of them holds in his hand, veering it out or shortening it in, as the diver moves about upon the bottom, and as soon as the signal indicative of his wish to return is felt, they commence hauling up the rope with great energy and earnestness, and in a way calculated to insure the greatest expedition of ascent, since the overstay of a few seconds may be a point of life or death to the diver.

The hauling up is thus effected: The assistant who has hold of the rope, awaiting the signal, first reaches down with both hands as far as he can, and there grasping the rope, with a great bodily effort, raises it up to nearly arm's length over his head; the second assistant is then prepared to make his grasp as low down as he can reach, and does the same, and so on, the two alternately, and by a fathom or more at a time, and with great rapidity, bring the anxious diver to the surface. A heavy blow from his nostrils, to expel the water and exhausted air, indicates to his comrades that he is conscious and breathes. A word or two is spoken by one of his comrades to encourage him if he seems much distressed—as is often the case; and the hearing of the voice is said by them to be a great support at the moment of their greatest exhaustion. A few seconds' rest at the surface, and then the diver returns into the boat to recover, generally putting on an under-garor jacket to assist the restoration of the animal heat he had lost, and to prevent the loss of more by the too rapid evaporation of water from his body.

Such is the trying life of a Levantine sponge-diver; and doubtless there are very few of us who have any idea of what a fellow-creature has suffered in procuring that little sponge which has become a necessity of our toilet table and the luxury of our morning ablutions.—Spratt's Travels in Crete.

I had rather be a good man's child, covered by his prayers, than the son of the first emperor in the world, undevoted and unblessed.—Serle.

NEW ORLEANS:
SATURDAY, - - - JUNE 9, 1866.

TO ADVERTISERS.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has always been well known in this community as the very best advertising medium by which the business men of the city could bring their merchandise, trades, professions, and the like, before country readers in the States just named. This is easily understood when it is remembered that the four hundred preachers who are scattered throughout these States, in the Rio Grande, East Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Montgomery and Mobile Methodist Conferences, are all, more or less, active agents for the paper; and when it is also remembered that our paper circulates among a large class of people who seldom see any other New Orleans paper.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

	1 Month.	6 Mos.	12 Mos.
One square....	$ 5 00	$20	$30 00
Two squares....	7 50	25	40 00
Three squares..	10 00	30	50 00
Four squares...	12 50	35	60 00

Larger advertisements in proportion.

TO OUR AGENTS AND SUBSCRIBERS

1. The price of the paper is FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE: and it will be sent for 12 months only, unless the subscription price is renewed. We propose to keep no other books than the one containing the names of subscribers and their address. Due notice will be given in the paper a few weeks previous to the end of the subscription.

2. All travelling Preachers in the several patronizing Conferences throughout the Southwest are our Agents. They will receive a paper for five subscribers, and be paid one dollar for each subscription over that number.

3. If money forwarded by mail is registered at the Postoffice when it is mailed, we will take the responsibility of its safety. But where it can be forwarded by private hands, the security is greater.

4. Be explicit in writing names and offices and routes—especially in directing to the "New Orleans CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE," as the Church North has already issued a sheet in this city entitled the "New Orleans Advocate."

Baltimore Conference.

A letter just received gives good news from the city of Baltimore of the hopefulness and enterprise of our friends in that city. It is expected that the "Episcopal Methodist" will be published at that point, instead of at Richmond. Wherever it may be issued, if Dr. Bond edits it it will be a power on the side of Southern Methodism.

New Publications.

We call attention to the advertisement of Mr. C. B. Richardson, Publisher, in which fifteen per cent. of all his profits on the sale of his books are offered to the "Widows and Orphans' Relief Associations of the several States."

PERSONAL.—Major Gen. Walker, who commanded in the Trans-Mississippi department during the latter years of the war, is now a commission merchant at No. 150 Leadenhall street, London. His old friends and fellow-soldiers who may have business to transact in London, should not forget him.

Our old friends Messrs. TOM and SAM HENDERSON have determined, in these times when the "sword is beaten into the cotton-hook," to devote that energy for which they were so noted as Confederate cavalry officers to the commission business. See their card among our advertisements.

The religious excitement at Springfield, Ills., continues without abatement. The prayer and other meetings are daily and nightly crowded, and accessions to church membership continues at the rate of about one hundred per week.

ROMISH VITALITY.

Evidences of the strength and prosperity of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States must impress the most casual observer. Cathedral-like buildings in the large cities, and numbers of smaller churches of no mean proportions, and built of durable materials, in a style of imposing architecture, arrest and fix the admiration of the people, and indicate to the more thoughtful, power and vitality. Something still grander and costlier is about to be commenced in the city of New York by the Romish Church—to cost upwards of three millions of dollars—a building to surpass in size and elaborateness of design the celebrated Trinity of that city.

Besides church-buildings there are convents and colleges, and primary schools, large and largely attended. On every side they are springing up. While the whole country South is prostrated, and the several Protestant churches are barely able to repair and retain their altars, and while their ministers are forced to turn aside, as Paul at Corinth, and work that they may live, the Priests are projecting and building, and are seemingly disporting in a flood-tide of prosperity. The churches are open day and night. Many an image of the idelized "Mother" is crowned nightly with roses, and children attend by the thousand, attracted by lights and flowers and music, by incense and priestly movements, and drink in the sights and the doctrines of Roman Catholicism: The month of May has been devoted to MARIOLATRY. "Mary the Mother of God" substitutes the Son and the Word, in the worship of that throng which has been pressing its way to her altars. She is to them more than "one mediator," "the man Christ Jesus," and her favor more than the written law of God. But over and above all, and out of all, there pours into the laps of the priests an incessant stream of gold. Offerings from toil-hardened hands, from the youthful maidens at their first sacrament, and from tender babes upon the first touch of baptismal consecration, a thousand rills swell the current and enrich the self-denying apostolic successors of St. Peter.

It is impossible to shut our eyes to the immense corporate wealth of the various societies of Loyola, of St. Dominic, of the Ligorians, of the Franciscans, and other orders, male and female, of the Church of Rome, which have been imported into, and now dot all the cities, towns, counties, and coasts of this Republic. Other investments and other incorporates are subject to constant changes and division, but these celibates have no change and no division, because they have no children. The drill is so complete and controlling, that a single mind, that of the "General" or the "Father," the "President," Prioress, the Sister or the Lady Abbess, wields the whole. There are no directors, no stockholders to thwart the aim of the society, or to sell out. Purgatory and Extreme Unction cannot get below par. They defy equally the "bulls" and the "bears." Regeneration may be suspended on the baptismal fee, the pains of damnation upon the judicious expenditure of the last dime, or salvation itself depend upon actual silver or good security. Milton's mighty cherubim

"Open'd into the hill a spacious wound,
And digg'd out ribs of gold."

Fabrics rose like an exhalation out of that baneful soil of hell. But towered structures full as many and as huge, with "Doric pillar," frieze and roof, and architrave of fretted gold, have been built on earth by these deathless Dominican and Franciscan orders, out of the penalties, pains and purgatories which are supposed to await mortal men. Here is a leverage for you! What wretch, though an unbeliever, would hesitate to spend the last cent to alleviate, maybe to deliver from purgatory a dear friend? Here is a business that thrives amid the dead. Wars are its harvests, Pestilences its windfalls, Death its spring-time, and Hell its treasury. Here are no oft-repeated exhortations, or pursuits, or varied beggings "for pity sake." No, Death runs him down, and purgatory holds him until St. Loyola's successor lets him out—for a consideration.

We need not wonder, then, at the results of such a system. The only wonder is that in three generations there is anything left out of the hands of these keepers of purgatory; or rather, that there is enough found in the hands of three generations to release one—"For what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Then it is that a man's poor friends learn, to their hearts' content, the force of those Scriptures which, during his life-time, he may have scarcely weighed. "They that trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches; none of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him; for the redemption of their soul is precious and it ceaseth forever." Nor can those who read the Holy Scriptures, and who, by all possible means, seek to place in the hands of the people the Word of Life, cease to wonder at the depth and power of this masterpiece of Satan.

When Luther broke the clattering money-box of the chaffering Tetzel, he not only released all the Protestant souls henceforth from purgatory, but transferred countless wealth from the coffers of the church to the cabins of the people. The poor of a Catholic country are hopelessly so. Their religion keeps them poor. Not so in Protestant lands. Their altars are in their houses, the Scriptures are in their hands, and the father is the priest of his house. The impulses of love—love for a world bought by a Saviour's, his Saviour's blood, stirs this son of Christ to lay upon the altar all that he can; to disseminate the truth of God, and the Gospel of his dear Lord Jesus Christ. And shall not these offerings of love, with the blessings of Heaven upon them, yield a greater harvest of good than untold millions wrung from the tears of the superstitious victims of Ignorance and Fraud? Shall not the lowlier forms of a pure Christianity be more glorious and immortal than the inspired architecture of the loftiest genius—forms which are filled with the "Spirit of the power of life"—ministrations which heal the broken-hearted, and breathe the life of God into the souls of men?

The tremendous results of the Reformation can be seen in the education of the masses, in the diffusion of the Scriptures, translated into more than two hundred and fifty languages—the glory of Protestantism alone—and in the pulpit teachings of its Sabbaths throughout the countries of Prussia, the United States and Great Britain, not to mention the lesser States. Yet when we see an ecclesiastical corporation, of vast resources, venerable in age and of vitality terrific, bending its immense energies to reproduce the night of the twelfth century, and to discourage the knowledge and spread of the Holy Scriptures, we are led to ask, is error mightier than truth, and is the love of power and gold stronger than the love of Christ in the hearts of His people? The Saviour has declared that he came into the world to destroy the works of the Adversary. Shall covetousness, then, or fearfulness, unbelief or lukewarmness, betray the interests of Protestantism? Rather let us take example from "the world," from Baptized Paganism, and by undying devotion, by industry, by large sacrifice, deliver our souls and the souls of our children, the church and the world, from every form of evil, but specially from that lust of gold and lust of power which "exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God."

Methodist Protestant Church.

The General Conference of this branch of Methodism adjourned sine die after a session of nine days at Georgetown, D. C. There were but few representatives present at the Conference. In 1858 nineteen or twenty Conferences of the North and West separated from this General Conference and formed a new body. The impression made by reading the proceedings of the Georgetown Conference is, that there are only a few congregations of Methodist Protestants in the States of the South still in connection with this Church.

An account in part of its proceedings has already been given, and we now add further items:

Rev. Dr. Murray, from the committee appointed to ascertain and report what relation is sustained to the General Conference by certain Northern and Western Conferences, reported as follows:

1. That a convention, composed of representatives of Northern and Western conferences, assembled in Cincinnati, Ohio, in the month of November, 1857, adopted a memorial, which was presented to the General Conference assembled in Lynchburg, Virginia, in the month of May, 1858, in which memorial said conferences asked the General Conference to make certain changes in the fundamental economy of the Methodist Protestant Church, including new terms of membership and suffrage, and declared that "if the General Conference should not see good to adopt the action" called for in said memorial, they could not "conscientiously consent to a further continuance" of their "ecclesiastical connection."

2. That the General Conference declined to accede to the demand of the memorialists, and thereupon nineteen of the Northern and Western conferences "united in the call of a convention to be held in Springfield, Ohio, November 10th, 1858."

3. That a convention was holden in Springfield, in the month aforesaid, at which were present representatives from the following conferences, to-wit: Boston, New York, Vermont, Onondaga, Genesee, Pittsburgh, Muskingum, Ohio, Michigan, West Michigan, Wabash, Indiana, North Illinois, Illinois, and North Iowa; and that said convention, composed of twenty-three ministers and twenty-one laymen, did, by a vote of twenty-two ministers and nineteen laymen, unite in declaring "all official connection, co-operation and official fellowship between said conferences" and the conferences adhering to the General Conference "suspended," and that the only opposition to said declaration was the votes of the representatives of the Illinois Conference.

4. That a convention was holden in the city of Cincinnati, Ohio, in the month of November, 1862, which convention did assume that the Methodist Protestant Church in the States of South Carolina, North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Louisiana, Texas, Tennessee, Arkansas, and the eastern part of Virginia, had repudiated the twenty-third article of our religion; and thereupon said convention did proceed to constitute a new General Conference, acting under a Constitution and Discipline differing in several material aspects from the Constitution and Discipline of the Methodist Protestant Church.

5. That not having the minutes of the Cincinnati convention before them, the committee are unable to report the names of the conferences represented therein. But it is evident that the conferences which have said Constitution and Discipline, having voluntarily separated themselves from this Conference, have no right to representation therein.

6. It appears from the minutes of the last General Conference that the Wabash Conference was represented therein. The committee would infer, therefore, that said conference adheres to the Methodist Protestant Church.

The above report was signed by all the members of the committee.

Resolved, That while the General Conference cannot approve the course pursued by certain conferences in the North and West in separating themselves from us, and while we disavow responsibility for anything done by said conferences, individually or in convention, we also disavow unkind feeling for those who have gone from us, and will most cordially receive any conference that shall hereafter evince a desire for rennion by conforming to the Constitution and Discipline of the Methodist Protestant Church.

The Conference proceeded to the consideration of the resolutions reported on Tuesday, relative to holding a special session of the General Conference in 1868. Dr. Batchelor had made a minority report, declaring that such action would be an open violation of the 17th article of the Constitution, and Rev. Dr. J. J. Murray, from the majority of the committee, reported in favor of a General Conference with conventional powers.

The report of the minority was laid on the table, the majority report was considered, and the blanks were filled by the insertion of "first Tuesday in May, 1867."

Pending a motion to adopt the report, Conference took a recess, in order to call upon the President of the United States.

AFTERNOON SESSION.—Conference re-assembled at half-past 2 o'clock, and the consideration of the business pending at the time the recess was taken was resumed.

Mr. Whitfield moved to amend the resolution by prefacing it with a preamble setting forth that the necessities of the Church required a special meeting of the General Conference.

The subject elicited much discussion, involving the constitutional power to call a special General Conference, and Mr. Cherry, of North Carolina, offered the following as a substitute for the committee's report:

Whereas, the condition and necessities of the Methodist Protestant Church are such, we believe, that a General Convention is required for the promotion of its interests; and although it is doubtful about the powers of this General Conference or the Annual Conferences to call a General Convention, to meet in Montgomery on the first Tuesday in May, 1867, nevertheless, under existing circumstances, we recommend the Annual Conferences to consider the matter, and if they believe the necessities of the Church required it, to elect delegates to a General Convention to meet in Montgomery on the first Tuesday in May, 1867: Provided the 2d, 10th and 14th articles of the Constitution are not altered—the 7th section of the 10th and the 1st and 2d section of the 2d articles excepted.

The substitute of Mr. Cherry was adopted.

Woodville Female Seminary.

Many of our people believe that good schools can be found easily in Europe and in the Northern States, and in the past this belief was declared by placing sons and daughters in schools abroad. In charitable condescension, it was believed that creditable approximations to good schools existed in the South; but the terrible and wrathful revelations of fierce war utterance have added new data to old premises, and thereby modified former conclusions—have furnished new media through which are seen other phases of former facts, and brought new forces to do new work. The truth has freed us, in some measure, from old habits and costly prejudices, and well will it be when we are brought to the fullness of liberation. It is now believed that good schools at our own doors are not merely possibilities, but actualities, and there are examples showing this faith to be well founded.

An example of such a school exists at Woodville, known as the "Woodville Female Seminary." The principal of this institution, and his assistants, are thoroughly furnished to their work. They are competent, not merely in the sense of possessing familiarity with text-books, but having completeness of head and heart for their vocation. They fully believe in the divinity and humanity of their work, and their labors are inspired and sustained by this faith. The pupils are well instructed in the matter of the text-books, and well instructed in righteousness. They are fed with the unforbidden fruit of the tree of knowledge and the fruit of the tree of life. They are taught not only to eat, but to digest and assimilate the mental food. All the processes by which mental dyspepsia are produced are strictly forbidden and scrupulously avoided. The endeavor is to develop the naturalness of girlhood into the cultivated naturalness of free womanhood. Manners are not put on to them as paste or paint, but are acquired as the outward raiment of interior kindliness, the outward showing of the inner adornment. In this school honest work is done in the name of Him who alone can make work victorious.

The economic arrangements and material appointments of this institution are as complete as the means now possessed will allow.

Nothing herein is said in puffing or exaggeration—only the facts are plainly stated. In truthful emphasis, the school is a good one; such as Dr. Arnold or Pestalozi would approve. VISITOR.

Within the last twenty-five years upwards of fifty churches have been erected in Western New York by English Catholics, at their own private cost, exclusive of churches erected by the subscriptions of the congregations.

FAILURE TO UNITE.—An effort has just been made by suitable committees from the American and Foreign Bible Society, New York, and the American Baptist Publication Society, Philadelphia, to unite these two bodies into one. But a name for the two, united, could not be agreed upon; and this alone prevents the union.

Northern Sentiment.

In the New York Methodist of a recent date we find the proceedings of a "Preachers' Meeting" in that city, from which we make some extracts, that our people may understand what these Northern preachers think of the Church South:

"On motion, the order of the day was taken up, namely, 'What should be the policy of our Church in regard to the ministers and members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South?'

Rev. J. Henson said that his mind had been befogged by the discussion of this subject on last Monday; that he had been startled by the positions taken, and led to inquire into the nature of right. What is it? It was in the mind of God before the world was, and was embodied in the Adamic law, and was re-enforced by Christ. According to this law he was bound to treat his Southern brethren kindly, and he had done so in the South; but when it comes to the recognition of them, and welcoming them back into our Church, he cannot do it. He can recognize any man who preaches the Lord Jesus Christ, but no man who preaches treason.

Rev. M. D'C. Crawford said that he liked the form of the question before the meeting, because it left every brother free to express his convictions. The time may come when this will be a practical question, but it is certainly not so now. He believed in the law of love, as expounded by a previous speaker, but not if it imply the taking back of the South at the present time. It requires us to speak kindly and to treat kindly our Southern brethren, and he had always lived up to the law in this particular. When, after the war had closed, there was a great cry for vengeance, they all knew where he had stood. He had never desired that even the leaders in the rebellion should be punished; he had simply asked that in dealing with them the safety of the nation might be kept in view, and this was all he wanted for the Church. The difficulty that the Northern Conferences would not suffer themselves to be presided over by the Bishops of the South, he still thought amounted to nothing. Our conferences would not hesitate five minutes, had commissioners been appointed and other matters settled to the liking of some among us. He thought our testimony before God on the sin of slavery was a great objection to the South against present rennion. They felt this, and they ought to feel it. We cannot take this testimony from before the world, and he would never consent to do so. Another difficulty was the imperiens, lordly bearing of the South towards the North. This bearing was fostered by the South, and greatly augmented by the cowardly truckling of the North. He granted that in this quarrel there was a change. The views of slaveholders had been changed by gunpowder. The most loyal people in the South were the soldiers, and the most disloyal were ministers and women, who had never been brought in contact with gunpowder. They are poor and proud, and pride and poverty go together; and this was another obstacle in the way of reunion. This must be removed. He was therefore opposed to rennion now. He joined in the sentiments of the New York East Conference, but had he been present when the action was taken, he would have opposed the doings of the New York Conference on this subject.

Here the speaker was interrupted by Rev. A. K. Sandford, who read the following telegram from the Secretary of the General Conference of the M. E. Church South, then in session:

NEW ORLEANS, April 27th, 1866.

To Rev. T. W. Chadwick, Sec'y New York Conference:

The General Conference of the M. E. Church South heartily reciprocates the kind expressions of the New York Annual Conference, but cannot consent to appoint commissioners on the plan proposed.

THOS. O. SUMMERS, Sec'y.

Mr. Crawford, on resuming his speech, remarked, "Had commissioners been appointed, it would have been a calamity." He continued to speak at some length in a similar strain.

The discussion was to be further continued.

The 29th of June, 1867, will be the eighteen hundredth anniversary of St. Peter's death. On that occasion the Pope is to convoke all the bishops of Christendom to Rome, where a grand jubilee will be celebrated.

MISSOURI PREACHERS.—At the late session of the Circuit court of Jackson county, two ministers, one of them Rev. Mr. Smith of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, were indicted for preaching without taking the oath. Also numerous gamblers and other criminals were before the Court to answer for their offenses. At a time just after a lot of the gamblers had pleaded guilty and paid their fines of ten dollars each, the Attorney for Rev. Mr. Smith at the pleasure of the Court, presented his case for disposal. The Judge asked, "what has Mr. Smith been doing—gambling too?". "No sir!" replied the Attorney, "he is guilty of a graver offense; he is indicted for preaching the Gospel of the Son of God." The gamblers, on confession, were discharged with the payment of ten dollars, while the preacher had to give a bond for future appearance at Court.—Mo. Presbyterian.

THE POPE'S ASSUMPTION.—A number of strangers in Rome recently presented Pope Pius IX with an address. He replied in the following words:

"I alone, despite my unworthiness, am the successor of the Apostles, the Vicar of Christ; I alone have the mission to guide and direct the bark of Peter; I am the way, the truth and the life. They who are with me, are with the Church; those who are not with me are out of the Church; they are out of the way, the truth, and the life."

The South Carolina Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Church has lately been in session. A report from the Temperance Committee deprecating the use of [illegible] was passed in an amended form by which the members of the Conference pledged themselves to abstain from the weed by the next session of the Annual Conference.

History of the War.

It is well known that the record of the war published by Moore is one of the most voluminous works ever presented to the public, and is said to form a fair sized library in itself. For some time, Col. Chaplin, one of the most intelligent officers in the army, has been selected by the war department to collect, arrange and index the official dispatches of the United States officers who were in active service during the war. Congress proposes to order and pay for the publication of a work of history, containing the civil and military data necessary to furnish a reliable account of the various stages of the late contest. Quite a little debate sprung up in the Senate on the proper mode in which to proceed with the preparation of this important work, destined for the attention of posterity. Mr. Wilson, the chairman of the military committee, had endeavored to place a fair business-like statement before the Senate, when his colleague from Massachusetts, who had evidently been uneasy in his chair for some time, arose to his feet, and, advancing among the desks, slapped the fingers of his right hand down upon the afflicted left, and proceeded in his customary pedantic and dictatorial manner, as schoolmaster of the Senate. After a long dissertation on the American archives, descriptive of their felicities and defects, Mr. Sumner perorated by a burlesque description of the imaginative man who should compile the records of the war. The Senate was in a state of trained titter at the pedagogian air of Mr. Sumner, and even the radicals were amused at the simplicity of their compeer. The logical Fessenden, the practical Grimes, and the powerful Johnson, were engaged in secret admiration of the speaker's pomposity. Mr. Johnson was in a reclining posture and in an accustomed manner leaning his massive head towards his right side, trying to conceal some internal joviality at the gigantic Senator's feeble remarks. But, to return to the speech and the peroration—oh! the peroration was grandiloquent. It was spoken actually without preparation, as follows: "Where shall we find such a man? Where can he be found?" Without moving a muscle, Mr. Johnson blurted out, "Boston, Boston!" The suppressed titter broke out into a laugh, and the laugh into a roar, in which Sumner joined, amused at what he believed was the effect of Johnson's humor, but which was nothing more than an opportunity to give vent to the risibles excited by his own nonsense, and now enhanced by the ridiculous figure he cut when laughing at himself. The publication, which was the subject of the debate, is of some importance to Southerners, as the Confederate records now in this city will be used in making up the compilation. If there was any spirit of fairness in Congress, a proper number of Southerners would be associated with the conduct of this historic memorial. By the adoption of such a course, a fairer history of the late contest would be prepared than the world has ever seen in a single instance, and the labors of future historians would be greatly facilitated.—Crescent.

WEEKLY SUMMARY OF NEWS.

FROM WASHINGTON.

At the request of Gen. Howard, with the exception of the departments of Texas and Arkansas, the Commissionerships of the Freedmen's Bureau have been placed in charge of the district military commandants. Gen. Grant has shown his confidence in Gen. Howard's former Assistant Commissioners by giving them entire military charge.

The sum of $3 079 was collected in Michigan during the month of May, for trespass fines on Government timber. Wisconsin receives 3,564 acres of the Menashn swamp lands.

The monitor Minnitonnah will proceed to Russia, convoyed by the steamer Augusta. The two vessels will subsequently form a part of the European squadron.

The heads of departments are seriously embarrassed by the crowds of Union soldiers flocking to Washington in search of clerkships which it is impossible to confer.

These men have been put to the expense of going to Washington by false representations.

Brig. Gen. Geo. G. Dodge, who won a national reputation for disembarking and embarking the armies at Fort Fisher, without the loss of a man, or a dollar's worth of property, has been appointed consul to Bremen. Gen. G. O. Loomis has been appointed Assessor of Internal Revenue at Detroit.

The President has issued a proclamation, for the purpose of maintaining the national honor. He warns all good citizens from aiding or abetting the unlawful expedition of those evil disposed persons, against a nation with which this government is at peace, and authorizes all magistrates and other officers of the United States, to exert their authority to defeat their unlawful proceedings and bring to justice all offenders.

The published statement gives the public debt, less the cash in the Treasury, at $2 670,288,000, a decrease of $19,000,000 in May. The cash in the Treasury is stated at nearly $130,000,000.

Stephens, the Fenian, is here.

A large number of the clerical force in the departments will be discharged this month.

WASHINGTON, June 5.—In the Senate, yesterday, Mr. Edmunds reported the House bill for the protection of passengers on the Western Rivers.

The House passed the bill enabling the New York and Montana Iron Mountain and Manufacturing Company to purchase a certain amount of public lands not now in the market.

WASHINGTON, June 6.—The following circular was issued from the Attorney General's office on the 5th:

By direction of the President you are hereby instructed to cause the arrest of all prominent leading or conspicuous persons called Fenians, whom you have probable cause to believe have or may be guilty of violation of the neutrality laws of the United States. JAMES SPEED,
Attorney General.

The President has telegraphed to military commanders to report any case where an unpardoned Confederate has been elected to a civil office. He to-day directed the removal of the Mayor of Portsmouth, Va., who had just been elected to that position without being pardoned. He was a rebel Colonel.

General Grant's trip West, it is expected, will be temporarily delayed on account of the Fenian troubles.

Secretary Seward received dispatches by the last mail from Minister Motley, containing full assurances of the Government at Vienna that no more Austrian troops will be sent to Mexico.

The House Committee discussed the Mexican question, Gen. Banks presenting resolutions strongly reaffirming the Monroe doctrine. It was proposed to sell Mexico arms and ammunition, and take bonds in pay. An effort also was made to have Congress indorse the Mexican $50,000,000 loan. No conclusion was reached.

FOREIGN.

CONCENTRATION OF TROOPS.

The Berlin correspondent of the London Times says: "Rapidly as the armaments are now progressing on either side, the Austrian as well as the Prussian Generals have hardly begun to concentrate their forces and prepare against the immediate contingency of an attack or defense. I have been assured by a military authority that he does not believe that the actual conflict can possibly take place before the 15th or 20th of June. This interval, required by strategy, offers new advantages for the pacific endeavors of diplomacy." The writer says: "All over Prussia, the peace meetings recommence. The wish for peace predominates over every other feeling. We shall soon hear that the people will not allow themselves to become the helpless instruments of a despotic annexation policy."

A Berlin despatch of the 18th says: "The Prussian Government has demanded satisfaction from the Cabinet of Vienna for violation of the frontier at Klingenbetel, where an Austrian patrol stopped and questioned the Prussian customs official. Prince Frederick Charles, whose appointment to a high command has already been announced, has been placed at the head of the first Saxon army corps. An army corps is being organized for Silesia, and it is believed that the King will proceed thither on the outbreak of hostilities, accompanied by the Minister of War. His Majesty received to-day the Crown Prince, and it is stated that the latter will receive the command of the Fifth and Sixth Corps d'Armee. The Grand Duke William of Mecklenburg-Strelitz left this morning for Sevaw, it is said, to assume the command of the vanguard. The Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin will, in the event of war, place his troops, consisting of one division, at the disposal of Prussia, and will himself accept a more important command in the Prussian army. The division commanders of the Prussian infantry regiments have already been appointed, but not those of the cavalry regiments. Three army corps, numbering 90,000 men, are believed to be concentrated upon the Saxon frontier."

ITALY MUST FIGHT.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times says that Prince Napoleon, who had just returned to Paris from Italy, is reported to have said that, "in the actual state of affairs, Italy cannot avoid going to war, even should she be left alone to confront her enemy." An official decree, issued at Florence, states that the twenty volunteer battalions will form ten regiments, and wear the Garibaldian red shirt and cap.

The Italian press was prohibited from publishing intelligence of military movements. The Chamber of Deputies at Florence after a long debate, and in spite of the opposition of the Minister of Finance, agreed to the proposition for a tax upon Italian Rentes by a vote of 145 to 141. The Minister of Finance thereupon tendered his resignation.

GARIBALDI'S LETTER.

The following is the letter in which Garibaldi accepts the command of the Volunteers:

"CAPRERA, May 11, 1866.

"M. LE MINISTRE: I accept, with true gratitude, the disposition which you have taken, and His Majesty has sanctioned, relating to the Volunteer Corps. I am thankful to you for the trust you manifest in me in giving me the command, and you will be good enough to express to the King my sentiments. I hope soon to co-operate with our glorious army in accomplishing the destinies of the country. I thank you for your courtesy in making this communication to me. Accept, etc.

G. GARIBALDI."

The correspondent of The Daily News at Florence says the general impression throughout Italy is that war has now become absolutely necessary to the national existence. The alternative is foreign war or civil war.

Austria, Prussia, Italy and the minor German States are arming. Italy has negotiated a loan with the banks, and made their paper issues a legal tender. Her navy already virtually blockade Trieste, the Austrian port on the Adriatic just opposite Venice. Garibaldi has been recognized as the leader of the Italian volunteers, and thousands of red shirts—the Garibaldian uniform—been already purchased.

Prussia has notified Hanover that she must arm, and that her military roads will be shortly occupied. Hostilities have almost commenced.

Meantime another attempt to obtain a European Congress has been made. This has been Napoleon's favorite proposition for years, and it was only England's dissent five years ago that prevented it. Italy agrees to send deputies only upon two conditions, viz: that she may remain armed, and that the cession of Venetia be included in the programme of Congress. There is less likelihood of England being drawn into a Congress now than ever before. "Entangling alliances" are now a greater horror to England than to America.

The Fenian Invasion of Canada.

TORONTO, C. W., June 1.—The Fenians ramify through all the provinces, and are understood to be acting in concert with their brethren from the American side. This, it is supposed, will tend to overthrow the confidence of the authorities in any endeavor to resist the invaders by the aid of the militia. As for regular troops there are but 6000 of them, of whom a large proportion are in full sympathy and fellowship with the Fenians. There is therefore reason, according to official authorities here, to anticipate an early uprising of the Canadian population, and a fraternizing of the British soldiers with the people as in the days of the barricades in Paris.

It is also claimed that not only the Irish inhabitants of the provinces, but the French Canadians are connected with this conspiracy, and will, at the proper time, add their co-operation. It is possible that this occupation of Fort Erie is but an attempt to divert attention, while a blow more decisive will be struck at a more vital point of the British Empire in North America. In that event we may expect to see the lower St. Lawrence responding at an early day to the call of the Fenians.

ELMIRA, N. Y., June 1.—The 5th Maryland Cavalry regiment, a part of the Fenian army of invasion, under command of Colonel Dennis Donohue, passed through this city to-day, en route to Ogdensburg. They number about 600 men. While waiting for the train they got into a fight amongst themselves at the depot. No deadly weapons of any kind were used. Many of them had their heads damaged, and blood ran quite freely. The men are mostly young. Many of them were in the rebel army throughout the war. They had with them six cases of muskets, eight boxes of rations and ammunition marked H. D. Hockley, Potsham street, Lawrence county. They were very enthusiastic and sanguine of success.

A report from Corning says that 695 Fenians passed through that village to-day en route to Buffalo.

The news from Canada created much excitement among the Fenians here.

BOSTON June 1.—Maj. Mahon who served during the war in the 9th Massachusetts Regiment, has been commissioned as a Brigadier General to command the Fenian volunteers from this State, and will leave for the border to-morrow morning. It is supposed that about 250 Fenians left by the northern train last night.

There is no possible chance of a successful issue of this invasion. Had the Fenians improved the opportunity of this morning, they might have possessed themselves of the entire Canada side of the river, from Fort Erie to Ontario. It is now too late. They cannot retreat without a fight.

BUFFALO, June 1.—Two companies of the 65th New York are guarding our arsenal, but there is no danger of the Fenians troubling American property. They seized a number of horses belonging to the Niagara Street Railroad Company that were pastured on the Canada side, but when informed that they were the property of Americans they were returned.

A dispatch from Port Colburn states that lots of British troops are there and more arriving. The grand trunk ferry-boat has been ordered from Buffalo to Port Colburn, it is surmised to convey troops from there to some point.

There is a large Fenian meeting this evening at the Opera-House in this city.

NEW YORK, June 1.—The landing of the forces on the Canada side was unobstructed. They immediately proceeded to impress horses from the citizens, collect provisions, and to establish a picket line.

A farmer was met on the highway and refused to surrender his horse and drew his pistol in defense. He fired one shot and was quickly riddled with bullets.

Mr. Kempson, Mayor of Port Erie, was waited on and compelled to furnish rations for 1000 men. Another report says Mr. Kempson went out to read the riot act, when the Fenians fired on him, killing him instantly.

Runner reports three Canadian citizens killed during the morning by the Fenians' advance pickets. Canadian troops are now stationed all along the river to prevent the crossing of reinforcements. The suspension bridge is strongly guarded, and careful scrutiny is made of all passengers.

OGDENSBURG, June 1.—The detachment of supposed Fenians which left New York last evening, arrived at Potsdam in due time by the train. They were under excellent subordination on the way, and at Potsdam quietly broke into small squads, and after a brief time returned to the line. A large force that had previously arrived were hardly to be noticed, so closely were they kept to quarters.

There has been no Fenian eruption here. Canadian authorities [illegible] permit no one to land on their side of the river to-night, so that the ferryboat [illegible] laid up, and communication with Prescott and night trains on the Grand Trunk Railway is cut off.

MALONE, N. Y., June 6.—General Sweeny and Colonel Meshaw have left for St. Albans. It is reported that Spear is about to cross to-night, on the Mississippi frontier, with 2,500 men and two Generals.

Eleven hundred Fenians are in town and eight hundred regulars, of the 4th U. S. Infantry, Regulars and Fenians are fraternizing. All quiet in the neighborhood.

Gen. Mead is concentrating troops at Ogdensburg, expecting to fight there to enforce the neutrality laws.

A Fenian reconnoissance starts out to-night in the direction of Fort Covington. It is possible a fight may take place. Gen. Henferman commands the scouting party.

Terrible weather prevails.

NEW YORK, June 6.—Specials report a monetary panic in Montreal. There is a run on the Saving's Bank. Gold is at two hundred per cent. premium.

Gen. Mitchell, Commander-in-Chief, has gone to St. Johns. St. Armand, Canada, is said to be evacuated by the inhabitants and volunteers, and is garrisoned only by British regulars.

The bank deposits have also been removed to the interior. Eight thousand rounds of ammunition passed through St. Albans yesterday in possession of the Fenians.

Eleven hundred fully armed Fenians passed through Sheldon, Vermont, yesterday. The conclusion was that the Fenian prospects were brightening, and they mean to fight. An early advance is contemplated.

One special says the Fenians, near St. Albans, have artillery, and are the main body of the Fenian army.

Gen. Mead has learned that one thousand Fenians commenced a movement from Highgate, Vermont, and he had directed an officer to follow to prevent a breach of neutrality, if possible.

His information places the Fenian force at 20,000, and without artillery. Though he has but 10,000 troops to guard one thousand miles, he anticipates no serious troubles.

Col. Vodges, of the 1st U. S. Artillery, has arrived at Ogdensburg, and taken command of the United States forces there.

The Ogdensburg Arsenal is nearly filled with Fenian stores. Geo. Lynch, commanding the forces at Buffalo, has ordered the concentration of his forces at Batavia.

A Detroit telegram says scores of suspicious strangers are [illegible] into Canada, while two thousand [illegible] lounge about that city.

The blow to be struck on the Western frontier is certainly near. The Canadian and American authorities are on the alert, the former with 800 men and a battery of artillery, the latter with three companies of regulars.

The revenue cutters Johnson and Sherman are armed with six guns.

The Fenians assert that Sweeney will not strike East till the expedition is ready to strike in the West.

Quite a number of Fenians stole into Canada to-day, supposed to be telegraph and railroad destructionists. Some have been arrested and jailed at Sarnia.

At Detroit the Fenians are enthusiastic for Sweeney. Large numbers have enlisted.

A Panic in Germany.

Trade and commerce are already sufferers to an enormous extent. In Hamburg the importation of colonial goods has all but ceased. In Brandenburg, Saxony, Silesia, Rhineland, and Wurtemburg, the greater part of the mill-hands have been paid off. At Munich a panic has broken out, rendering all sorts of stocks and notes equally unsaleable. In Berlin, the Prussian four-and-a-half per cents. lost yesterday five per cent. in a single hour, having now receded from their ordinary quotation at 104 or 105 to 85. The most solid of railway securities have been depreciated by twenty or thirty per cent within the last few days. The notes are pouring back to the banks, and although covered as yet, cannot be disbursed in large amounts except at a discount. Mortgages on real estate are scarcely to be had, while notice is given in all cases where the agreement permits of it. Even the various royal exchequers of Germany, which in this patriarchal country are in the habit of advancing money to conservative bankers and landed proprietors of unblemished loyalty, are calling in debts as fast as possible. Manufacturers dispose of their goods at ruinous prices, to be able to take up their bills, while the smaller tradesmen are giving way to the unhealthy feeling that when the world is being turned topsyturvy individuals cannot be expected to meet their liabilities. This panic is only three days old, but its development has been as rapid as its appearance was sudden. By a strange inconsistency of human nature, it is growing, and growing, while yet there are few that really believe in war. So terrible are the consequences apprehended, not, it is true, respecting the existence of the State, but as regards the material prosperity of its inhabitants and the stability of its political institutions, that while every one is anxious to protect himself against possible contingencies, most people will confidently assure you that they are very unlikely after all.—London Times.

From South America.

NEW YORK, June 1.—We have some further interesting items in relation to the defeat of the Spanish fleet at Callao, and the present position of the two opposing forces. The Government of Gen. Prado is more popular than ever. Since the fight the Spanish vessels had been lying at San Lorenzo Island, out of reach of the Peruvian batteries, but somewhat annoyed by Peruvian torpedoes. No damages occured to them from that source, but they were under the necessity of leaving their anchorage and putting to sea every night.

The United States steamer Waterloo picked up a launch about the 7th ultimo, loaded with coal, which the officers were on the point of making fast to, when, by a fortunate occurrence, one of the blocks of coal broke open. A loaded six pound shell was discovered inside. On investigation, the load of coal was found to be freely interspersed with such dangerous materials. It was doubtless intended by the Peruvians for the use of Spanish vessels.

A grand celebration of the victory of Callao took place at Lima, on the 13th.

Gen. Prado has ordered all Spanish subjects to leave the republic, under the penalty of perpetual imprisonment.

The Louisville Presbytery.

The Assembly of the Old School Presbyterians recently in session at St. Louis, having referred the case of the Louisville Presbytery to a Special Committee, the Chairman of the Committee presented their report:

It reviews the past action of the General Assembly on the subject of Slavery and the rebellion, declares that this is an organized conspiracy to break down the General Assembly, and that it is schismatical and dangerous to allow such proceedings.

It reviews the action of the Louisville Presbytery, and says that the failure of the Synod of Kentucky to act upon the matter devolves the duty upon this Assembly. There is danger that this leaven of the late rebellion may infuse its poison through other Presbyteries if not now promptly rebuked. It is our duty to purge out this leaven, and we will be recreant to ourselves if we fail to do it.

The Committee recommended the passage of resolutions as follows:

"1. That the Presbytery of Louisville be hereby dissolved, and its records and property be returned over as hereafter ordered.

"2. That a new Presbytery be hereby constituted, to bear the same name as that dissolved, and to be composed of the following ministers: the Rev. Messrs. Stuart, Hill, Wilcox, Matthews, Barrelohet, McCown, Inslow, Saxe, Hoyt, McKee, McMillan, Craig, McMorton and Young, together with such ruling elders as shall be admitted, the said ministers and elders previously subscribing to the following formula: 'I do hereby express my disapproval of the action of the late Presbytery of Louisville, and acknowledge the duty of obedience to the General Assembly in all matters pertaining to the church politic.'

"3. So many ministers and elders as do not, within the next two months, apply for admission into the new Presbytery, and sign the above formula, shall not be entitled to resume their relations to this Assembly, and their pastoral connection therewith shall forthwith be declared, ipso facto, dissolved.

"4. Licentiates and candidates under the call of the dissolved Presbytery shall be transferred to the care of the new Presbytery.

"5. The General Assembly, while thus indicating its displeasures with the rebellious members of the Louisville Presbytery, has no wish to alter the standing of churches, elders or private members within said Presbytery."

Rev. Dr. McLean vindicated the report of the Committee, and the Rev. Dr. Thos. made a speech which was as violent as it was unchristian, and as fanatical and full of hatred toward the South as any speech that Thad. Stevens ever made. He had not concluded when the Assembly adjourned.

Cholera at New York Quarantine.

NEW YORK, June 1.—The cholera which is now spreading among the passengers of the steamers Union and Peruvian at quarantine appears to be of a severe type. But the facts will be better shown in a day or two. The report of Dr. Bissell, Deputy Health officer at quarantine, dated yesterday, the 31st ult., says that since the previous report, the admission to the hospital ship had been fifty and the deaths ten. Seven of the persons who died were from the Union, and three from the Peruvian. We learn that the reports of cholera in this city, published in a morning journal, are without foundation.

Dr. Bissell's report to-day shows that 59 new cases and 9 deaths from cholera have occurred on board the Peruvian and Union since his last report, leaving 67 cases on the hospital ship.

A New York exchange says: "Dr. Solomon Andrews essayed the performance of aerial navigation yesterday, and met with much better success than some of the critics had expected. His flying machine went up from Houston-street and came down at Astoria, L. I., to the consternation of the people there residing and passing, having concluded to make some alterations in his apparatus before trying further experiments."

THE PRICE OF GOLD.—During the past twelve months gold has traveled in a circle. It is a curious circumstance that the price of gold on Friday last, the 11th ultimo, was 28⅜, which was precisely the same which it bore on the same day of the month 1865.

A terrible financial panic has swept over England, a panic surpassing even that of 1825.—Extraordinary powers, prohibited by its charter, have been granted to the Bank of England by a special act of Parliament. Numerous large and very disastrous failures are reported, among them the European Bank of London. The latest news, however, is of a more favorable character, the panic having somewhat subsided, but the rate of interest in the Bank of England still stood at twelve per cent. The panic has not been without its effect on this side the water. United States securities are being returned by millions, and enormous exports of specie have followed. Last week $11,000,000 in gold left the port of New York alone.

By direction of the President, the military departments of Tennessee and Kentucky have been discontinued, and those States now constitute a department under Gen. Sherman, commanding.

Mrs. Wm. H. McFarland, of Richmond, Va., is president of the "Memorial Association." The objects of this society are to collect funds to be applied in enclosing, arranging, returning and otherwise placing in order, the graves of the Confederate dead interred in the cemeteries of Richmond, so that the names of our fallen soldiers may be permanently preserved from oblivion, and their last resting places saved from the slightest appearance of neglect or want of care.

The gratifying news is given that water has ceased to flow through the old break in the Bass levee, in Carroll parish, four miles below Lake Providence; also through the crevasse above Ashton, in Arkansas. By the 1st of July, it is confidently anticipated that the river will be within its banks opposite the Grand Levee, Morgnnza and West Baton Rouge crevasses, thus stopping further flow of water upon the now inundated section of our State.

Government has received full assurance that no more Austrian troops are coming to Mexico.

General Steedman, who is at present traveling in the South, as Commissioner to investigate the operations of the Freedmen's Bureau, commanded a division of negro soldiers in Thomas' army at the battle of Nashville.

THE CREVASSES AND THE PROS.—The engineer in charge of the Bouligny crevasse, below the city, reports that, unless very unfavorable weather intervenes, the breach will be closed in a few days.

The river is falling here, and so great has been the decline, that, this side of Memphis, it is not the singe technically known, as "within banks," that is it has ceased to flow over its lowest coatings. All apprehensions of further damage from the Bouligny crevasse may therefore be dismissed. Moreover the country above Red River, and, unless that stream should continue an unusual length of time as it presents remarkably high stage, the region overflowed by the crevasses at Morganza and in the Grand Levee, will be dry by the first of July, early enough for a second planting of both cotton and corn. So it is likely to be on the bottom lands of Red River, as the past flood of the river is loosed by the falling of the Mississippi.

The prospects are not so dismal as they were a few weeks ago. A half or a two third crop is often made from a July sowing.

TERRIBLE STORM IN NORTHWEST LOUISIANA.—A letter received by a merchant in this city, from a correspondent at Minden, Claiborne parish, gives an account of a terrible storm, with which that part of the State was visited on the 31st ult.

A tempest of wind and hail desolated a large tract of country, leveling fences and crops, prostrating trees, destroying buildings and killing animals.

At the time the letter was written the extent of damage had not been even approximately ascertained, but sufficient was known to authorize the belief that the injury to crops and destruction of other property was ruinous to a great number of citizens. To illustrate the terrible effects of the hail, the writer mentions that out of a herd of eighty-three cattle, belonging to a farmer near Minden, eighty were killed by it. So extraordinary a circumstance gives an idea of the weight of the frozen masses and the force with which they were driven. A full report of the consequences of so fierce a tempest will be looked for with anxious interest.

THE FLOOD ON RED RIVER.—Alexandria inundated.—The latest arrivals from Red River report that stream still very high, falling above Natchitoches, but rising below. On Thursday morning last the levee at Alexandria broke, and in a short time the town was inundated to the depth of four feet. The few buildings erected on the business squares burned by General Banks were in danger of being undermined, and the inhabitants were taking refuge in the hotel known as the Ice-House. This calamity falling just as the people were endeavoring to recover from the ruin of the war, will have a most depressing effect upon the energetic and public spirited citizens of the town.

SAD ACCIDENT BY A STORM IN MISSISSIPPI.—We learn from the Canton (Miss.) Citizen, that the storm in that vicinity, on the 2d, prostrated the dwelling and outhouses of Mrs. Semmes, two miles distant, burying beneath the ruins a lovely little daughter of eleven years. Mrs. Wright, a member of the family, was also badly injured, and her recovery is considered doubtful. One or two other persons were injured, but, we are happy to learn, not seriously. The furniture, clothing, etc., of the family were scattered to the winds, and nearly everything they possessed either lost or destroyed.

PROPELLING VESSELS BY TURBINE WHEELS.—An interesting trial of a new mode of propulsion for steam vessels by steam, has been made on the Thames. The Nautilus, an eighty-seven ton boat, fitted with Ruthven's hydraulic propeller, was fairly and successfully tried against a river boat. The propeller consists of a turbine wheel below the water line, which throws out with great force water admitted from the bottom by four nozzles, two at the stem and two at the stern. The vessel of course goes forward when the latter and backwards when the former are used. If the stream of water be sent in opposite directions the vessel turns as on a pivot. A rudder is not really wanted. Numerous advantages are specified, among them that the water of a leak would be rapidly forced out of and made to serve, instead of to sink the vessel. All the machinery of motion is wholly out of the reach of injury by an enemy, and the government has ordered the building of a gunboat on this principle.

At the request of Gen. Howard, with the exception of the departments of Texas and Arkansas, the Commissionerships of the Freedmen's Bureau have been placed in charge of the district military commandants.

Judge Edmonds, commissioner of the General Land Office, states that the vast western plains and plateau, can only be rendered habitable by planting forests, which will fertilize and moisten the soil, soften and modify the climate, and protect men, animals and crops from the desolating winds of those regions.

An exchange paper thinks Hiram Powers, the sculptor, is a swindler, because he "chiseled" an unfortunate Greek girl out of a block of marble.

An old negress, called aunt Biddy Lundy, died in Macon last week, aged 112 years.

The Fort Kearney Herald of a late date, speaking of the increase in travel across the plains, says from the 20th to the 22d inst. inclusive, 162 wagons passed through that place for the West. Some were bound to Salt Lake, others to Oregon, and still others the greater proportion, to Colorado. All were organized and armed in compliance with the military order issued last winter. The number of wagons stated constitute six trains, the whole of which mustered 211 men, who were armed with 126 guns and 209 revolvers.

It is in contemplation, in Congress, to build a new and costly executive mansion on the high grounds east of the capitol, in Washington, and turn the White House into a fire-proof building, for the state department. It was for this purpose, says a Washington dispatch, that leave was asked in Congress, on Thursday, to bring in a joint resolution directing the proper committees to make a reconnoissance for a site.

The General Court Martial, with Gen. Auger as President, convened to-day, to try Lieut. Col Paulding, for depositing Government funds in the Merchants' National Bank.

Christianity is an individual work; the grace of God converts soul by soul. Each soul is a world in which a creation peculiar to itself must be accomplished. The Church is but the assembly of all the souls in which this work is wrought, and who are now united because they have but "one spirit, one Lord, one Father."

AUGUSTA, June 5.—A tornado passed over this city and vicinity between one and two o'clock this evening, accompanied by heavy rain and a thunder storm. At Hamburg, S. C., the school house was destroyed, killing seven children and wounding nine. The crops are supposed to have been seriously damaged by the heavy hail storm and incessant rain of the past two days.

ST. ALBANS, June 7.—Gen. Sweeney was arrested last night in bed, at the hotel. He made no resistance.

NEW YORK, June 7.—President Roberts was arrested, and declining a request to appear in Marshal Murray's office, he was brought before Commissioner Betts. Roberts absolutely refuses to accept bail tendered for him, and declines to give personal parole to appear, or a parole that he would not violate the neutrality laws. He was remanded to the custody of the Marshal, with quarters at the Astor House.

Col. Kerrigan, an ex-member of the Fenian Congress, was also arrested, but the apprehension of Roberts and Sweeney ends the invasion of Canada.

At Toronto an exciting scene, and almost a collision occurred, by the accidental meeting of some Fenian prisoners under guard, with a funeral cortege just returning from the burial of several volunteers killed in the late skirmish near Fort Erie.

RICHMOND, June 7.—In the United States District Court the Grand Jury presented several true bills. The judge warned them from revealing the proceedings of the body, and said the names of the parties indicted could not be made public until their apprehension. It is believed several prominent officials of the late Confederate Government were indicted for treason. Gen. Breckinridge is said to be among the number.

WASHINGTON, June 7.—The Congressional proceedings are without importance. Mr. Davis addressed the Senate against the reconstruction bill, and denounced the radical policy. The radicals will endeavor to force a vote this week. There is no doubt of its passage by the required two-thirds vote.

WASHINGTON, June 7.—The Commissioner of the Internal Revenue decides that the interest and dividends derived from stocks are regarded as income derived from investments, without reference to the time during which these stocks are held, but when gains derived from the sale of stocks involve interest received or accrued, such gains may be regarded as derived from business alone. The value of property used in business, less the amount of Insurance, may be deducted when lost from the gains and profits of business.

MONTGOMERY, June 7.—The majority of the Supreme Court to-day decided that the 1st and 8th sections of the Stay Law, postponing judgment on suits for twelve months, and the 2d, 3d, and 4th sections, which stay the collections of judgment already rendered before the passage of the law, and the 7th section, in relation to sales under mortgage, are unconstitutional.

NEW YORK, June 7.—Officers who have served in the late war are applying to Maj. Gen. Ulmann for position under him as volunteers in the corps of Garibaldi.

The London Times, of the 26th of May, says the bank returns show a continued drain of gold, and the pressure for money indicates that the crisis is not yet over. The Times, in its city article, says although the suspension of the bank charter act did good for the moment by arresting the disastrous run on the banks, it can now hardly be questioned that it has in some respects aggravated the commercial pressure and intensified the inconvenience to which all mercantile and financial classes have been exposed. Either the crisis must be allowed to wear itself out, no matter over what period it may extend, or what destruction it may cause.

FIRE AT ST. LOUIS—STEAMERS BURNED.

The Bulletin of the 4th contains particulars of the burning of the Boston, James Raymond and Ida Handy, the latter of the Atlantic and Mississippi Company's line, at St. Louis, on Friday night. The fire commenced on the Boston. The Ida Handy was a fine boat, and was having her old tubular boilers taken out and new ones substituted. The A. M. Company seems to be most unfortunate, having lost nine or ten boats within almost as many months, but no casualty seems to disheartens it.

A majority of the United States Supreme Court has decided the Missouri test oath to be unconstitutional, under the provision that no State shall pass any bill of attainder or ex post facto law.

Aid for the Widows and Orphans.

In view of the fact that my publications are having a very great sale throughout the Southern States, by which I, of course, am benefitted—and in view of the present general suffering throughout the country, I deem it only a fitting return that I should contribute liberally—as I do most cheerfully—of my receipts, to such Southern charitable enterprises as promise to be most efficient. I have therefore the pleasure of stating that for the period of four months, from and after this date, (March 15, 1866,) I shall contribute FIFTEEN per Cent. of all the profits on the sale of the above named valuable List of Books, to the "Widows and Orphans' Relief Associations" Of the several States.

All canvassers will, therefore, aid the suffering and unprotected, while, at the same time, advancing their own interests.

Speak the Truth.

The present King of Hanover, in his youth, was remarkable for his candid and open disposition. Playing one day with young Count L——, in the principal drawing-room of the palace, they heedlessly upset and destroyed a very valuable ornament, which the Duchess had expressly charged them neither to touch nor go near. On her return, her Royal Highness discovered the accident, and demanded how it happened. "I," said Prince George, stepping boldly forward, "I did it."

On being afterwards asked why he had taken the whole blame on himself, when his companion was equally in fault, he replied:

"Because I was the oldest, and ought to be punished most; and because," he added, "I looked in L——'s face and I thought he was going to deny it, and say what was not true."

Good Resolutions.

A little girl of six years old was a little while ago called home to God. About a year before her death she had a small writing desk given her. After her death her mother unlocked it, and found her first writing:—

"The minute I wake up in the morning I will thank God."

"I will mind my father and mother always.

"I will try to have my lessons perfect.

"I want to behave like God's child."

Five very precious rules for a little child to make his or her own.

A Frank and Noble Boy.

As I was taking a ride in our pleasant village, in which we have a few plague-spots left, I took in a lad some seven years. As I had occasion to stop close to a rum-shop, I noticed the boy looked surprised, and I said, "Shall we go in and take a little whisky, as we may be cold before we get back?" I shall not soon forget the frankness with which he looked me in the face, and said, "My mother don't allow me to drink rum." Then I said, "Won't you go in there and warm you?" And he as honestly said, "I don't think my mother would allow me to go into such a place."

Now I want to say to all the boys, Never be ashamed to follow the counsel and good advice of a pious mother, for it will be a safeguard to you through life.

And to mothers I would say, Be evermore vigilant to cast a godly influence around the young, for it will keep them in fierce temptation's darkest hours, and save our country and the world much sorrow.—Zion's Herald.

BE PLEASANT.

When little ones worry
Their parents are sorry,
And all who are near them look sad;
But when they are good,
And smile as they should,
How much it is to be cheerful and sing,
Than deserve to be called "a cross little thing."

Children in Japan.

During more than half a year's residence in Japan, I have never seen a quarrel among young or old. I have never seen a blow struck; scarcely an angry face. I have seen the children at their sports, flying their kites on the hills, and no amount of intertangled strings, or kites lodged in the trees, provoked angry words or impatience. I have seen them intent on their games of jackstones and marbles, under the shady gateways of the temples, but have seen no approach to a quarrel among them. They are taught implicit obedience to their parents, but I have never seen one of them chastised. Respect and reverence for the aged is universal. A crying child is a rarity seldom heard or seen. We have nothing to teach them in this respect out of our abundant civilization. I speak from what I know of the little folks of Japan, for more than any other foreigner have I been among them. Of all that Japan holds, there is nothing I like half so well as the happy children. I shall always remember their sloe-black eyes and ruddy, brown faces with pleasure. I have played battledore with the little maidens in the streets, and flown kites with as happy a set of boys as one could wish to see. They have been my guides in my rambles, shown me where all the streams and ponds were, where the flowers lay hid in the thicket, where the berries were ripening on the hills; they have brought me shells from the ocean, and blossoms from the field, presenting them with all the modesty and a less bashful grace than a young American would do. We have hunted the fox holes together, and looked for the green and golden ducks among the hedges. They have laughed at my broken Japanese, and have taught me better; and for a happy, good-natured set of children, I will turn out my little Japanese friends against the world. God bless the boys and girls of Niphon.— Letter from Japan.

The Engineer's Premonitions.

No one who has a large experience of life fails to know of incidents which brings the supernatural world very near, and draw from it apparently impressions and influences of extraordinary power. One can not account for them by any known law. The Home Monthly gives a striking case of this kind:

One of our railroad engineers, some years since, was running an express train of ten well-filled cars. It was in the night, and a very dark night too. His train was behind time, and he was putting the engine to the utmost speed of which it was capable, in order to reach a certain point at a proper hour. He was running on a straight and level track and at this unusual velocity, when a conviction struck him that he must stop. "A something seemed to tell me," he said, "that to go ahead was dangerous, and that I must stop if I would save my life. I looked back at my train, and it was all right. I strained my eyes, and peered it into the darkness, and could see no signal of danger, and there in the day-time I could have seen five miles. I listened to the working of my engine, tried the water, looked at the scales, and all was right. I tried to laugh myself out of what I then considered a childish fear; but, like Banquo's ghost, it would not down at my bidding, but grew stronger in its hold upon me. I thought of the ridicule I would have heaped upon me if I did stop; but it was all of no avail. The conviction—for by this time it had ripened into a conviction—that I must stop grew stronger, and I resolved to stop. I shut off, blew the whistle for brakes accordingly. I came to a dead halt, got off, and went ahead a little without saying any thing to any body what was the matter. I had a lamp in my hand, and had gone about sixty feet, when I saw what convinced me that premonitions are sometimes possible. I dropped the lantern from my nerveless grasp, and sat down on the track utterly unable to stand." He goes on to tell us that there he found that some one had drawn a spike which had long fastened a switch rail, and opened a switch which had always been kept locked, which led on to a track—only about one hundred and fifty feet long—which terminated in a stone quarry! "Here it was wide open, and had I not obeyed my premonitory warning—call it what you will—I should have run into it, and at the end of the track, only about ten rods long, my heavy engine and train, moving at the rate of forty-five miles an hour, would have come into collision with a solid wall of rock eighteen feet high!"

Valuable Hints.

To select nutmegs pick them with a pin. If they are good, the oil will instantly spread around the puncture. When a cask of molasses is bought, draw off a few quarts, else the fermentation produced by moving it will burst the cask. Alum or vinegar is good to set colors of red, green or yellow. Sal soda will bleach very white; one spoonful is enough for a kettle of clothes. Stir Poland starch with a common candle, and it will not stick to the iron, and will be much nicer. Wash your tea-trays with cold suds, polish with a little flour, and rub with a dry cloth. Frozen potatoes make more starch than fresh ones; they also make nice cake. A hot shovel held over varnished furniture will take out white spots. A bit of ghile, dissolved in skim milk and water will restore old crape. Ribbons of any kind should be washed in cold soap-suds, and not rinsed. If your flat-irons are rough, rub them well with fine salt, and it will make them smooth. If you are buying a carpet for durability, you should choose small figures. Scotch snuff in holes where crickets come out will destroy them. Wood ashes and common salt wet with water, will stop the cracks of a stove, and prevent the smoke from escaping. A gallon of strong lye put in a barrel of hard water will make it as soft as rain water.

A CONVENIENT REMEDY.—A young lady, while in the country some years ago, stepped on a rusty nail, which ran through her shoe and foot. The inflammation and pain were, of course, very great, and lock-jaw was apprehended. A friend of the family, however, recommended the application of a beet, taken fresh from the garden and pounded fine, to the wound. It was done, and the effect was very beneficial. Soon the inflammation began to subside, and by keeping on the bruised beet, and changing it for a fresh one as its virtue seemed to become impaired, a speedy cure was effected. Simple, but effectual remedies like this should be known to every one.

Pray without ceasing.—St. Paul.

There must be a Religion for the People.

Concluded from last week.

An hour after I reached home, and a little gentleman, eleven or twelve years old, presented himself, with a round hat, high cravat, cane in his hand,—altogether a fashionable in miniature. He had a graceful bow; laid his hat upon the table; sat down gravely upon the seat placed for him; passed the glove of his right hand into his left; amused himself with striking it carelessly upon his knee, whilst with the other hand, he switched his trouser with his cane. "My little friend," said I; this word appeared to hurt him—it seemed to me that he tried to hold himself more upright, in order that I might better judge of his height—"My friend," I continued, "it seems to me that you are about at an age to be confirmed, and I hope that you will profit by the course of religious instruction that we are going shortly to commence. Is it not so?—you feel all the importance of religion?"

"Yes, sir; the other day at college I wrote a composition upon it. My schoolfellows had chosen it for their subject. Let us see—will you read it?" The boy-man drew from his pocket a roll, opened it, and, with all the emphasis of which his childish voice was capable, read to me the following tirade:—"Since the day when God produced the first man out of the shades of chaos, even to our age of light and civilization—from the people of Greenland to the giants of Patagonia—in all ages and among all people we see men adore a divinity. Some prostrate themselves before the sun, others before the stone; some have worshipped the God of the skies, others the god of infernal regions, and his multiplicity of idols proves to the philosopher, that there must be a religion for the people."—

"Enough, enough," said I—"Stay, my friend, I think as you do, that there must be a religion for the people; and this is why I am about to make you a present of a religious book."

"I accept it very willingly," said he, "and if there are pictures in it, I will give it to my little brother to amuse himself with."

"And yourself, then?"

"Oh, as for myself, I am studying philosophy with friends of mine."

"No doubt, with the essay writers upon political and social economy?"

"Precisely so; we have formed a small committee at college, where we read newspapers, and where we discuss the topics of the day."

"But, Mr. Philosopher, this religious book will be as good for you as for your little brother."

"Sir, I am no longer a child, I am nearly fifteen years old; I must cast off childishness. Why should I not think like my father—like my professors?"

"And what, then, do they think?"

"It is evident what they think, since they recommend religion to us, and never go to mass themselves; they think religion is good for the people."

I was confounded with astonishment; I could have wished to have applied a whip to this boy; but I feared lest he should not come to the preaching that I intended to have at the opening of the chapel, and I contented myself with recommending him to accompany his mother, who would be there.

"Willingly," said he; "I will offer her my arm, and we will go together to hear you."

He departed. I opened the windows, for I was stifled. "Poor religion!" said I, to myself, "to whom can I offer thee? The magistrate sends thee to the banker, he to the tradesman, the tradesman to his wife; his wife to the servant, the servant to the child, and the child to his little brother. Poor religion! everywhere demanded for others, and everywhere refused for one's self; whore, then, wilt thou take refuge? Repulsed, dismissed, and tossed from hand to hand, as the tennis-ball, that each throws to his neighbour, there remains nothing more for thee than to take shelter in that heaven from whence thou hast descended. If men believe themselves too great lords to receive thee, angels, at least, will prostrate themselves before thee, and heaven will adore what earth despises."

But at length the Sunday arrived; the preparations of the chapel not being completed, I wished, at least on that day, to give a simple sermon at my own house, and I only invited the sub-prefect, the banker, the merchant, his wife, their son, and their servant. When all were assembled, I placed a table before me, I read a chapter from the Bible, and I preached a sermon to them, of which I have only preserved the following fragments:—

"Permit me to ask, where is the people to whom you wish that I should carry religion? Everybody thinks it should be the people, and nobody wishes to be of that people. From the height of his throne, the monarch says, the people; and in that he speaks of the whole nation. In the parliament, the deputy and peer of France repeat, the people; and in that they include both the rich banker and the labouring artisan. The magistrate is before the tribunal, the lawyer in his office, the philosopher in his book, all echo, the people, and they point with their finger to one another. Let us descend to the poorer classes, the more ignorant part of the society, and you will still find the master in his primary school, the rural police upon the public road of his village, speaking in you of the people. And, wonderful to say, the rural police no more than the monarch, the schoolmaster no less than the peer of France, never imagine that they themselves make a part of this people; so that, in the minds of all, the people are other men; so that they say, 'There must be a religion for others;' for myself, I can dispense with it.' Well, to you who think thus without daring openly to speak it, I answer plainly, you are miserably proud! What! will you believe that God has given to the world a religion necessary to the monarch that he may be just, to the magistrate that he may be upright, to the servant that he may be faithful; and that you, alone—you have no need of it? Is your morality, then, superior to that of all other men, that you cast away from you the support you deem needful for them? Do you possess an intelligence which so far surpasses that of the whole of the human race, that you are able to divine those religious truths which it is necessary to reveal to the rest of the world? 'God has spoken to every body,' you say, 'but as to myself, I can close my ears—religion is good for the people. Wise men, philosophers, all have felt their want of this revelation, but I can do without it,—religion is good for the people.' Over every part of the surface of the globe, kings and nations bow before the Divinity, but I can remain upright—religion is good for the people. Let the leading-strings of faith be given to children,—for myself, I can walk alone, by the torch of my own reason, and by the power of my conscience.'

"And if the folly of such language be not yet sufficiently evident to you, place yourselves before the tribunal of God, at the last judgment; and whilst all people shall be prostrated, trembling at his feet, have courage to say to him, 'Behold me; here I am, Lord, with my conscience, and my reason. Thou hast given thy revelation to the earth — Jesus Christ to the world—thy Holy Spirit to men: but revelation, Jesus Christ, the Holy Spirit, all that was good for the people,—as to myself, I have been able to do without it. Behold me, judge me, reward me, as I deserve: for I declare before heaven and earth, that I have been, without the help of religion, an upright, intelligent, virtuous man.' Again, I repeat to you, that if making a profession of believing in a God and in a future world, you still throw back to the people the religion you do not want for yourself, I repeat you are miserably proud creatures.

"But perhaps I am mistaken; perhaps you do not intend to place yourself above a religion which God has given to men; and, perhaps, you put away revelation from you, because in your eyes it is only a human invention, a political expedient, a happy lie that we must keep up in order to maintain order in society, obedience amongst people, and good manners in families; and thus, without accepting her yoke for yourself, you find it desirable to impose it upon others. In this case, I confess, you are no longer proud, you are miserable hypocrites. What! do you believe religion to be a lie, and can you wish that others should take it for a truth? Can you think it right to promise a heaven to them, when you know that there they will find nothing? Can you wish, by false hopes, to impose upon men sacrifices, which will never receive any recompense? You will avail yourself of their weakness of mind, their superstition, to develop in them feelings of justice and devotion, and you will give them nothing in return! In a word, you desire that we should preach from the pulpit, that we should publish in books, that we should announce to all, a false religion that you cast away from yourself?

"What is it, then, if not hypocrisy—the grossest hypocrisy? You wish us to preach virtue to your wives, in the name of the gospel; but to you, then, wish to owe their faithfulness and affection to an imposture?

"You wish us to teach your children obedience, in the name of Jesus Christ; but is it, then, from an unworthy fiction you desire that they should show respect and gratitude to you? You, who profess to love your wife, your children, will you conduct them to ruin by pushing them into an abyss, at which you are frightened yourself? To conceal such an important truth from beings who have as great an interest as you in knowing it, is to deceive them shamefully; it is depriving them of a liberty of action in this world that you reserve for yourselves. For you, in appearance, to submit to an outward worship, to inefficacious ceremonies, to pronounce before them certain words of respect for the Bible, is to lie to them; it is to abuse their weakness, to despoil them of their liberty for your profit; it is, in one word, the blackest hypocrisy. Or, again, do you say, as an excuse, that by religion you hope to do good to people, not in another life, but in this world, and that you consider this to be the most efficacious means of accomplishing this good end? If so, this is your thought:—Let us place error and falsehood for principle, and we shall have as a consequence truth and virtue. But does not your spirit revolt at the absurdity of this reasoning? When have we seen good result from error? In what arts, in what science, has a false principle ever conducted to true knowledge? How can an error, so fatal in morals, policy, commerce, science, be good in religion? I will suppose you to be an absolute monarch over a vast kingdom: every one is ready to obey a signal from your hand; still you only wish to employ your power for the good of your subjects. In ascending the throne, you gather around you the magistrate, the warrior, the philosopher, and the minister of religion—you say to all, 'I desire the happiness of my people. You, with whom is deposited the sword of justice, seek truth; you, who are the defenders of your country, be faithful to your king; you, who are philosophers, seek truth in science, in order that it may be applied for the welfare of the nation; but you, the minister of the God of truth, preach a lie to the people, as the way to render them happy.'

"Such a discourse offends you; still it is what you ought to say, to be consistent with yourselves. Confess, then, how foolish it is to try to make a bad tree bear good fruit, and to expect order, peace, virtue, and good manners, from religion, if that religion is a lie,

"But, if in your wisdom you have discovered that religion is a good thing to govern with; and if this discovery has also been made by all the most reflective men of our age, we may well believe that your discovery is a truth, and that, in fact, religious faith will be the best means of promoting the happiness of the human race.

"But has not your Creator been sufficiently intelligent to discover for himself what you men, in your wisdom, have discovered? and if religion be such a perfect means for conducting man to happiness, has not God thought, before you, of giving it to the world?

"If not, is not the creature who invented religion, wiser than the Creator, who has forgotten it? But if we must trace the first thought of establishing religion to God, and not to man, is this religion, then, a truth? And here is the immense difference between your wisdom and the wisdom of the Creator. In your weakness you would forge a lying religion, and, He in his omnipotence, gives a religion which is true; if you have designed yours for the people, that is to say, for fools, God gives his to all men, that is to say, to you—you, whoever you may be. And I conclude, therefore, in your own principles, without doubt there must be a religion; not any sort of religion, but a true religion—a religion not for the people, but a religion for all, for you and me primarily. This religion, which is true, and suited for all, is the Christian religion,—not as men have disguised it, who wished to impose upon others, but as Jesus Christ himself gave it to the whole world, such as we find it in the Bible; and it is to that book I refer you, that you may learn to know it."

A tubful of soapsuds, farmers should remember, is worth as much as a wheelbarrow of good manure. Every bucket of soapsuds should be thrown where it will not be lost. The garden is a good and convenient place in which to dispose of it; but the roots of grapevines, figs, young trees, or anything of the sort, will do as well.—Exchange.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

WEEKLY REVIEW.

Rainy weather (says the Price Current of Wednesday) has materially interrupted outdoor operations since our last issue. The demand, moreover, in most branches of trade, has been of a retail character, and the general movement has been restricted accordingly. Our leading staple, in particular, has been nearly at a standstill; the business of the past three days having been confined to a smaller amount than for any corresponding period of the season.

COTTON—We noticed in our last report that after a moderate demand on Friday the market closed dull and drooping at 27 to 29c. for Ordinary, 31 to 32c. for Good Ordinary, 34 to 36c. for Low Middling, and 38 to 39c. for Middling. On Saturday the expectation of later foreign news brought the movement nearly to a standstill, the day's business reaching barely 200 bales, at still easier prices. There was no improvement on Monday, when a heavy rain-storm suspended outdoor operations during the morning, and after it cleared up only two or three buyers came forward, whose purchases were confined to a little over 200 bales. This business was of too limited extent to serve us a basis for quotations, but prices ruled in favor of buyers; and after it was known later advices had been received from Liverpool, reporting a further decline, sales could not have been effected unless at a material reduction. Yesterday the movement was on a still more limited scale, embracing less than 100 bales. This makes an aggregate for the past three days of only 500 bales, mostly for the North.

The receipts proper for the four days ending on last evening comprise 3726 bales, against 2219 during the corresponding period last week, showing an increase of 1507 bales.

In the unsettled state of the market we omit all quotations, but refer to the above as the ruling rates on last Friday evening, since which the general tendency has been in favor of buyers.

TOBACCO—Supplies are coming in quite freely, and the stock, which is now fair and ample, is accumulating. The assortment is good, and is drawing the attention of foreign buyers to this market, several having arrived here recently. There has been again some inquiry for export and for the city trade, but only small sales were made at prices ruling fully up to the following quotations: Low Refused, Light, 4 to —; Good do., 6 to 6¼; Common Leaf, 9 to 10; Fair, 12 to 14; Good, 15 to 16; Fine, 18 to 19; Choice Selections, 21 to 22. Heavy—. to 5; Good do., 7 to 8; Common Leaf, 10 to 12; Fair, 14 to 17; Good, 17 to 18; Fine, 19 to 20; Choice Selections, 23 to 24—in currency.

SUGAR—There is very little Louisiana but an ample stock of Cuba Sugar on hand. The market continues very dull, however, and there is only a retail or jobbing trade, doing at 12 to 13c for Common to Fair Louisiana, 14½ to 14¾c for Fully Fair, 15 to 15½c for Prime, 15¾c for Yellow Clarified and 16½c for White. There was some demand yesterday, and 10 hhds Fair Louisiana sold at 13¾c, and 64 hhds at 15½c for Yellow Clarified and 16c for White.

MOLASSES—The market is bare of Louisiana, but is well supplied with Cuba Molasses. There is very little or no demand, however, for either, and in the total absence of sales of any importance we have to omit all quotations. The last sale was a lot of Strictly Choice Porto Rico at 55½c. per gallon. Cuba Molasses is retailing at 48 to 50c. per gallon, according to quality.

FLOUR—In light supply and fair demand, and prices are steady and firm. The sales on Saturday and Monday were confined to 3000 bbls, in small lots, at $9 to $9 25 for Low Superfine, $9 50 for Superfine, $10 to $10 50 for Low Extra, $11 25 to $12 50 for Good do., $12 75 to $13 for Choice Extra, and $14 50 to $15 per bbl for very Choice Extra. Yesterday about 2500 bbls were sold, in lots, at similar prices.

PORK—The market has been quiet but very steady and firm. The stock on hand is small, but there has not been much demand for round lots. On Saturday 100 bbls Prime Mess sold at $28 50, and 250 Mess at $34 per bbl. Yesterday 115 bbls Mess sold at $34, and 36 at $34 50 per bbl. Mess is retailing freely at $31 25 to $35 50 per bbl.

BACON—The supplies are small and insufficient for the demand, which is very active, and prices, principally of Shoulders and Sides, have still further advanced 1 to 2c per lb. Several hundred casks were sold since our last review at 15½ to 16 for Shoulders, 18½ to 19c for Ribbed Sides, 20 to 20½c for Clear Sides, and 26c for Sugar-cured Hams. Shoulders are retailing at 16c; Ribbed Sides at 20c, Clear Ribbed Sides at 20½c, and Clear Sides at 21c.

GREEN MEAT—There is very little on hand. It is retailing at 15c per lb for Shoulders and 16c for Sides.

LARD—Continues scarce and in request, but owing to insufficient supplies the movement is only in a small or jobbing way at 24c per pound in tierces and 25c in kegs. On Saturday 20 tcs Prime sold at 24c and 100 kegs at 25c. Yesterday 24½c per lb was refused for 1200 kegs.

BUTTER AND CHEESE—The supply of Butter is ample for the demand, and prices remain the same as previously. Choice Northern is selling at at 45 to 50c and Choice Western at 30 to 35c per lb. Common Butter is dull at 20 to 25c per lb. Cheese is in good supply but dull at 15 to 20c for Western and 16 to 20c Northern, and English Dairy at 25 to 27c per lb.

CORN MEAL—There were sales yesterday of 50 bbls choice Kiln-dried Corn Meal at $5 75 per bbl.

CORN—Has been in good supply and fair demand, at about previous prices. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 13,000 sacks, at 80 to 85c for Mixed, 85c for Yellow, and 90 to 95c per bushel for White, the outside prices ruling on Monday. There were sales by auction of 5000 sacks, inferior at 65c, and 500 White, damaged, at 86½c per bushel. Yesterday the demand was good, and White being scarce, prices advanced about 8c per bushel for that description, while those for Mixed and Yellow remained about the same. The sale embraced 9000 sacks at 80 to 84c for Mixed, 87½c for Yellow, 90 to 94c for White Mixed, and $1 for White.

OATS—Are in fair supply but dull at previous prices. About 1500 sacks were sold on Saturday and Monday at 58c per bushel. Yesterday some 2000 sacks were sold at 53 to 54c.

MALT—Is in good supply but dull. Canada is retailing at $1 75 and Western at $1 50 per bushel. Round lots of Western cannot be quoted better than $1 25 per bushel.

BRAN—Has continued dull, and previous figures have been hardly sustained. About 1000 sacks were sold on Saturday and Monday at $1 25 per 100 lbs. Yesterday 400 sacks sold at $1 10 and 600 at $1 15 per 100 lbs.

HAY—Is in good supply but slow of sale. On Saturday 1010 bales Prime Western sold at $22 and 900 at $22 50 per ton. Yesterday we did not hear of a sale.

INDIA BAGGING—The stock is small and there have been no important movements since the sale of a lot of 50 bales, on the landing, at 30c per yard. Dealers are supplying the demand for the country at 29c in rolls and 31c in bales.

BALE ROPE—We have not any round sales to report except 850 coils yesterday at 18c and 50 at 18¼c per lb, the latter showing an advance of ¼c per lb. Dealers are obtaining 18c per lb. Iron Cotton Ties are selling at 12c per lb.

COFFEE—There has been a fair demand for the country, which dealers have continued to supply at 25½ to 29c per lb, currency, for Ordinary to Prime Rio.

GUNNY BAGS—The stock on hand is small. There was a good demand, and prices have advanced ¼c. There were sales yesterday of 200 bales at 25c a piece. Holders asked subsequently 26c.

STAR CANDLES—There is a fair jobbing business doing at 20c per lb for 12 oz., 23c for 14 oz. and 25c per lb for 16 oz. Yesterday there were sales of 1000 boxes, assorted sizes, at an advance on previous prices. The demand is active and speculative.

WOOL—There is nothing doing and we quote nominally 15, to 25c for unwashed and 21c per lb for washed. There is a good stock on hand.

NAVAL STORES.—There have been sales of Common and No. 2 Rosin at $3, No. 1 at $6 50, Virgin dip $10; Pitch $3; Tar $2 50 per bbl; Spirits Turpentine 92½ to 95c per gallon.

SALT—There have not been any cargo sales. The last were at $1 55 for Coarse and $1 60 per sack for Fine. There is a fair demand for the interior, which dealers are supplying at $1 80 to $1 85 per sack for Liverpool Coarse and $1 90 to $2 for fine, in store.

HIDES—Have continued in demand and have sold readily at 7½ to 8c for Green Hides, 8 to 9c for Kip Skins, and 10 to 11c per lb for Dry Hides.

ESCULENTS.—New Potatoes are selling at $4 to $4 25 per bbl. New Onions $2 50 to $3 25 per bbl.

POULTRY AND EGGS.—Chickens sell on the landing at $8 to $8 50, Geese at $10, and Turkeys at $35 per dozen. Western eggs have been selling at $18 to $20 per bbl.

☞ It should be understood that the above quotations generally represent the wholesale prices. In filling small orders higher rates have to be paid.

Jacob's Well.

Rev. Norman Mc'Leod gives, in "Good Words," the following description of Jacob's well and its locality:

There has never been a doubt entertained by the most skeptical or critical traveler regarding the authenticity of this well. Beyond all question, it is the one at which our Saviour rested as he journeyed along the route which travelers generally follow from Jerusalem to Galilee. Every feature of the landscape starts into life as we read the narrative of his memorable conversation with the woman of Samaria; the plain of corn-fields which were then, as now, whitening to the harvest; the mountain rising above, on which the Samaritan temple was built; the neighboring town of Shechem; the Samaritans worshipping, as they still do, towards "this mountain," and there only; all are evidence of its truth, apart from the common and unbroken tradition.

The well is not what we understand by that name. It is not a spring of water bubbling up from the earth, nor is it reached by an excavation. It is a shaft cut in the living rock, about nine feet in diameter, and now upward of seventy feet deep. As an immense quantity of rubbish has fallen into it, the original depth must have been much greater, perhaps twice what it is now. It was therefore intended by its first engineer as a reservoir, rather than as a means of reaching a spring. Then again, if any wall, as some suppose, once surrounded its mouth, on which the traveler could rest, it is now gone. The mouth is funnel shaped, and its sides are formed by the rubbish of old buildings, a church having once been erected over it. But we can descend this funnel, and enter a cave, as it were, a few feet below the surface, which is the remains of a small dome that once covered the mouth. Descending a few feet, we perceive in the floor an aperture, partly covered by a flat stone, and leaving sufficient space through which we can look into darkness. We sent a plumb-line down into the water, with which the well seemed to be abundantly supplied at the time of our visit.

Many have been puzzled to account for Jacob's having dug such a well here, when the whole valley of Shechem, only a quarter of an hour's walk off, is more musical with streams than any other in Palestine. But some one dug the well, and who more likely than Jacob, not only to have on his own property what in his time was more valuable than a private coal-mine would be to us, but also for the moral purpose of keeping his family and dependents as separate as possible from the depraved Shechemites? This well is indeed a holy spot. One is glad that the contending ecclesiastical parties in the land have built their churches on places which have little historical value, and that a merciful Providence has preserved untouched and open to the eye of heaven such spots as that on the Mount of Olives, "over against the Temple," and, above all, Jacob's well. It is now said, however, that the Greek Church have purchased it as the site of a church, for seventy thousand piasters. Universal Christendom, to which it belongs, should protest against such "pious" profanation.

On Pleasing God by Our Temper.

Nothing goes more against the grain of human nature, than the obligation to love our enemies, and to return good for evil. It is one of the hardest struggles in the whole work and warfare of a Christian. We ought to be very thankful that God condescends to set a great price upon a meek spirit; and thus commends, as well as commands the forgiveness of injuries; for we could not forgive from the heart, nor love our enemies with the heart, if the approbation as well as the authority of God were not pledged in connection with the duty.

We can see, as well as others, that it would be to our interest to overlook many injuries, to pocket many affronts, and to forget many slights; but it must be done with the express and supreme purpose of pleasing God. The God of our salvation deserves a cheerful submission to His will in this matter. Whatever others deserve, His claims upon our spirit are indisputable, and let us never forget the influence of a meek and quiet spirit upon communion with God at the mercy-seat. We need it as much there, as Aaron did his Breastplate, when he had to inquire before the Lord, by Urim and Thummim. The answer seems to have been given, by light from the glory between the cherubim, falling upon the engraven gems which emblazoned his breastplate, and flashing those letters which would express "the mind of the spirit." How carefully, therefore, Aaron would guard these tribunal gems from all dust and derangement, that they might always receive fully, and reflect fairly, the holy light from the Shekinah. The graces of the Holy Spirit, are the gems of our breastplate. Let them, therefore, be kept bright and unbroken, that thus "the light of God's countenance" may be neither intercepted nor distorted by any unhallowed or unmovable temper.—R. Phillip.

A Remarkable Prediction.

The London Times of April 19th has some gloomy views of the future that is coming to the British empire:

We ought in this unparalleled half-century to have reduced our great war debt to something less than £25,000,000 a year, not much less than £1 a head on the whole people of these Isles. It cannot be said that experience encourages us in this recklessness, for we have entered on war without counting the cost, to our very great loss; and, what some feel more, we have counted the cost, and not gone to war. In all human probability we shall have at least one great war before the close of the century; and that war, when it comes, will have to be fought, as the Federals in America fought, more with money than men. But we must look beyond the century. In three generations—that is in the days of our children—we are told that all the coal of this island that lies within 4000 feet of the surface will be exhausted, if we go on increasing our consumption at the present rate. Coal is everything to us. Without coal, our factories will become idle, our foundries and work-shops be still as the grave; the locomotive will rust in the shed, and the rail be buried in weeds. Our streets will be dark, our houses uninhabitable. Our rivers will forget the paddle-wheel, and we shall again be separated by days from France, by months from the United States. The post will lengthen its periods and protract its dates. A thousand special arts and manufactories, one by one, then in a crowd, will fly the empty soil, as boon companions are said to disappear when the cask is dry. We shall miss our grand dependencies, as a man misses his companion, his fortune, or a limb, at every turn reminded of the irreparable loss. Wise England will then be the silly virgin without oil in her lamp. We shall be surrounded and overwhelmed by the unprofitable lumber of buildings and machinery that we cannot use, and even cities we cannot occupy. For who will care to live in Manchester? Who will be able to live in the Metropolis? It is not so difficult to imagine the state we shall return to, for it takes only a middle-aged man to remember it. They would be sorry to be called old who can remember large towns lighted with oil lamps, the first steam vessel timidly creeping round our shores or up our rivers, and a steam engine on a "train-way" a thing rumored but hardly credited. But the process of unlearning will be slow, and neither easy nor pleasant. To be sure, as coal becomes scarce and dearer, we shall learn economy. We shall warm our houses more scientifically, and improve our machinery. But, meanwhile, our descendants will witness another process equally exhaustive. The population will follow coal wherever it is to be found, whether on foreign or on colonial soil. Our manufactories will be beaten by those who then have this advantage over us, and the working classes will accept the invitation of the master that bids the highest. That is what they must do, for it is the law of existence. It is not easy, or at all possible, to forecast any point at which the various conflicting causes may fix the future of English labor, but we may as well expect a large population in Salisbury Plain as a Manchester, a Liverpool, a Sheffield or a Birmingham, without coal—and cheap coal, too.

By Hook or by Crook.

The destruction caused by the fire of London, A. D. 1666, during which some 13,200 houses, etc., were burnt down, in very many cases obliterated all the boundary marks requisite to determine the extent of land, and even the very sites occupied by buildings, previous to this terrible visitation. When the rubbish was removed, and the land cleared, the disputes and entangled claims of those whose houses had been destroyed, both as to the position and extent of their property, promised not only interminable occupation to the courts of law, but made the far more serious evil of delaying the rebuilding of the city, until these disputes were settled, inevitable. Impelled by the necessity of coming to a more speedy settlement of their respective claims than could be hoped for from legal process, it was determined that the claims and interests of all persons concerned should be referred to the judgment and decision of two of the most experienced land-surveyors of that day—men who had been thoroughly acquainted with London previously to the fire; and, in order to escape from the numerous and vast evils which mere delay must occasion, that the decision of these two arbitrators should be final and binding. The surveyors appointed to determine the rights of the various claimants were Mr. Hook and Mr. Crook, who by the justice of their decisions gave general satisfaction to the interested parties, and by their speedy determination of the different claims, permitted the rebuilding of the city to proceed without the least delay. Hence arose the saying above quoted, usually applied to the extrication of persons or things from a difficulty.

The above anecdote was told the other evening by an old citizen, upwards of eighty, by no means of an imaginative temperament.—Notes and Queries.

THERE'S ROOM ENOUGH IN PARADISE.

The following beautiful spiritual song was composed by the famous Judge Longstreet. It is said that, being present at a camp-meeting, he heard the touching and plaintive air to which these words are set sung to some unmeaning doggerel, as is often the case in negro minstrelsy. As he rode home, the tune ringing in his ears, the beautiful hymn as below crystalized, and he gave it to the world:

Sweet bards may chant melodious lays,
And fame may tell the story!
I envy not their fading praise:
I hope to sing in glory!
O glory! O glory!
There's room enough in Paradise;
For all a home in glory.

Let bannered hosts in mortal strife,
And broidered vestments gory,
Seared laurels bay with ebbing life;
I seek a crown of Glory!
O glory! O glory! etc.

For heaps of gold let others toil,
From blooming years to hoary;
Nor rust corrupt, nor thieves can spoil
My treasured home in glory!
O glory! O glory! etc.

No city have I here, nor home,
Where all is transitory;
But though o'er earth I homeless roam,
I have a home in glory!
O glory! O glory! etc.

When near the cross the Saviour stood,
He said, "I go before ye
A mansion to prepare," that you
May dwell with me in glory!
O glory! O glory! etc.

The conflict of Gethsemane
In bloody sweat why bore he?
He drank that bitter cup that we Might have a home in glory!
O glory! O glory! etc.

The anpurpled robe of mocking scorn,
And crowns of thorns, why wore he?
Sin wove that robe, sin grew that thorn,
Yet we may share his glory!
O glory! O glory! etc.

When on the cross, his gushing blood
Why did on Calvary pour he?
That grace might wash me in that flood,
And make me meet for glory!
O glory! O glory! etc.

May love refine my heart from dross,
By grace to shout the story;
Then in that robe, that crown, that cross,
I will forever glory!
O glory! O glory!
There's room for all in Paradise,
For all a home in glory.

Eastern Handwriting.

Mr. Hallock, the printer of the Syrian mission of the American Board, says:

The science or art of handwriting among the semi-barbarous Turks and Persians is carried to a most surprising extent, both in the effort expended and the success which follows. It is my opinion that in the whole wide range of labor, and beauty and taste, practiced in the fine arts, there is not one branch which equals the exquisite symmetry and perfection of the Turkish and Persian manuscript.

Some idea of the labor expended on this art, and the high estimation in which it is held, may be gained from the fact that a long life is cheerfully spent on one volume. I saw one exceedingly beautiful volume, not larger than one-fourth of the New Testament, which occupied seventy years in copying.

The complete success secured by the united efforts of Dr. Smith and myself in this illustration of the Arabic type is well illustrated in the fact that an old, experienced Turkish writing-master, on seeing the first few lines which were printed from the new type, remarked that the man who wrote that had need only to spend a few years under his instruction to make him a master penman.

To the would-be author:

If thou wouldst fain be thought a sage,
Think a volume, write a page;
Then from every page of thine,
Publish but a single line.

To Cure a Felon.—As soon as the parts begin to swell, wrap the part affected with a cloth thoroughly saturated with the tincture of lobelia, and the felon is dead. An old physician says he has known it to cure in scores of cases, and it never fails if applied in season.

The Great Mormon Tabernacle.

The Salt Lake (Utah) Telegraph has a detailed account of the Mormon's religious edifice now going up in that city. The architect is Mr. Henry Grow.:

The building is in the form of an ellipse, with an extreme length of 250 feet and width of 150. Extreme height of roof, 78 feet; height of ceiling, 68 feet. The immense roof-frame rests upon 42 cut stone piers, about 12 feet apart and 20 feet in height, which gives 48 feet of spring to the arch. The 44 bents or principal rafters forming the arch are composed of six thicknesses 2½-inch plank, framed like lattice work, strongly pinned and bolted, and tied by 15 horizontal cross-timbers on the outside, upon which the small rafters for the sheathing will be laid, and 15 similar cross-timbers inside, to which the ceiling joists will be stayed. The 13 half bents resting upon the 13 piers in curve at each end join diagonally upon the apex of the arch of the two outside parallel bents.

The island will be in the west end—the floor be level for a distance of 60 or 70 feet in front of the stand, thence gradually rising to the east end, where the seats will be eight feet above the level. It is estimated that the house will seat about 10,000 persons. For freedom of ingress and egress, a very material consideration where large audiences are concerned—ample provision has been made in the folding door appointments of the entire space between the same piers in the line on ther side. A cornice eight feet deep will surmount the stone work.

In the majestic, towering, self-supporting roof of this building, there will be consumed nearly 10000 feet of lumber. When finished, it will present the appearance of a nondescript half globe, with sides slightly compressed, and, though of the kin rather than grotesque order of architecture, from its vast proportions and striking originality of design, will make its impression upon the beholder, and stand as an imperishable monument of magnificent zeal and unparalleled unity on the part of an infant, derided people, who are disposed to honor the credential of Heaven and bow to its regal supremacy.

Arabian Laughing Plant.

In Palgrave's "Central and Eastern Arabia," some particulars are given in regard to a curious narcotic plant. The seeds, in which the active principle seems chiefly to reside, when boiled and administered in a small dose, produce effects much like those ascribed to Sir Humphrey Davy's laughing gas; the patient dances, sings, and performs a thousand extravaganzas, till, after an hour of great excitement to himself, a amusement to bystanders, he falls asleep, and on awaking has lost all memory of what he did or said while under influence of the drug.

To put a pinch of this powder into the coffee of some unsuspecting individual is not an uncommon joke, nor it is said that it is ever followed by serious consequences, though an over quantity might perhaps be dangerous. The author tried it on two individuals, but in proportions, if not absolutely homœopathic, still sufficiently minute to keep on the safe side, and witnessed its operations, which were enough, but very harmless. The plant that bears these berries hardly attains in Kasseem the height of six inches above the ground, but in Oman were seen bushes ten or four feet in height, and wide spreading.

The stems are woody, and of a yellow tinge when barked; that of is of a dark green color, and unnated, with about twenty leaflets on either side; the stalks are smooth and shining; the flowers are yellow in tufts; the anthers numerous; the fruit is a capsule, stuffed with greenish padding, in which lie imbedded two or three black seeds, about the size and shape much like French beans, their taste sweetish, but with the unseen influence of a bright heavy and almost sickly.

Meerschaum Pipes.

Meerschaum (English—foam of the sea,) is so called on account of its remarkable lightness and pure white color in the raw state. It is a superior species of white clay, chiefly consisting of silicate of magnesia, and is dug mostly in the peninsula of Natoli, Asia Minor. It is sent to market in irregular blocks of different sizes, the latter fixing the price, which is much higher in proportion for large lumps than for small ones. The Turkish Government owns the mines and stipulates the quotations according to the demand, which generally exceeds the supply. The last reports from Constantinople, the principal market for crude meerschaum, say that prices advanced 35 per cent. lately.

The method of manufacturing pipes is very simple: the lumps are cut into shape with a knife, after having been lightly wetted, then the bowls must be very carefully rubbed to obtain a clear, smooth surface, and afterward boiled either in pure wax, or wax, oil and fats, the latter effecting a yellow hue and facilitating the coloring.

Imitation meerschaum is invariably made of the parings of the genuine, and nothing else. Numerous other experiments, such as the application of magnesia, etc., have proved total failures, and consequently, there is no probability of meerschaum being manufactured, on a large scale, of magnesia in New York, as your article states. I am the only manufacturer, to some extent, of meerschaum pipes, made of the imported raw material, in the United States.—Scientific American.

Forward!

Blutcher, the great Prussian General, is said to have won many a hard-contested battle-field through the inspiring influence of this motto. In his councils of war and on the battle-field, "Forward!" was his watchword, and he suited the action to the word. The promptness and energy with which he planned and executed his engagements gave him the nickname of "Marshal Forward."

Pulaski, the brave Pole, who espoused the American cause in its infancy, and gave his life in its defence, and to whom, as well as to Koscinsko, the American people will ever owe a debt of gratitude, in one or more instances turned the fortunes of war in his favor by rallying his men with the war-cry of "Forwarts, brnderu, forwarts!" Often was the failing strength of the American soldier rallied and revived, and his weary arm nerved with new vigor, by the inspiring battle-cry of this brave officer, as in the thickest of the fight, and above the din of battle, was heard, in broken English, "Forwarts, brnderu, forwarts!"

So with the young, whatever their capacity and calling, let their watchword be Forward! It will give new life and energy to the doubting heart in time of despondency and trial, and, united with proper energy and zeal, over every opposition give it the victory.

To the student journeying step by step up the rugged hill of science: Your success lies in your own efforts to do what you undertake. I will succeed, has accomplished much. No great undertaking was ever carried through without it. The road to eminence may seem hard to travel; roll the boulders aside, clear the track of trees, bridge the streams, and the way is clear. "With a stout heart, and a will to do and dare, there is no such word as fail."—Clark's School Visitor.

Let the Children Laugh.

Don't be afraid of a little fun at home, good people. Don't shut up your house lest the sun should fade your carpets, or your heart lest a hearty laugh shake down some of the musty old cobwebs there. If you want to ruin your sons, let them think that all mirth and social enjoyments must be left on the threshhold without, when they come home at night. When once a home is regarded as only a place to eat, drink, and sleep in, the work begins that ends in gambling-houses and reckless dissipation. Young people must have fun and relaxation somewhere; if they do not find it at their own hearthstones it will be sought at other and perhaps less profitable places. Therefore let the fire burn brightly at night, and make the homestead delightful with all those little arts that parents so perfectly understand. Don't repress the buoyant spirits of your children; half an hour of merriment round the lamp and firelight of a home, blots out the remembrance of many a care and annoyance during the day, and the best safeguard they can take with them into the world is a peculiar opiate flavor; the sunlight of domestic fireside.

The Sailor's Bible.—The following inscript from the fly-leaf of a brave sailor's Bible tells a simple tale of the dangers of a seaman's life, and the source of his confidence in the hour of his greatest trials, whether battling with the elements or with his country's foes:

This Bible was presented to me by Mr. [illegible]kes, at the town of Hertford, January 1781, as a reward for my punctual attendance at Sunday-school and good behavior when there; and after being my companion for three years, forty-one of which I spent in the sea service, during which time I was in forty-five engagements, received thirteen wounds, three times shipwrecked, burnt out, twice capsized in a pe[illegible] and had fevers of different sorts five times, this Bible was my consolation, and was newly bound for me by James Bishop, of Edinburgh, on the 26th of October, 1834, the day I completed the sixtieth year of my age—as witness my hand."

CONFEDERATE NAVY.

CAPTURES MADE BY IT DURING THE WAR.

A complete statement of the vessels captured by the Confederate Navy, from the outbreak of the war in 1861 to the surrender of the Shenandoah to the British Government, November 6, 1865, has been prepared with much care for the annual report of the proceedings of the New York Chamber of Commerce by Mr. George Wilson, acting Secretary. The records of Mr. Upton, Secretary of the Shipmasters' Association, have been used for this purpose, and other information has been obtained. The captured property was of the value of $25,500,000, of which $20,000,000 were destroyed.

The following is a recapitulation, showing the number of vessels captured, their estimated value, the number bonded, released and recaptured, and the number actually destroyed:

Why There is No Rain in Peru.—In Peru, South America, rain is unknown. The coast of Peru is within the regions of perpetual southeast tradewinds, and though the Pernvian shores are on the very verge of the South Sea boiler, yet it never rains there. The reason is plain. The southeast tradewinds in the Atlantic ocean first strike the water on the coast of Africa. Traveling to the northwest, they blow obliquely across the ocean until they reach the coast of Brazil. By this time they are heavily laden with vapor, which they continue to bear along across the continent, depositing it as they go, and supplying with it the sources of the Rio de la Plata and the southern tributaries of the Amazon. Finally they reach the snow-capped Andes, and here is wrung from them the last moisture that a very low temperature can extract. Reaching the summit of that range, they tumble down as cool and dry winds on the Pacific slopes beyond. Meeting no evaporating surface, and no temperature colder than that to which they were subject on the mountain tops, they reach the ocean before they become charged with fresh vapor, and before, therefore, they have any which the Peruvian climate can extract. Thus we see how the Andes become the reservoir from which are supplied the rivers of Chili and Peru.

A soft answer turneth away wrath.

Opium.—According to M. Chevallier, the use of opium in England is increasing enormously, and some temperance societies are accused of replacing brandy and gin by it. If this accusation be true, the lamentable consequences may be easily anticipated. The quantity now used in the United Kingdom is certainly enormous. In 1845 the consumption was 38,329 pounds; in 1863 it was 144,213 pounds. The contagion has spread to the new world, and its increased consumption everywhere affords a just reason for alarm.

Bird Love.—An instance is given by Lord Kame of an affectionate canary, who, while singing a love-song to its mate, sitting upon the eggs in her nest, became so delirious with joy that flattering its wings and hovering near her with other manifestation of great emotion, it suddenly fell dead in the bottom of the cage. Upon this the mother-expectant left her nest, gazed mournfully upon her deceased lord, and from that time rejecting all food, soon expired by his side.

Mr. Bright, a working jeweller of Leamington, has perfected a novel application of electro-magnetism as a motive power for clock work, which promises to bring modern timepieces to a state of absolute perfection. By the new arrangement the pendulum, the bob or ball of which consists of an electro-magnetic coil, is made to oscilate by means of a feeble current of electricity, this beating true seconds with a train of three wheels only. A number of clocks, in different parts of a house, or even in different houses, can be connected together by a single wire, and the whole number will indicate the same time to a second.

Children hunger perpetually for new ideas, and the most pleasant way of reception is by the voice and ear, not the eye and printed page. The first mode is natural, the other artificial. Who would not rather listen than read? We frequently pass by in the papers a full report of a lecture, and then go and pay our money to hear the self-same words uttered. An audience will listen closely from beginning to end of an address which not one in twenty of those present would read with the same attention. This is true of children. They will learn with pleasure at the hands of parents what they deem it drudgery to learn in books; and even if they had the misfortune to be deprived of the educational advantages which they desire, they cannot fail to grow up intelligent, if they enjoy in childhood and youth the privilege of listening daily to the conversation of intelligent people. Let the parents talk much, and talk well, at home. A father who is habitually silent in his own house, may be, in some respects, a wise man, but he is not wise in his silence. We sometimes see parents who are the life of every company which they enter, dull, silent and uninteresting at home among their children. If they had not mental activity and mental stores for both, let them first provide for their own household. It is better to instruct children and make them happy at home, than to charm strangers or amuse friends. A silent house is a dull place for young people, a place from which they will escape if they can. They will talk or think of being "shut up there," and the youth who does not love home is in danger. Make home, then, a cheerful and pleasant spot. Father, mother, talk your best at home.

The annual product of the pearl fisheries is assumed to be as follows: Out-turn of the Bahrein pearl divers, twenty lacs of rupees, or £200,000; out-turn of the divers from the Arab littoral of the Persian Gulf other than Bahrein, twenty lacs of rupees, or £200,000; total £400,000. The great bulk of the best pearls is sent to the Bombay market, where, during the late share mania, fancy prices were given for good pearls. A large number of pearls are sent towards Bagdad. As a rule, the Bombay market prefers the pearl of yellowish hue and perfect sphericity, while the Bagdad market prefers the white pearl. The small seed pearls go principally to Bagdad also.

Frequent and fierce is the devil in his attacks on all sides besieging our salvation. We therefore must watch and be sober, and everywhere fortify ourselves against his assaults; for if he but gain some slight vantage ground he goes on to make for himself a broad passage, and by degrees introduce all all his forces.—Chrysostom.

There is a burden of care in getting riches, fear in keeping them, temptation in using them, guilt in abusing them, sorrow in losing them, and a burden of account at last to be given up concerning them.

NEW ORLEANS:
SATURDAY, - - - JUNE 16, 1866.

TO ADVERTISERS.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has always been well known in this community as the very best advertising medium by which the business men of the city could bring their merchandise, trades, professions, and the like, before country readers in the States just named. This is easily understood when it is remembered that the four hundred preachers who are scattered throughout these States, in the Rio Grande, East Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Montgomery and Mobile Methodist Conferences, are all, more or less, active agents for the paper; and when it is also remembered that our paper circulates among a large class of people who seldom see any other New Orleans paper.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

	1 Month.	6 Mos.	12 Mos.
One square...	$ 5 00	$20	$30 00
Two squares...	7 50	25	40 00
Three squares..	10 00	30	50 00
Four squares...	12 50	35	60 00

Larger advertisements in proportion.

TO OUR AGENTS AND SUBSCRIBERS

1. The price of the paper is FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE: and it will be sent for 12 months only, unless the subscription price is renewed. We propose to keep no other books than the one containing the names of subscribers and their address. Due notice will be given in the paper a few weeks previous to the end of the subscription.

2. All travelling Preachers in the several patronising Conferences throughout the South-west are our Agents. They will receive a paper for five subscribers, and be paid one dollar for each subscription over that number.

3. If money forwarded by mail is registered at the Postoffice when it is mailed, we will take the responsibility of its safety. But where it can be forwarded by private hands, the security is greater.

4. Be explicit in writing names and offices and routes—especially in directing to the "New Orleans CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE," as the Church North has already issued a sheet in this city entitled the "New Orleans Advocate."

R. F. ALEXANDER, P. E.

The Rev. Dr. Bullock, of the Old School Presbyterian Church, delivered an address to his congregation in Baltimore on the evening of the 12th inst., in which he reviewed the action of the Assembly with regard to the Louisville Presbytery. He sharply condemned some members, and announced his intention to withdraw from said General Assembly. Dr. Bullock is brother-in-law to Gen. Breckinridge. Dr. Bullock's congregation voted to sustain him in seceding from the General Assembly on account of its action.

The Methodists of Galveston have now three places of worship—the old church, under the pastoral care of Rev. V. H. Philpot; the new church, Rev. Dr. Boring; and a society with a flourishing Sabbath school in the west end, presided over by the Rev. L. H. Baldwin.

Gov. Humphreys, of Mississippi, has been elected by the Baptist State Convention, President of the Board of Trustees of the Orphans' Home. As Gov. H. is a communicant of the M. E. Church, the selection is a high compliment to his capacity and Christian character.

The statistics of fifty-four American Colleges show, that out of 7810 students 3326 are professors of religion, of whom 1034 have the ministry in view.

The eleventh Annual Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association of the United States and British Provinces was held in Albany on Friday, the 1st of June.

The three Presbyterian churches in Wheeling, West Virginia, are all without pastors.

THE USES OF CONTROVERSY.

The conception of the Minister of Christ as an easy-going, gentle soul, letting the world alone, and only correcting evil, as oil quiets the uneasy wave, by his presence, is very foreign from the Apostle's Man of iron and bronze, with visor down, sword in hand, shield afront, girded and plated from crown to heel, ready to encounter and eager to find the Spiritual Foe. That the presence of the Gospel was a guarantee of quiet, and its diffusion would imply a period of peace all round, is the first notion the Saviour corrected in the minds of his followers: "I am not come to bring peace," was the startling announcement of the Prince of Peace. That Charity which has a quarrel with no one, not even the Devil, finds no place in the system of Christ. "I came to bring a sword," and woe to the Church when this sword shall be beat into a plow-share, or this spear into a pruning-hook. The kingdom of Christ is the aggressive force. Satan simply "keeps" his palace. "The world lieth in the wicked one"—in the repose of an entire possession. He that does nought to disturb this peace "gathers not," is no harvest-man, is an enemy and no true friend of Christ.

The first period of Methodism was a time of controversy. That vast "congregation of the dead," which stiffly crowded the solemn places of worship from choir to nave, overflowing the very altars of the Protestant Church of England with lifeless forms of baptized fashion and sin, awoke under the denouncing tones and warning trumpet of the two Wesleys and Whitfield; many of them only to relapse into formal death, but some to rise into the experimental life of true godliness. The denouncer was denounced. Bishops and Presbyters stood off, and called their people to stand off from these new censers and this strange fire. But the Wesleys, calm amid commotion, still prophesied without the camp, and the glory of God was on them.

John Wesley was a man of war, in the highest and best sense. He battled against the Devil, the world and the flesh, so long as he lived. He fought a tremendously good fight. Comparing greater things with lesser, he was not unlike Bonaparte in his strength, standing up against the combined Powers—only at the last this "Little Corporal" of Methodism died in his bed, his latest foe under his feet:

> "His sword was in his hand,
> Still warm with recent fight,
> Ready that moment, at command,
> Through rock and steel to smite."

"God and the Truth" was upon his shield, and no friendship or blood swerved him from his devotion to these great principles. He was ready to hear and to impartially weigh all that could be stated or urged; for idolatry was as far from his mind as from his heart. But then, he was a man of persistent purpose, of a fearless spirit, and of inexorable logic. His sermons fill out the Greek conception—the type of composed, majestic, and unrelenting force; though he resisted in their composition, as he assures us, all mere artistic method. Yet, by so much as he has succeeded in his notion of telling truth for truth's sake, he has realized the very best classic ideal of eloquence. No one need wonder at his success, under God, as a preacher, who will read his sermon on "Free Grace," and that other one on "The Righteousness by Faith." An antagonistical secretion of Tracts, which were thrown off with irregular constancy—"Plain Accounts," "Appeals," "Letters," etc.—indicated the vigilance and readiness with which he took advantage of the various occasions presented while in the midst of a great life-battle.

The men who immediately succeeded Mr. Wesley were second to him only, in skill and force. Chief of these men of might was Fletcher, of Madeley. He was not second to Mr. Wesley, or to any man, for incisive, clear, analytic thought, or discriminative, logical statement. His "Checks" stand there against Calvinism and Antinomianism, immovable as the great rocks at the foot of the Mer de Glace, which hold it back from the smiling valley of the Arve. A man of fervent, effectual prayer, of purest charity, a faith like that of Mount Moriah, he turned not back in the day of battle. And in those days the battles were long and frequent; indeed there was never a day without one. But, in the midst of it all, God revived his work. They builded and fought.

As these Heroes passed away, other men took their places, and their armor; men not unworthy of either. Mr. Watson maintained the front of Methodism with unsurpassed ability. His Institutes are the well-arranged armory of Methodistic Theology. The mere reading of this master-piece of reason is no ordinary training for the mind. Meanwhile, in this country the contest against error and sin was sustained by such men as Francis Asbury, Freeborn Garretson and Jesse Lee. The intense Calvinism of New England disputed every inch of ground with Methodism, and called forth all the polemic resources of the early Methodist preachers. In other parts of the country, more especially in the West, the vexed and endless questions of the mode, the object and the efficacy of Baptism, as against Campbellism and the various phases of Baptists, served to brighten weapons which were mainly to be used against the Empire of Darkness. In those parts of the country McKendrie, McMahon, Donglass, Stamper and a host of worthies, preached and controverted—nor gave way, no, not for an hour; and under such controversial preaching the people were interested, gathered, awakened, and converted. Methodism spread like a prairie on fire. Even to this day these old warriors see every text from the stand-point of some old battle-field. The Pedo-baptist or the Armenian strength of the position is the first inquiry, and it is quite surprising to mark the ingenuity they display in artificially strengthening points which have naturally some strategic advantage.

As we have said, the main fight was against Infidelity, Universalism, out-breaking vice, Sabbath-breaking, gambling, horse-racing, drunkenness, dishonesty, violence—against profligacy of all sorts common to man or woman. On the other hand, the doctrine of the new birth, broadly stated and strongly pressed, Class Meetings, Camp Meetings, the demonstrative earnestness of Methodism, and its unhesitating Discipline, surrounded its vital ministrations with a thinking multitude and trained its people in the knowledge of the distinguishing peculiarities of its faith. The half-fight half-preach kind of preaching educates the young, herds the people of God, separates them from the world, enrages Satan, and convicts sinners. The Saviour's controversies with the Jews, recorded by John, in which the children of "your father the Devil" are called by their right names; and Paul, in "the school of one Tyrannus, for two years disputing daily"—a champion against all who chose to enter the lists; and his declaration that though some preached Christ of mere contention, he welcomed even controversy against Christ, as it set the people upon thinking of Christ, and so the Cross was displayed; are facts highly suggestive in this connection.

Rationalism, with its mystical, minute, mithical difficulties and doubts; Roman Catholicism, substituting the "Holy Mother" for the Mediator, changing sacraments into mysteries, the Holy Scriptures into Sybiline leaves, the ministers of the Gospel into Hierophants, and offering a merely natural satisfaction to the religious cravings of the soul; Puseyism, with its functional transmissions and sacramental regenerations; all necessitate controversy. Let us remember those master-strokes of Satan, which were dealt in the very presence of Christ—sifting Peter to the last grain, transforming gentle John, under the guise of zeal, into a fierce zealot, and it will appear that the more highly Christianity is developed the more carefully are the points of the Adversary taken. And the more incisive the Enemy, the greater the necessity for care in selecting the arrow, and for being "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." Let the "young men" of the ministry "be strong." Read up, give thyself to doctrine O Timothy! Feel the enemy—know what his real force is. Attack evil; recollect that hard words aright arguments break bones. Take care you don't imitate those "dumb dogs" which bay at the moon, but do not bark at the thief—watching against evils in general, and overhead, in a showy, mistaken way, but skilfully avoiding the risk of actual conflict. Search the great armory of God's word for new weapons, which have as yet never been taken down, having been provided for the hearts of the King's enemies still to be revealed. The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but they are mighty. See Martin Luther and John Wesley, and believe it: one bold champion can conquer whole provinces from the Empire of Sin. And

"He that hath no sword, (and no purse,) let him sell his garment and buy one."

Better than Fenianism for Ireland.

A short time since the London Times asserted that the proselytes made by the established church in Ireland were insignificant, and that that church had failed in her mission as regards Ireland. As a sort of reply to this the Archbishop of Dublin has published in the Times a letter controverting the assumptions of that journal, and gives the history of the success achieved by the established church in West Connaught for the last twenty years. Undoubtedly, if the success of the operations be compared with those of missions elsewhere, the results will seem small; but when the tenacity with which the majority of the people of Ireland will cling to their religion is taken into account, the work accomplished will not appear so very insignificant. Those who are accustomed to assert that Protestantism neither has nor can exert any aggressive power in Ireland, will, by the publication of this letter, either have to cease from such, or discredit the "assertions" of the Archbishop. Nevertheless, there are one or two points brought out by this letter which Protestants have just cause to be thankful for, viz: that Protestantism is making substantial if not rapid progress in Ireland, and that Roman Catholics do not everywhere oppose its progress by brute force. We cannot do better than quote from the letter of the Archbishop. In speaking of Castlekirk, he says:

> In that vast desolation, with hardly the sign of a human habitation, it was difficult to imagine where a congregation was to come from, even had all the people been ours. There were present, however, at the consecration 150 persons. Of these, 84 were inhabitants of the district being 15 original Protestants, 58 converts, and 11 Roman Catholics. The Protestant population of the parochial district attached to the church is 115, of whom 92 are converts.

Of what he saw at Errismore, seven or eight miles south of Clifden, the same prelate account is given:

> The total church population of this district is 282. Of these 76 are original Protestants and 206 converts; of these latter 96 being scholars under 15 years of age, but attending church, the remainder adults. There were present at the consecration service 415 persons, of whom 215 (including 40 original Protestants, 164 converts and 11 Roman Catholics) were inhabitants of the district.

To quote the many statistics he gives of the grand but slow work silently being carried on, would be superfluous; what enough is indicated in the above two extracts to convince the most skeptical. The schools are so dealt with by the Bishop, and those which he visited, at various places, were all in a prosperous condition. Of the appearance of the children he says:

> The boys were in appearance very much like those one sees in ordinary National or Church Education Schools, and were certainly not inferior; but no one could be passed, without remark, the clear, bright, intelligent looks of the elder girls; their neatness, cleanliness, and singularly well mannered ways.

In conclusion, he says:

> So indeed, from any hostility to the mission existing, there seems to me evidence that, even of those who are not themselves drawn into the movement, many look upon it with favor. Thus, of scholars attending the schools, very many are children of Roman Catholic parents, who say (this has been attested to me by many) that they are themselves too old to change their religion, while at the same time they encourage the attendance of their children, being well pleased to see them trained up in a better and purer faith than their own.

From the foregoing it will be perceived that a truly Christian effort for the amelioration of the peasantry has been crowned with encouraging success.

A GRAND SCENE.—On last Sabbath Dr. Young, of the Tulip Street Church, received into full fellowship sixty-six persons. Fifty of these had passed six months' probation under the old rule; the remainder came in under the new regime, excepting a few by letter. Wives and husbands, parents and children, hundreds were made glad by the scene of moral sublimity that passed before the assembly. The new formula to be appended to the Discipline was used for the first time on this occasion. The service was regarded by the congregation as suitable and very impressive, and had a very fine effect upon the multitude, as well as on the minds and hearts of those admitted into the fellowship of the Church.—Nashville Christian Adv.

American Religious Associations.

The Evening Post gives the following brief summary of the results of the last year's labors of the prominent religious and charitable institutions whose anniversaries have recently been held in New York:

The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, according to the annual report, employs three hundred missionaries, colporteurs and teachers; it ordained twenty-two last year, and the church membership under its care is about twelve hundred. Its receipts amounted to $207,526; the expenditures to $510,375—of which $40,000 is lost by the high rates of exchange.

The American Missionary Society, which is but a young organization, employs three hundred and twenty missionaries and teachers. It was amongst the first to labor among the freedmen. Its cash receipts for the year ending March 31st were $140,902; the expenditures of the year were $149,387; and arrangements are making which promise to double its revenue and activity.

The American Home Missionary Society during the year ending the 31st of March received $221,191 85, and expended $208,811 18. It has in its treasury $90,955; employs 818 ministers, supplying 1594 stations in twenty-eight States, and has organized two new churches during the year.

The American Bible Society, which was organized in 1816, has printed 1,400,966 Bibles in the half century of its existence, and received contributions during the same period to the amount of $10,434,953. The receipts for the year closing March 31, 1863, exceed those of 1861 by $259,084 12. It has issued during the past five years 6,555,231 books, whereas during the first thirty-three years of the Society's existence the entire issues numbered 6,347,140.

The American Tract Society has also a largely increased revenue. Its receipts were $165,551, exceeding those of any other year except 1864. Its expenditures for the year amount to $164,534.

The American Tract Society of New York reports the receipt of $124,327 from donations and legacies, and $313,366 from sales; to this is added the supplies of last year, making in all $439,946. This exceeds the receipts of any previous year. The expenditures for the year were $436,969.

The American Tract Society of Boston, now entering upon its fifty-second year, also reports a large increase in its receipts. It has extended its operations over the South, having distributed 791,000 pages among the freedmen. The receipts for the year ending March 31st, 1866, were $165,551, and the expenditures $164,534.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions report expenditures during the year of $547,000, and receipts for eight months ending April 30th, of $248,601. The appropriations for the current year amount to $507,000.

The American and Foreign Christian Union, now sixteen years old, reports $92,247 received—a balance of $2,605 on hand.

The New York Sunday School Union reports contributions amounting to $21,190.

The Howard Mission acknowledges the receipt of $35,985, and a balance of $1693. The Five Points House of Industry received $46,240; thrice the amount received in any previous year except one.

The American Female Guardian Society and Home of the Friendless received for the year 1865 $15,135, and had a balance in the treasury of $43,509. It has expended $52,778, leaving in the treasury $25,866.

The American Seamen's Friend Society, now entering upon its 39th year, reports its receipts larger than ever before. Including the balance of last year they amount to $51,759; besides $28,507 71 received from auxiliary organizations. The expenditures are reported at $43,743 60, an increase over last year of $10,207 62. Great hopes are entertained from the beneficial operations of the law of 1866 for the protection of seamen in the port of New York, which went into effect upon the 1st instant.

A Liberal Man.

Mr. George Peabody, the eminent American banker and philanthropist of London, arrived at Boston last week in the Scotia, and has been received with distinguished marks of honor in his native State, as he will be in every part of the country that he may visit. Mr. Peabody was born in Danvers, Mass., February 18th, 1795. He started in life poor, as a clerk in a grocery store in his native town. In 1814 he became engaged in the wholesale dry goods business at Georgetown, D. C. The house prospered, and was transferred to Baltimore. In 1822 branches of the house were established at New York and Philadelphia. He went to England in 1837, and established himself as a merchant and banker in London in 1843. His house henceforth became the headquarters of Americans in London. In 1855 he gave to his native town of Danvers the sum of $80,000 to found a library and institute, and to North Danvers $10,000 for a branch library. In 1856 he gave $300,000 to found a literary and scientific institute at Baltimore, with a pledge to increase this sum to $500,000. He also gave $10,000 to the Grinnell Arctic expedition. His benefactions to the poor of London amount in the aggregate to $2,250,000. History furnishes no parallel to this instance of private charity by a living man.

SUNDAY FUNERALS.—The Montreal Weekly Evangelist says the various ministers of the Church of England, Church of Scotland, Wesleyan Methodist, Independent, Canada Presbyterian, Baptist, Primitive Methodist and Episcopal Methodist, in Kingston, Canada West, have signed a solemn protest against the practice of Sunday funerals, saying at its conclusion: "So strong are our convictions of the moral evils connected therewith, and of the benefits which would result from a more sacred regard for the obligations of the Sabbath, that we hereby declare our purpose not to attend funerals on that day, unless in cases of necessity, and we affectionately solicit the countenance and co-operation of the community in carrying it out."

LONDON CITY MISSION.—We see by the annual report of this Mission that they employ 371 missionaries. Receipts £35,416 18s. 10d. 276,830 visits had been paid to the sick and dying, and upwards of 2,000,000 visits had been paid in the regular way to the poor, etc. City Mission meetings had been attended by 1,500,000 persons, being considerably more than attend all the churches and chapels on the Lord's day. 1102 drunkards had been reclaimed, and 868 fallen women had been admitted into the Asylums, or restored to their friends. City Missions are among the most useful and important institutions of Great Britain.

REVIVAL AT FORTRESS MONROE.—A deep religious feeling has lately manifested itself among the negro villages on the Peninsula, and quite a rivalry between the various denominations is kept up as to who shall secure the greatest number of converts. The Baptists at present take the lead, and every Sunday about five hundred freedmen and freedwomen, of all ages, are baptized and join that Church.

A PREDICTION OF THE POPE.—At a recent celebration of a miracle in Rome, the Pope said, in the course of a speech, that the present year would be one of triumph and brilliant victory over the temporal power. "I shall," he remarked, "behold the triumph, and, in 1868, I shall render up my soul to God." This singular prophecy is said to have produced a powerful effect upon the audience, some of whom were moved to tears.

The Jews are about collecting funds for the establishment of a college in Philadelphia for training of Jewish divines, the Legislature of Pennsylvania having already granted to the Hebrew Education Society of that city a charter with the privilege of conferring degrees of scholarship, equal with those of Harvard, Yale or Rutgers colleges.

The Rev. G. Scott, D. D., late missionary in Sweden, has just arrived at Montreal from England, to preside over the Wesleyan Conference, soon to be held.

An Indian Peabody exists in the person of Chauncey Rose, of Terre Haute, who has donated during his life over $787,000 to charitable purposes, institutions, etc.

The Burial Board of Liverpool are at present promoting a movement for the abolition of interments on Sunday, except in cases of urgent necessity.

A Protest.

The undersigned, for themselves and others, respectfully protest against the entire proceedings of the General Assembly concerning the Louisville Presbytery, and the signers of the "Declaration and Testimony."

1. The summary exclusion from the house of the Commissioners of the Louisville Presbytery, under the operations of the previous question, without allowing them or their friends one word of defence or explanation, was, in our judgment, a usurpation of powers not belonging to the General Assembly, a gross invasion of the rights of the Presbytery, an act of oppression towards the Commissioners themselves, and a violation of those principles of justice and equity which every deliberative assembly, and especially a Court of Jesus Christ, is bound to hold inviolate. For a proper analysis of this procedure, we refer to a protest of certain members of this body, to be found in the minutes of the 22d ult., and in most of the reasons of which the undersigned concur.

We lay the utmost stress upon this point, because everything that followed pertaining to this business must be judged in the light of the fact that the Assembly was passing upon the conduct of men who, by its act, not their own, were not present to defend themselves. The allegation that the Assembly offered to hear them when a report was introduced proposing to visit upon them the severest penalties, can be of no avail. For in the resolution of expulsion, it was their Presbytery which was arraigned, and they could not properly return to their seats without counselling their Presbytery. Nor is it believed that there was a single member of the Assembly who expected them to plead at the bar of a court which has opened their case by ejecting them from their seats unheard; and three days after voted down a resolution to re-admit them to their seats until their case should be disposed of.

2. Throughout the entire course of the proceedings, and pervading the elaborate arguments of the majority, it was maintained that this was a "judicial case," and that these brethren were "on trial" before the Assembly. Whereas, the notorious fact is that they had never been arraigned and tried; that neither in Presbytery nor Synod had there been any mention of formal charges, of citations, witnesses, or any of the steps essential, under our constitution, to a judicial process. The form of government and the digest show that it is not competent to a judicatory to take up a case judicially on "Review and Control." And this plea is further barred by the fact that the records of the Presbytery of Louisville were not before the Assembly. If the General Assembly has no original jurisdiction in cases of "offence," the whole proceeding, in so far as the case was tried judicially, was, in our judgment, irregular and unconstitutional.

3. The case was biased by the action of a convention called together to consider these matters on the eve of the Assembly meeting, and sitting, it was currently reported, with closed doors. The inflammatory memorial sent to the Assembly by this convention (some of them members of the Assembly, discloses a state of mind on the part of its authors ill-suited to sober and impartial deliberation upon such questions as were involved in this case.

4. The severity of the judgment visited upon these brethren was greatly disproportioned to their offense. No one charged them with heresy or with immorality. The principles affirmed in the pamphlet are the principles incorporated in our confession of faith and held by the whole church. They believed that several General Assemblies had violated these principles, and especially that the Assembly of 1865 had undertaken to impose certain laws upon the Church in derogation of the plain principles of our Constitution. In this belief they were sustained by the Synods of New Jersey and Philadelphia, by several Presbyteries, and by numerous ministers and laymen of the Church. The error lay in the measure by which they sought to redress these evils. We do not justify them in these measures. We condemn them. But we admit that they should have been allowed to plead their own cause without being prejudged, as it was, by the instant exclusion from their seats on the second day of our session. We insist that they should have been allowed time to review their proceedings, and cancel (if disposed) the offensive epithets they had applied to the General Assemblies of the Church. We do not object to their being required to do this, and to answer to the Presbyteries and Synods, and to the next General Assembly as to what they may have done in the premises; but we regret the spirit and terms of their exclusion from all the Church judicatories (the Assembly excepted) until the next Assembly, and the contingent dissolution of the Presbytery as needlessly harsh measures, pregnant with evil to the Church. And we fortify our conclusion by the fact, fully established and undenied and controverted by no one, that one of the Presbyteries now represented in this house, and even one or more members of this very Assembly, had used language and performed acts quite as pregnant with rebellion towards the Assembly without being subjected to the slightest censure.

5. We protest against these measures because they will inevitably tend, as we believe, to foment strife and dissention. The Church needs repose. Rent asunder by the war, and agitated with conflicting passions, it requires to be soothed, composed and comforted. The final action of the Assembly, as connected with previous measure and debates, (for the whole must be taken together,) can hardly fail to lead about another secession or separation; to divide congregations; to instigate lawsuits; to diffuse and prolong a bitter but hitherto local controversy; to create wide-spread dissatisfaction with the deliverances of the Assembly, and to alienate many of the best friends of our institutions. With one accord our several Boards have appealed before us, deploring the falling off in their receipts, and the decay of sympathy in their operations. We greatly fear that the measures against which we protest will aggravate these evils.

6. We believe that the interests of the Church and of the country are identical, and thus believing, we protest against the proceedings as adopted to impair the capacity of the Church for its legitimate and beneficent work, and to increase and perpetuate the jealousies and animosities which still vex the land.

7. And, finally, we protest against the ordinances because they are likely to defeat, if not prevent, that Christian co-operation between the Presbyterian Churches North and South, which is so needful to the evangelizing of our people, and especially to the religious instruction of four millions of freedmen, most of them now as sheep without a shepherd.

WEEKLY SUMMARY OF NEWS.

FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, June 11.—A special order convening a military commission at Raleigh, June 18, for the trial of the officers of the Freedmen's Bureau, arrested at the instance of Generals Fullerton and Steadman, has been issued by the War Department. Among the delinquents are Gen. Whittlesey, Major Wickersham, Mount and Zeiy, and Captains Rossellang and Glavis. Geo. Turner is the presiding officer.

WASHINGTON, June 11.—Mr. Shea, one of the counsel for Jefferson Davis, made a motion before Judge Underwood, in the chamber, in order to test the jurisdiction of the courts in Virginia, invoking the power to hold the prisoner to bail, it being a judicial question with which the President has nothing to do. Judge Underwood expressed the opinion which has always been insisted upon by Chief Justice Chase, that so long as martial or military surveillance was enforced in Virginia, the courts were a mere adjunct, and to be used in aid of the military power.

Judge Underwood declines issuing a habeas corpus to bring the prisoner before his court until he receives from the President a relinquishment of the accused to the civil authorities, Mr. Davis being now a prisoner of war. Judge Underwood reduced his opinion into writing, which was delivered to the President by Mr. O'Conor. All action in the premises is suspended until further orders from the Government. It is stated on the authority of one of the counsel that no application for bail was made to Justice Chase. Attorney General Speed, Charles O'Conor, and ex-Governor Pratt, were among those present in Judge Underwood's chamber to-day. Within the last few days, Mr. Davis's friends, professional and otherwise, have had free admission to him.

The passage of the resolution by the House to-day declaring its opinion that Mr. Davis should be kept in custody until tried by law was superindneed by the apprehension that he would be bailed. The rules were suspended for the purpose of passing the resolution.

Mr. Anthony offered a presmble and resolntions to the effect that, as the Irish had fought for this country in every war, their purpose of freeing Ireland was entitled to our respect and sympathy, which Great Britain had forfeited, and that therefore the neutrality laws of 1818, under which the Fenians were stopped from invading Ireland, be repealed.

The motion to lay on the table was rejected by yeas 4, nays 114.

Mr. Schenck offered a substitute, that in the opinion of the House the President should reconsider the policy which had been adopted by him in the trouble on the Canada borders, and adopt as near as practicable the same course which Great Britain pursued in the late civil war. A motion to lay on the table was rejected by a decided vote, and the resolution and substitute were finally referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

In the House, Mr. Boutwell introduced the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas, It is notorious that Jefferson Davis was the leader of the late rebellion, and is guilty of treason, and whereas, by the President's proclamation of May, 1865, Davis was charged with complicity in the assassination of President Lincoln, and whereas, said proclamation has not been revoked, therefore.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this House that said Davis should be held in custody as a prisoner, and be subjected to a trial according to the laws of the land.

Mr. Rogers objected to the resolution.

Mr. Boutwell moved a suspension of the rules.

Mr. Rogers desired to ask a question, but the Speaker ruled the debate not in order. Mr. Rogers, however, asked if Mr. Boutwell, or any unprejudiced mind believed Mr. Davis guilty of complicity in the assassinntion of Mr. Lincoln. The Speaker called Mr. Rogers to order and said he must take his seat. The rules were suspended and the resolution adopted by yeas 105, nays 19.

Mr. Raymond offered a resolntion, which was adopted, calling on the President to communicate to the House a statement of the provisions of the laws and ordinances of the late Confedernte States on the subject of the so-called rebel debt.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the bill reported from the Reconstruction committee, to provide for the restoration of the States lately in insurrection to their political rights. Mr. Rosseau argued that the States should now be represented, and the country be restored to peace and prosperity.

Referring to the attack of Mr. Ingersoll recently upon the President and those who supported him as sycophants and lickspittles, he hurled back the epithets in the teeth of him who had uttered them, and who had done nothing but stay at home and look after offices. Grnut, Sherman and Thomas supported the President's policy. Were they lickspittles? Mr. Rosseau proceeded to argue that a just and temperate policy on the part of the Radicals might have given them a long lease of power, and even now so well are the Radical leaders convinced that their course would not be approved by the people, they would not daro to adjourn without admitting Representatives from Tennessee. They would have to test their own works by what Queen Elizabeth once asked the Speaker of the House of Commons, what that body had passed. "Seven weeks, your Majesty." So this Congress, if asked the same question, would have to answer, "Seven months," for it had done nothing but passed a Freedmen's Bureau bill and some other such measures. In the conclusion of Mr. Rosseau's speech, Mr. Grinnell made some remarks of a personal character about Mr. Rosseau, who told the Speakor that unless he protected him he would protect himself.

The Speaker rebuked Mr. Grinnell for his conduct. Mr. Rosseau, in response to Mr. Grinnell, treated him with contempt. He said he would not resent anything the member from Iowa might say. On a previous occasion, he, Grinnell, said he would not resent an insult. He therefore would have nothing to do with him. Whatever the Hon. Grinnell thought he was entitled to, for his language, he was welcome to. The members of the House were much excited during the altercation, which would doubtless have led to a collision but for the fact that Mr. Grinnell is a non-combatant.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—Gens. Steadman and Fullerton have furnished the Secretary of War with their reports of the operations of the Freedmen's Bureau in the Military Departments of South Carolina and Florida. They highly commend Gen. Scott, the Assistant Commissioner in South Carolina, for the wise policy that pervades his system of government and helping the freedmen. They recommend the discontinuance of the employment of citizens in the Bureau, and instance several cases of the evil of agents being interested in working plantations. Finally, they recommend that the Sea Island lands, given to negroes by Gen. Sherman, be returned to their owners, providing that they pay the freedmen for all improvements that the latter have made while in possession of the property.

Chas. O'Conor and ex-Governor Pratt had a protracted interview with the President this afternoon with reference to the release of Mr. Davis on parole.

The House to-day proceeded to the consideration of the constitutional amendment, as reported from the Reconstruction Committee, which had heretofore passed the House and was amended by the Senate, and which had reference to the basis of representation, the repudiation of the Confederate debt, etc.

Mr. Stevens proposed, and the House consented, to debate the subject for a short time, the speeches being limited each to fifteen minutes. Mr. Stevens closed the debate, saying that the amendment was not such as he desired, as they did not recognize the right of the black man to vote. He, however, trusted that something on the subject might be done by future legislation. He took occasion to stigmatize the President as an usurper, in undertaking to establish civil government in the seceding States.

Upon his demand for the previous question the House concurred in the Senate's amendment by a vote of 120 to 32. The Speaker, therefore, announced the joint resolution as having passed. Several gentlemen announced the reasons for the absence of their colleagues, who, they said, if present, would have voted for the proposition.

The vote consolidated Republicans of every shade, including Smith, of Ky., Raymond, of N. Y., Whitney and Steers, and Lathrop, of West Virginia, the negative being composed wholly of decided Democrats. The proposed constitutional amendment will now be submitted to the Legislatures of the respective States for their action.

Mr. Stevens proposed a substitute for the pending bill reported from the Reconstruction Committee to enable the States lately in rebellion to regain their privileges in the Union. The material point in the substitute is the admission of Tennessee with her present Senators and Representatives, but she is hereafter to be excluded, unless before the 1st of January she extends the right of suffrage impartially to every class, besides ratifying the constitutional amendment, to which reference is made above.

The Trial of Mr. Davis at Richmond.

The circuit court of the district of Virginia, Judge C. Underwood presiding, which, after the indictment of Mr. Jefferson Davis at Norfolk, adjourned to meet in Richmond, commenced its regular session at the court room in the custom house on the 6th inst.

It having been announced, some days since, that Mr. Davis's counsel had arrived in Richmond, and that the case of this distinguished prisoner would probably be called at this session of the court, considerable anxiety was manifested by our citizens, a large number of whom, including many prominent members of the Richmond bar, were attracted to the court room.

When the court opened, Messrs. J. T. Brady, of New York; Wm. B. Reed, of Philadelphia; and Geo. Wm. Brown, of Maryland—three of the distinguished counsel for Mr. Jefferson Davis—were present in their seats.

Wm. B. Reed, of Philadelphia, one of the counsel for Mr. Davis, addressed the court as follows:

May it please your honor, I beg leave to present myself, in conjunction with my colleagues, as the counsel of Jefferson Davis, now a prisoner of state at Fortress Monroe, and under indictment for high treason in your honor's court. We find in the records of your honor's court an indictment charging Mr. Davis with this high offense, and it has seemed to us due to the cause of justice, due to the feelings of one sort or another which may be described as crystalizing around the unfortunate man, that we should come at the very earliest day to this tribunal and ask your honor, or more properly the gentleman who represents the United States, the simple question: What is proposed to be done with this indictment? Is it to be tried? Is it—and this is a question which, perhaps, I have no right to ask—to be withdrawn? Or is it to be suspended? If it is to be tried, may it please your honor, speaking for my colleagues and for myself, and for the absent client, I say with emphasis, and I say it with earnestness, that we come here prepared instantly to try the cause, and we shall ask no delay at your honor's hands farther than is necessary to bring the prisoner to face the court, and to enable him, under the statute under such cases made and provided, to examine the bill of indictment against him. Is it to be withdrawn? If so, justice and humanity seem to us to prompt that we should know it. Is it to be suspended—postponed? If so, may it please the court, with all respect for your honor and the gentleman who conducts the public business here, your honor must understand us as entering our most earnest protest. We ask a speedy trial on any charge that may be brought against Mr. Davis, here or in any other civil tribunal in the land. We may be now here representing, may it please the court, a dying man. For thirteen months he has been in prison. The Constitution of the United States guarantees to him not only an impartial trial (which I am sure, he will have) "but a speedy trial;" and we have come no slight distance; we have come in all sincerity; we have come with all respect to your honor; we have come with strong sympathies with our client, professional and personal; we have come here simply to ask that question—I address it to the district attorney, or to your honor, as may be the more appropriate: What disposition is proposed to be made with the bill of indictment against Jefferson Davis, now pending for high treason?

Assistant District Attorney Hennessy stated that, in the absence of District Attorney Chandler, he did not then feel authorized to give an answer to the interrogatories of the distinguished gentleman. He, however, expected Mr. Chandler in the city by the night's boat from Norfolk; but in case of the non-arrival from any cause, of Mr. Chandler, he would be prepared to answer the questions to-morrow.

ACCIDENTALLY SHOT.—A young man by the name of DeLeach, while out hunting on Saturday last, a few miles from Carrollton, was accidentally shot and instantly killed. There was no one near him but a little brother, and he was too small to tell how the accident happened.—Jackson Mississippian, 12th.

Fenianism.

ARREST OF FENIAN OFFICERS.

BUFFALO, June 7.—Six Fenian officers were brought before U. S. Commissioner Parker this forenoon. H. Mnoney, of Buffalo, was released on bail of $5000, to appear at this court on Thursday. Col. O'Neill, J. M. Fogarty, Wm. Smith, M. Folvey, and James Ryan, gave bonds for $6000 to appear on the 19th inst. at Canandaigua, to answer before Judge Shipman of the U. S. Circuit Court.

Yesterday, instructions, addressed to the United States district attorney by Attorney General Speed, were received in this city, directing the release of the Fenian privates captured by the Michigan, upon their own recognizances, and that the officers be held to answer to indictment for violation of the neutrality laws. In the absence of the United States district attorney, this order was executed by the United States commissioner, and the Fenian soldiers are now at liberty, liable, of course, to be indicted and punished under our laws for whatever crimes they may have committed. The officers will we presume, find no difficulty in procuring bail, and will soon regain their freedom.

Feanns are still arriving here. Some stay and others have gone East. They are very reticent, but report the old gag about going to work on railroads. None are armed, but occasionally a man has a sabre. P. O'Day, head center of this ilk, is in New York for instructions. The present order from Washington about arresting the leaders makes considerable talk but apparently the men are in good spirits, and only await orders to attend to business. No means for their subsistance is provided, and they are scattered all ove the city among their Irish friends.

ARRESTS AT ST. LOUIS.

ST. LOUIS, June 7.—Last night the United States district marshal arrested State center O'Madigan, district center Hogan, and H. A. Weber, a member of the city council. Captain Brophy, with a company of Feanans, got off just in time to avoid arrest.

THE EXCITEMENT AT DETROIT.

DETROIT, June 7.—The excitement is somewhat abated here, owing to the lucky news for the last two days. The energy of the Fenian movements, however, is not relaxed, notwithstanding the order received by the United States marshal and the district attorney to arrest leading, conspicuous Feninns.

REVENUE CUTTERS UNDER ORDERS.

Two revenne cutters, the Gen. Sherman and Andrew Johnson, lying in the river opposite Detroit, were yesterday, by a telegram from the secretary of the treasury, placed under the directions of the district attorney, by whom they were ordered to report to Gen. Casey, commandant of Fort Wayne, for special orders.

A STONE FLEET TO BE SUNK.

Much apprehension is felt on the Canadian frontier of the alleged Fenian fleet which is expected from Lake Michigan. A stone fleet is stationed at the mouth of the river Thames, ready to be sunk in the channel on its approach, and a chain will be stretched across the month of the river.

A STEAMER FIRED INTO.

The steamer Heather Bell, on her way from Detroit to Chatham, yesterday, was fired at from a battery at the entrance to the river, under the supposition that she was a Fenian war ship, and considerable damage was done.

MOVEMENTS ON BOTH SIDES.

United States regulars are represented as sympathizing strongly with the Fenians. The British soldiers who were at St. Armand have gone to St. Alexander. British accounts say there are about 5000 Fenians between Newport and Malone.

BRITISH TROOPS.

A Kingston (C. W.) dispatch of the 6th says there are 3000 British troops there, one half being regulars.

RAILWAY STOPPAGES.

Last night the train from Boston did not get through to Montreal via St. Armand, but via Rouse's Point, it being apprehended that the track would be torn up by the Fenians.

ALL QUIET.

TORONTO, June 7.—All is quiet at the various points on the western frontier. The action of the United States government regarding the Fenian movement causes the greatest satisfaction.

SYRACUSE FENIANS.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., June 7.—Great excitement prevailed among the Fenians last night. Six hundred dollars was raised at a meeting here, and 110 men were sent to the front. Several car loads of Fenians from the west also arrived last evening. They all passed east on the 12:10 o'clock train last night.

SEIZURE OF ARMS.

Dispatches from Rutland, Vt., say that United States authorities seized large quantities of Fenian arms and ammunition at Essex junction last night, which had arrived from Boston.

THE END.

The Fenian invasion terminated in a fight about eight miles from St. Armand. A brigade of British regulars charged upon a small portion of Spear's army that had remained behind, and captured sixteen prisoners. Some of the Fenians were killed, but how many is not known. This fight took place almost on the boundary line, across which the Fenians were compelled to retreat. The English, however, had no idea of stopping on account of boundary lines, but charged forward across the line, firing upon the retreating band of Fenians. They also made some captures on American soil. This affair has been reported to Gen. Meade, who is at present investigating it.

Mr. Roberts has issued a proclamation to the Irish Republican Army, advising its members to return to their homes until a further campaign is inaugurated, at no distant day. He recommends this in view of the unexpected oppressive measures taken by the United States Executive Department at Washington to crush the co-operative movement for rebellion in Ireland.

THE CROPS.

We regret to learn that the corn and cotton in Amite has suffered severely from the effects of the late winds, and it is feared that most of the damage done can hardly be remedied. We are informed by a gentleman living in the southeastern part of our county that the crops in his neighborhood have been seriously injured, and the produce of cotton will be decreased at least one-third, owing to the late storms.—Liberty (Miss) Herald, 9th.

The insect known as the Texas grasshopper, is said to be ravaging the young cotton in Tensas parish, eating up the leaves and leaving nothing but the stems. The insect, which goes about in swarms, is supposed to have been introduced in that parish by the returning negroes from Texas, who probably brought it with them in their wagons or boxes. A similar insect is said to be stripping the cotton of its leaves in some places over in West Baton Rouge, but the evil is regarded as one which may be overcome in the future growth of the plant.—Baton Rouge Comet, 12th.

Accounts from all parts of Georgia and Alabama represent corn to be flourishing very well. Wheat is damaged by the rust. Cotton is injured in every way; bad seed, hail storms and overflows have left many fields bare, and what was left is now suffering from grass. Oats are pretty well killed. Potatoes are not bad. From every portion of the State of Tennessee come complaints of injury to the corn crops by the dry weather and cut-worm. Many farmers are now planting for the third time.

A Macon special reports that the wheat in Central Georgia is looking much better than it did a few weeks since.

From Red River.

The planters in the overflowed districts are displaying great industry in replanting their fields. The young cotton was killed by the water, and the corn was taken up by the roots and floated off by the current. The water stood upon the land so long that it destroyed all vegetation. The extent of the disaster can scarcely be calculated by those who have not experienced it.

The continued rains during the past week have retarded operations. There is no time to lose, as the season is already so far advanced that it is impossible, with a favorable season, to raise more than a half crop. The crops on the uplands were never more unpromising, being overgrown with grass and drowned out with heavy rains.—Shreveport Gazette, 8th.

The river has fallen from its highest mark of the season about 6 feet, and is receding at the rate of 6 inches in 24 hours. The reports of high water in Upper Red River amount to nothing, as the overflow has arrived and is now passing away. We may have a full river during the summer, but it will be confined to its channel.—Ibid.

The work on the railroad from this place to the present terminus of the Southern Pacific is progressing slowly, but the contractor feels confident that the cars will pass over the road by the first of August.—Ibid.

A SUGGESTION.—Hundreds of acres of land, in every parish in this State, are lying idle, from causes of overflow and inability of planters to put in a crop in due season. Let this land be plowed or "scratched," and corn sown broadcast over it and harrowed in. When the corn so planted has reached the height of eighteen or twenty inches, let it be cut down, properly cured and put away, out of the damaging effects of rain. In this way every planter can provide himself with a substitute for hay, even better than hay itself; and thus he can do a good deal toward having his horses and mules in good condition to begin the following year's operations. The green stalks of corn contain more saccharine matter than the same weight of green grass, and, if properly cured, will yield a larger amount of nutriment to stock. Let every planter employ every spare hour in this way, and he will not regret the outlay for seed and labor.—N. O. Time.

LITTLE JOE DAVIS'S GRAVE.—Not far from Capt. Wells' grave lie the remains of little Joseph Davis, son of Mr. Jefferson Davis. The lot is in the extreme western portion of the cemetery, and is not enclosed. Until lately there is a beautiful little monument on it bearing the following inscription:

On the head is, Little Joseph Davis, son of our belove President." At the foot is, "Erected by the little boys and girls of the Southern capital." The grave was literally covered with wreaths, crosses and boquets. On the head was a wreathe of evergreens, interwed with white roses.

The tribute to the love of his son may show to Mr. Davis that he is not forgotten in his imprisonment by the people amongst whom he lived, and then in it send to him their best wishes for his health and speedy release from confinement.—Richmond Examiner.

THE DEAD OF THE REBELLION.—A Washington correspondent of the New Hampshire Statesman says that burying parties are at work on every field of the rebellion, gathering up and burying the dead soldiers, from Virginia to Texas. The last made cemetery is at Coal Harbor, and already contains one thousand six hundred and thirty bodies, viz.: fifty commissioned officers, thirty-nine non-commissioned officers, one chaplain, five hundred and forty-five known soldiers, three hundred and forty-six soldiers unknown, taken from graves; eight hundred and eighty-nine unknown, taken from trenches. There are three burying parties around Richmond; one in front of Petersburg, one in the Shenandoah Valley, one at Coal Harbor, one at Antietam—a private party, to which the government has already furnished six thousand coffins; one at Fortress Monroe, one at Bull Run, and one sweeping the country between here and the latter named place.

THE LEVEE MEMORIAL.—Another letter received from Col. Claiborne states that the memorial asking Congress to rebuild the levees of the Mississippi river, was presented in the United States Senate on the 8th inst. by Senator Clarke, of New Hampshire and referred to a committee. It was presented in the House on the 9th by Representative Garfield, of Ohio, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. Speedy action upon this important matter is anticipated. N. O. Times.

A correspondent of the Nashville Union and American, writing from Springfield, Tenn., says that the destruction of timber, fencing and crops in Maury county, Tenn., by the tornado of the 5th inst., will reach from $10,000 to $15,000. Some of the hail stones weighed five or six ounces. No lives were lost, and only two persons seriously injured.

The reports from all quarters show that the Fenians have begun to leave for their homes, and are gratefully accepting the offered transportation at Government expense. Large numbers have left St. Albans and its vicinity, and those at Buffalo are finding their way home as best as they can. At the last accounts, Roberts was still refusing to accept the offered bail. The parties arrested at St. Louis have been released on bail.

The disbursements of the Treasury for the week ending Saturday were a trifle less than $1,000,000.

The receipts of internal revenue for the week ending yesterday amounted to $5,620,071 31.

AUSTRIA AND HER ANTAGONISTS.—The Vienna Presse declares that even without assistance from any portion of Federal troops Austria will still be superior in strength to both her antagonists. It says: "Without the help of volunteers, who might certainly be estimated at from 40,000 to 50,000 men, without the depot corps, without the fourth battalions of the frontier infantry regiments, and, lastly, without the Trieste and Tyrolese militia, Austria can place 600,000 combatants with 1000 guns in the field. In comparison with the Italian and Prussian armies capable of operations, this is a positively gigantic force: and especially when it is considered that it by no means exhausts her resources, and does not take into account the numerous reserves and new recruit contingents, which are estimated by a military contemporary at 300,000 men more. From the above effective strength of 600,000 men must be deducted 150,000 to garrison the Quadrilateral and Venice, 50,000 to guard the coast, and 80,000 as garrisons for the strategically important northern fortresses of Cracow, Olmutz, Koniggratz, Josephstadt, and Theresienstadt, leaving 320,000 men to form the operating army of the north. This force is all the more able to cope with any Prussian armies it would certainly be reinforced by fully 50,000 volunteers."

A FIGHT WITH A LIONESS.—In Wombell's menagerie, in Stirling, England, recently, D'Avey, the lion hunter, entered the den with the performing group of lions, when one of the lionesses, turning around upon him, seized him by the left leg. D'Avey seized his rifle and brought it down with full force upon the head of the lioness, breaking the stock of the rifle in two and freeing himself from the grasp of the lioness. At the next performance the lion hunter again entered the den, when the lioness immediately flew at him a second time. D'Avey was armed with a heavy stick; a severe struggle ensued as to who was to be master, the lioness repeatedly flying at D'Avey, and he meeting her each charge and driving her back, until she finally settled down in a corner completely cowed and subdued. D'Avey escaped with no further injury than a slight flesh wound and a torn dress.

The personal appearance of the new rising English poet, Swinburne, is thus described: A small, young, even boyish man, with handsome, regular features, and smooth skin; with eyes that glitter; with thin, flexible lips, whose coldness is in strange contrast to the passionate intensity of his eyes; with a great deal of reddish hair that surrounds his face like a halo—he seemed to me like some wild bird of rare and beautiful plumage which has alighted in our uncongenial clime, and which is likely to die before it is acclimatized. No one who has ever looked upon Algernon Swinburne's face would ever doubt but that he is a man of genius.

The department of state has received from the United States consul at the island of Zanzibar intelligence of the failure of the East African expedition, which was fitted out from that place in the year 1865, for the purpose of exploring the northern rivers of Africa. After exploring the Toula and Shamba rivers, which were found to be only inlets of the sea, the expedition touched at Cape Bissell. Here after considerable opposition, the party finally landed, but every obstacle was placed in their way by the natives, to prevent their further ingress into the country. The party, however, pushed up the Rognes river, and encamped at a point known as Somalletown, where they were attacked by a band of natives, who killed two of the whites, after suffering considerable loss themselves. The exploring party finally made their escape to the river, and taking a vessel, arrived at Zanzibar on the 20th of October. The object of the expedition was to ascend the Juba river as far as possible, and then travel overland to the Nile, and follow that river to its month.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD.—One hundred miles of the Union Pacific were completed on Monday, giving three hundred and eighty-three miles of continuous rail west of St. Louis. This company is now running one hundred and twenty-six miles of road, including the Lawrence and Leavenworth branch, and will reach Fort Riley in the latter part of July.

Prince Humbert, son of Victor Emmanuel, was offered the command of a corps d'armee, and declined it. "If I command a corps," he is reported to have said, "and am defeated, people will say that this comes of giving important commands to inexperienced persons. If I am victorious, my chief of staff will get all the credit. I prefer commanding a division and doing what I am ordered."

A new invention to cut through sandbars has been patented. It is a floating vessel, propelled by steam, the forward part of the vessel acting as a double dam. At the stern are large water wheels, driven by powerful machinery. The dams direct a strong current of water centrally towards the stern-wheels. So admirably is the invention apparently adapted to the purpose of cutting a channel through sandbars, that every one who has seen the model thinks it will be a success.

Brig. Gen. A. L. Guerney, now at Selma, Ala. has sent a remonstrance, signed by Union officers and soldiers engaged in planting in that State, against the cotton tax. The General urges that cotton cannot be raised at a profit with the tax, and this will drive out the five thousand immigrants now there, and prevent emigration, without which the General thinks the South States cannot be purged of disloyalty.

An attempt was made in St. Louis to burn the steamer Magnolia. The fire was fortunately discovered before it had gained much headway, and was easily extinguished by a few buckets of water. The owners of various steamers in St. Louis have received anonymous notes threatening that unless they discharge their colored employes their boats shall be destroyed.

LATEST DISPATCHES.

WASHINGTON, June 14.—In the House Mr. Harris said he stood now as he did after war was declared—as he did last Congress when he received his crown of remorse—as he stood when in prison, and before that infernal instrument of tyranny, a court martial; and, as he stood in principle, so he would in practice. He believed now, as then, in the right of secession; that those States were satisfied in going out of the Union, and moreover that they did go out, and thereby became to this Union as foreign States. He would stand by this, and he was therefore against the reconstruction policy of the President, who was only carrying out Mr. Lincoln's scheme, and who was now faithful to the Republicans, and had been since he left the Democracy, but he believed in the President's declaration, "no taxation without representation." In this view the Southern States had no right to representation in this Congress, and had no right to furnish the country with President or Vice President. He wanted Tennessee admitted into the Union, which we must do by act of Congress; but no bill for that purpose could receive his vote so long as the test oath disgraced the State book. Under the test oath, the South could have no representative men in Congress. Referring incidentally to the assassination of Mr. Lincoln, Mr. Harris said Mrs. Surrat entreated for four days to prepare her soul for God. "Not an hour," thundered forth a voice from the War Department; "on with the gallows, the coffin, and the grave; the angels of heaven shall not rejoice over the repentant sinner." Angels of mercy sought relief from a higher authority, and probably from a more merciful heart, but Preston King was Janitor then, and they were excluded. Where is Preston King? Echo answers where. Mrs. Surratt was executed to the day. Notwithstanding the application of her heart-broken daughter for her remains, they are still in the keeping of the War Department. Mr. Harris then showed how different the South had acted in the case of John Brown, whose body was given to his friends. He concluded by saying the right of secession was born with the Constitution.

The speech of Mr. Harris excited great interest and comment. Members crowded around him during its delivery.

Considerable excitement was caused today in front of the Capitol by Mr. Rosseau, who approached Mr. Grinnell, and said he had waited several days for him to apologise for the outrageous assault upon him (Mr. Rosseau) in debate. Mr. Grinnell said, "I have no apology to make," whereupon Mr. Rosseau caned him, Mr. Grinnell making no resistance whatever. When Mr. Rosseau had finished flagellating him, Mr. Grinnell said, "It is all right," and the parties separated.

Santa Anna has issued a stirring address to his countrymen from Elizabethtown, N. J. The General defines his position in reference to the present aspect of Mexican politics, and the reports of his treachery to Maximilian. He says he did not in any manner compromise himself with the Empire; he belonged entirely to the Mexican Republic, and he expects all Mexicans to unite and drive the usurpers from their soil, and offers his own service to the cause. A monarchy in Mexico he declares to be an impossibility, and the restoration of the Republic is the height of his ambition. No other purpose, he says, could draw him from retirement, and, this accomplished, he will return to private life. In conclusion, he says he will not sully his life with falsehood, but seek for his tomb a new laurel tree whose shadow shall cover it in the midst of peace.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger says: "An order will be issued in a short time for the release of Jefferson Davis, but whether on parole or on bail, I am at present unable to say. The presumption, however, is that the release will be on the same terms as were accorded to Messrs. Stephens and Clay. Another interview between the President and counsel of Davis was held to-day.

It is said advices have been received at Washington from Paris that the Emperor Napoleon repudiates having in any way been cognizant of the proposition of Austria to send troops to Maximilian, and he repeats his determination to withdraw the French troops from Mexico.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

What the Boys Would be.

Four or five good little boys were talking one evening, as boys often do, of the future. One asked the tallest of the group:

"What are you going to be when you are a man, Willie?"

"A lawyer," answered Willie. "It is very important to have justice done in courts."

"Yes; but I guess lawyers don't always look out for justice. I've heard that most of them will plead a case on either side, right or wrong, for the money," replied Charlie.

"Well, that may be so; but that's not the kind of a lawyer I'm going to be. I'll always take the right side, whether I get paid for it or not. I'll look out for all the widows and orphans, to see that nobody cheats them," said Willie. "What will you be, Charlie?"

"O, I'm going to be a doctor, so that I can ride day and night. I'll keep four horses, and change them often, and always have a fresh one. I'll not go poking along with a worn out horse and a spattered gig, like Dr. Grey."

At this, little Jimmy sprang up, and cried very earnestly, as if already in the business, "Please, brother Charlie, let me shoe all your horses, for I'm going to be a blacksmith."

His brothers laughed, and Willie said, "I shall never be ashamed of you, Jimmy, if you're a good, honest blacksmith, but you must always wash your face and hands before you come to my office."

"Yes, I will and put on my Sunday clothes," replied the good-natured little fellow.

"Well, that is settled then, father is to have a lawyer, a doctor, and a blacksmith in his family," said Willie.

Grandma sat all this time in her armchair, knitting away very fast on a little striped stocking. At her feet sat the family pet, Harry, sticking pins into grandma's ball of yarn.

Ah, it was for his tiny, plump feet that the yarn was flying over the dear old lady's needles.

"Boys," said grandma, "here is one who has not told what he is going to be when a man."

"O no," cried tall Willie, stooping down, and taking dear Harry in his arms. "What are you going to be when you're a big man like papa?"

Harry put his little arms around Willie's neck, and said, "When I am a great, high man, I'll be—I'll be—kind to my mother."

"You darling boy," cried grandma, "that is a sweet little vision of your future. I would rather have you an humble workingman, with this same affectionate heart, than see you cold and selfish in the President's chair, or in the seat of a judge. Willie and Charlie might be great and wise men in their professions, and yet be no comfort to their parents in old age, unless they were at the same time loving and kind. Greatness alone makes no one happy; but goodness, like the sun, sheds light and joy everywhere. Whenever, after this, dear boys, you're laying plans for coming life, always add to your plans and promises, 'sweet Harry's words, 'When I'm a man, I'll be kind to my mother!'" —Child at Home.

Incident of a Child.

A little boy about eight years old, having jumped off the car from the rear platform, ran forward to get on in front, and by accident slipped and fell so that the heavily loaded car passed over his leg, crushing it in a frightful manner. In the first excitement of feeling the passengers, horrified at witnessing such a scene, cried out, "Hang the conductor—he ought to be hung;" when the little fellow, though quivering with agony, exclaimed,

"Don't hurt him; I was to blame."

Poor child? Brave, just, thoughtful of others, even in the sudden presence of death. While he was lying on some straw by the roadside, previous to being taken to the hospital, a little girl picked up his cap, and having ascertained from him his name and residence, ran with it to his home. His mother opened the door, when the child exclaimed.

"Here is the cap of the little boy who has just been run over by the railroad car."

What words to reach a mother's ear!

What wonder that, with frantic speed, she should have rushed to the fatal spot, thence to track him by his blood to the hospital.

There she was at first denied access to her boy, lest her excessive agitation should hasten his death. A few moments, and the mother-love so stilled the surging anguish of her heart that, with the calmness of despair, she was admited to the presence of her darling child, only to find him conscious of his danger and ready to obey the sudden summons to his heavenly home.

"Jesus is with me, mother," he said; "I must die, but Jesus is with me."—S. S. Times.

A New Heart—What is it?

Children often hear and sometimes speak about a "new heart." But do they quite understand what the words mean?

A teacher once asked a little girl in her class, "Do you think you have a new heart?"

"Yes, teacher, I hope so," replied the child.

"What makes you hope so?"

"Because I love things, which I used to hate, and hate what I used to love."

That was a good answer. All of us "by nature" love sin. We would rather please ourselves than please God. We do not wish to think about him, nor serve him. But when he gives a child a new heart, that child begins to love what is good and right—would rather please God than himself—tries to imitate the gentle and holy Saviour—and wishes to do God's will more than anything else in the world.

The Religion of Money.

PART I.

A rich Scotchman, weary of the cloudy and cold climate of the North, had come to sojourn in one of the smiling villages on the banks of the Loire. There he dwelt happily in the bosom of a large family, finding his satisfaction in promoting the comfort of the poor around him, as far as his ample fortune would permit.

The country folks were, of course, loud in his praise, and often observed that this Heretic, as the curate called him, gave more in charity than the amount of all the parish collections put together. The curate was afraid that this generous conduct would win the hearts of the people towards this Protestant, and by degrees alienate them from the Holy Catholic Church. He undertook, therefore, to prove from the pulpit that all the Heretics, Calvinists, and Lutherans, are condemned to everlasting flames. But he well knew that none of his arguments would be so powerful with his parishioners as the liberality of the foreigner; he determined, therefore, to change his course, and root out the evil at once. In order to fulfill his purpose, he determined to convert the Scotchman to the Mother Church. He sought, therefore, opportunities of intercourse, and did not hesitate to warn him of his danger; and earnestly besought him to enter that Church, out of which there is said to be no salvation. The foreigner, from one cause or another, was a long time before he took up the subject. At last, as they were walking one day in his garden, by the side of the river, our Cure resumed the usual topic, and was agreeably surprised to hear him, on this occasion, answer, with a friendly smile,—

"Very well, my dear friend; let me hear, then, a little about your religion, that I may rightly understand it. Stay; let us sit down there," added he, pointing to a beautiful green bank, "and talk together. It is still early; the sun is rising; all is peaceful; we have nothing to fear from interruption. Tell me, then, according to your Roman Catholic and Apostolic Church, what must I do to be saved?"

The Cure. First of all, you must be baptized?

Milord. And how much will it cost to be baptized?

The Cure. It depends upon the generosity of the godfather. The fixed price, however, is forty-five sous.

Milord. Very well. But once baptized, what must be done then?

The Cure. As soon as the child attains the proper age, he must be admitted to the first communion.

Milord. And how much does it cost to make the first communion?

The Cure. It will depend on your generosity; and—

Milord. It is, of course, nothing to me; but I merely ask, what is the sum usually paid by your young villagers?

The Cure. Alas! sometimes only a wax candle, scarcely three francs and ten sous.

Milord. Very well: forty-five sous to be baptized, three francs and ten sous for the first communion. Go on. What must he done next, in order to be saved?

The Cure. You must fast during the vigils in Ember weeks; take no meat on Fridays and Saturdays, and during Lent.

Milord. But I must tell you that we English are great eaters, especially of animal food; so that it would be to me a very painful matter to fast and live upon broth. And my health—

The Cure. Oh! sooner than your health should suffer, we can dispense with fasts, &c. I can give you the recent example of the Pope, who, to reward a faithful Catholic who had given him a tiara worth 6000 francs, accorded to him on parchment, grants signed, sealed, and delivered, exempting him and his descendants from fasts, so long as the world lasts.

Milord. I do not question it; but I have no tiara to bestow. I ask you, then, what is ordinarily given to procure exemption during Lent?

The Cure. A crown of six francs.

Milord. And, for the fifty-two Fridays and Saturdays, at the same rate?

The Cure. Of course.

Milord. It amounts, then, to about fifteen francs per annum, besides the six francs for Lent: amounting altogether to twenty-one francs.

The Cure. You forget the fasts.

Milord. You are right. We must add ten francs more to be excused from the fasts, and Lent; that makes thirty-one francs. Let us see; forty-five sous for the baptism, three francs ten sous for the communion. Thirty-one francs for fasts, maigre, &c.! What more does your Church require?

The Cure. To attend mass every Sunday.

Milord. And what does it cost to be properly accommodated at the mass?

The Cure. You can hire a comfortable seat in the choir for fifteen francs, or the verger can give you a chair every Sunday morning for one sous, except on the principal feast days, and then she would expect two or three sous.

Milord. That is fair. On these days the people are more eager to be at church; it is therefore, right, to facilitate their admission by raising the price of the seats. Therefore, we will say, one sous each Sunday, which is fifty-two by the year. I reckon ten sous for chairs at the special feasts: this amounts to three francs two sous yearly. What more is wanted?

The Cure. You must confess once a year at least. I will give you Absolution for your sins, and you will only have to make up the penance imposed; for instance, to repeat fifty Paternosters and fifty Ave Marias.

Milord. But if, by chance, I forgot to repeat my Ave Marias and Paternosters, and, after a number of these omissions it became impossible to fetch up the arrears, then I could not expect to be saved?

The Cure. Ah! but you would have recourse to the indulgence-box to do away with such sins.

Milord. And what is put into the box for indulgences?

The Cure. Money.

Milord. But how much?

The Cure. We do not know what is given by each worshipper, but we find there some gold, some silver, many pence, and more farthings.

Milord. Very well. I should adopt the middle course; and so I will set down twelve francs for my sins. But, as it regards these boxes, I have observed several in your church; and I should like to understand what is put into them?

The Cure. Money.

The Cure. Money for repairs of the church.

Milord. And the box to the right?

The Cure. Money for permission to have butter and milk during Lent.

Milord. And what have you in the box facing the pulpit?

The Cure. Money for the small seminary.

Milord. And what in the other?

The Cure. Money for the Holy Chapel of the Virgin.

Milord. And in the other?

The Cure. Money for public worship.

Milord. It is very well explained. But, to proceed: what else must be done?

The Cure. On the bed of death a good Catholic must receive extreme unction.

Milord. And what is the fee for that?

The Cure. Nothing.

Milord. How, nothing! Hardly possible?

The Cure. Why, you see, when a man receives extreme unction, he is not far from death; and then comes the interment.

Milord. Ah! I understand. It is all paid together. How much then does the whole funeral cost.

The Cure. Oh! it is impossible to give you a precise answer. It depends on the number of priests who are wanted. These are twenty francs each. Then, if the large cross is borne at the head of the procession, it is fifteen francs more. If the one in gold is required, it is fifty. With the Swiss, twenty-five more. We have also funeral palls, coarser or finer, more or less expensive. You may also have the old people from the almshouses, and the young girls from the orphan asylum; the order of white or black penitents, whichever you please. You may estimate burial costs from fifteen francs to a thousand crowns.

Milord. I thank you for all your information; but I merely want to know the ordinary expense.

The Cure. Very well. You could not do without one priest, two ecclesiastics, and one cross. According to this arrangement you may be buried for twenty-four francs.

Milord. And, with all these costs, I should be sure of paradise?

The Cure. No; but in all probability you will go to purgatory.

Milord. To purgatory! But, if so, you have not saved me, for you cannot come to deliver me from thence.

The Cure. In that you are mistaken. You have only to leave orders by your will that masses shall be repeated for you, so that you may be taken from purgatory to paradise.

Milord. I understand. And how much does a mass for the dead cost?

The Cure. Thirty sous.

Milord. And how many masses will be wanted?

The Cure. I cannot exactly tell; but the more masses you appoint, the greater chance there is of a speedy deliverance from this place of torment.

Milord. I see. As the money for the masses is the last that you can receive from an individual, you do not fix the number, that scope may be given for the generosity of his relatives. You are less compassionate than Death itself. She closes the earth over us once for all; but you—you never close your purse. But, as I wish to know what I can do whilst I am here towards my salvation hereafter, will you make an exception in my favour, and tell me for how many masses one may reasonably provide?

The Cure. Twenty would not hurt you; and I think—

Milord. Twenty masses at thirty sous: that makes thirty francs. Now, then, let us add up all these items of expense which must be incurred in your Apostolic Roman Catholic Church, in order to be saved:—

	fr.	s.
Baptism	25	0
First Communion	3	10
For exemption during Lent, 6 fr. a year; this for thirty years, if I should live, will be	180	0
For exemption on Fridays and Saturdays, at 15 fr. a year, for thirty years	450	0
To be excused from fasts, at 10 fr. a year, for 30 years	300	0
For the seats on Sundays and great festivals, at 3 fr. 2*s.* per annum for thirty years	93	0
For indulgences on account of omissions, &c.	12	0
Burial and extreme unction	24	0
Masses to be delivered from Purgatory	30	0
	1094	15

According to this rate, I can be saved, or in other words go to Paradise, for the moderate sum of 1094*fr.* and 15*s.* But to lay aside joking, my dear Cure, I ask you now seriously, if you can still, without blushing, expect me to embrace a religion where everything is made a question of money? a religion which makes me pay for my birth—pay for my communion—pay for my sitting—pay for eating—pay for being married—pay for my forgiveness—pay to live—pay to die—and still after I am dead and buried? a church where, at every step, I see the hand of the priest held out to crave a penny? Can I recognise in this trade in sacraments in the traffic of sins cancelled by pence, penances excused by indulgences, indulgences purchased by money, the religion of Jesus Christ, who commanded his disciples to have but one staff and one coat? Can I recognise in this Bank of Issue for the Faithful, saleable at the office of the parish priest, who puts them into his portfolio, and advertises them at a price in the villages—can I there discover the religion of Him who had not where to lay His head, and whose kingdom was not of this world? Are you not the faithful successors of those buyers and sellers whom Jesus Christ drove out of the Temple in Jerusalem, saying: "My house is a house of prayer, but you have made it a den of thieves?" This Jesus, who overthrew the tables of the money-changers, will He not overturn these boxes which hurt every pillar of your churches? If I drove out the dealers in oxen, and sheep and doves, will He not drive out yourselves in chairs? If He condemned the Priests, who made their alms to be seen men, will He not condemn you, who expel your worshippers to act the Piece, sending round fine dressed women to collect the offerings, and then putting in your pockets what has been extorted by pride, and not charity? And what have been the fruits of this infamous traffic in holy things? You have become rich, I know—but you have dishonoured religion making it contemptible. The most simple-minded of your parishioners cry in every corner of the streets, when you listen, that you understand your trade—that there is only room for the rich in your paradise—that you are worse than those iniquitous judges, of whom it was said, that their golden key opened every door; for amongst you the golden key opens heaven itself. Your covetousness has ruined the people's faith—your ambition has extinguished their piety; and if the people give more credit at this day to Voltaire than to God, you must blame yourselves. Where will you find in the New Testament a single word to authorise all this ecclesiastical medley? Nowhere. Therefore you prohibit the reading of this Holy Book; for you know it is written: "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayer: therefore ye shall receive the greater condemnation;" you know that it is told us there, that Simon the magician, desiring to buy the gift of the Holy Spirit, Saint Peter said to him: thy money perish with thee," &c. You who call yourselves successors of the apostle Peter, should follow his example, and give this answer to those who bring their money for the mass. But let us leave this, my dear Cure. I have spoken to you with some warmth; because it is impossible for an honest mind not to feel indignation at the thought of an abuse so dishonourable to our holy religion, and not to sigh over the awful consequences which must ensue. It has not been my purpose to irritate and confound you, but to enlighten your mind, and be useful to you. I love to think that you and many other ecclesiastics in the Romish communion are upright men, who, have only been drawn into it by example and custom. Believe me, then, if you would revive religion in the spirit of your parishioners, alter your course—trust in the promises of the Saviour—"Seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." When people see you practising yourself the self-denial you preach, then they will be convinced; for your actions will give weight to your instructions. If you have not faith to rely on this promise of your Master, if you have not in your heart enough love for men to be disinterested—go and seek this faith by reading the New Testament; go and search for this love in the example of Jesus Christ. Then you will see that Christ died for you, and that He gives eternal life to all who believe on Him; and when you believe this great truth with your whole heart, be assured that it will be easy for you to love in your turn, and to despise the riches of this life, having your affections on things above. Read the New Testament—the book in which God himself speaks—and you will see that the leading principle of the gospel is diametrically opposed to that of your church. According to you, everything is bought: according to the gospel is given—salvation is freely bestowed. Saint Paul says: "By grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God." The Holy Spirit is a free gift. Jesus Christ says—God will give the Spirit to those who ask it." The forgiveness of sins is free; for Jesus Christ grants it, not according to our works, but according to our faith. He does not say, "Thy money or thy penitence have saved thee.' Yes, my dear Cure we are too miserable and poor to make satisfaction to God. He declares, that there is not amongst us one who is righteous; but when he has thoroughly convinced us of sin, He says: "Receive freely. "Come without money and without price." God so loved the world, that he gave His only begotten Son, that whoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life."

And you, dear reader of this little tract, beware of throwing on Christianity the blame of that selfishness which belongs only to Popery. Do not confound things so totally unlike as the religion of the Pope and the religion of Jesus Christ. The one is of man—the other is of God. Men may deceive you, and themselves; but that does not prove that God is ignorant or false. Therefore let us all that proceeds from man; but cordially embrace all that comes from God. Whatever is from Him, is contained in the Bible; especially in the New Testament, which brings the glad tidings of a free and all salvation to every one who believes in Jesus.

Keep your smaller differences; let us have no discord on that account; but let us march in one solid column, under the banners of the Captain of our salvation, and with undivided counsel form the legion of the cross upon the territories of darkness and of death.—Calvin.

Happiness consists in a virtuous and honest life, in being content with a competency of outward things, and using them temperately.

If parents were really faithful to their children, there would be fewer unconverted adults.

By how much lower the Saviour was made for me, by so much the dearer may he be to me.

OBITUARIES.

In compliance with the request of a friend, I do with sincere but melancholy pleasure attempt to offer a simple tribute of respect and affection to my much revered and lamented friend, Judge THOMAS W. HARRIS, who was born in Georgia, Jan. 25th, 1798, and departed this life April the 10th, 1866.

His early youth was devoted to the study of law, in the practice of which profession he gained much celebrity, and at the age of 32 years was elected to preside over the Western Circuit of the Superior Court of his native State. He resigned this position after filling it with great distinction, to emigrate to Mississippi, twenty-five years ago. His life since that period was spent in agricultural pursuits.

As a Christian, I feel that a holy patriarch in our church has fallen, as a ripe sheaf, fully ready for the harvest. His time-honored seat in the sanctuary, his vacant chair so adjacent to the sacred altar, where his trembling voice was so often heard in fervent prayer, will long be missed by those hearts that were so closely united to him by the nearest bonds of relationship, and by many who were bound to him by love, Christian confidence and sympathy.

Columbus has truly lost in Judge Harris one of its oldest, brightest and best citizens, in every sense of that complicated term. I have lost a true and sympathizing friend in my overwhelming sorrows, and as often as I turn my eyes to his dwelling a grateful incense of sincere love shall descend from my bleeding heart to the memories of dear sister and brother Harris, whom I hope and expect to meet where sorrows and parting can enter, never come. NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

WEEKLY REVIEW.

The general market (says the Price Current of Wednesday) has continued quiet during the past three days, with a moderate jobbing business in Western Produce, and the usual limited transactions in Sugar and Molasses, but with a fair demand for our leading staple, under which prices have advanced fully 2c per lb.

COTTON—We noticed in our last report that after a fair inquiry on Friday, the market closed at the quotations of the previous week, having entirely recovered the falling off in the interim, and Ordinary being quoted at 27 to 29c, Good Ordinary at 31 to 32c, Low Middling at 34 to 36c, and Middling at 38 to 39c, since which the demand has been more active, prices advancing fully 2c per lb. On Saturday the previous fair demand was checked by the high pretensions of factors, which were generally le above the limits of buyers, but still 1400 bales changed hands at full prices, there being no longer any Low Middling to be had under 35c. On Monday, being in possession of favorable foreign news, factors raised their views 1½ to 2c per lb, but buyers also increasing their offers, the market was quite animated, and 3000 bales changed hands at prices showing an improvement of fully 1c per lb. Yesterday the market opened with a very good demand, which was subsequently stimulated by the receipt of the Scotia's advices noticed above, and fully 4500 bales changed hands at advancing prices, showing a further improvement of nearly or quite 1c per lb, and making the net advance since Friday about 2½c. Aggregate sales for the three days 7900 bales, taken mostly for the North, with only a very limited amount for foreign export.

The receipts proper for the four days ending on last evening comprise 2050 bales, against 3726 during the corresponding period last week, showing a decrease of 1302 bales.

We now quote as follows: Ordinary, 29 to 30c; Good Ordinary, 33 to 35; Low Middling, 36 to 38; and Middling, 40 to 41c.

TOBACCO—Supplies are coming in quite freely, and the stock is fair and accumulating. The assortment is good, and offers inducements to foreign buyers to operate in this market. There has been again good inquiry for export and for the city trade, and various sales have been made at prices ruling fully up to and in some instances above the following quotations: Low Refused, Light, 4 to —; Good do., 6 to 6½; Common Leaf, 9 to 10; Fair, 12 to 14; Good, 15 to 16; Fine, 18 to 19; Choice Selections, 21 to 23. Heavy —— to 5; Good do., 7 to 8; Common Leaf, 10 to 12; Fair, 14 to 17; Good, 17 to 18; Fine, 19 to 20; Choice Selections, 24 to 27—in currency.

SUGAR—There is very little Louisiana but on ample stock of Cuba Sugar on hand. The market continues very dull, however, and there is only a retail or jobbing trade doing at 12 to 13c for Common to Fair Louisiana, 14½ to 14¾c for Fully Fair, 15 to 15½c for Prime, 15¾ to 16c for Yellow Clarified, and 16¼ to 16¾c for White. Cuba Sugar is retailing slowly at 13 to 13¼c for No. 12, 13½c for No. 13, 14¼c for No. 14, 16c for No. 15, and 17½c per lb for No. 20.

MOLASSES—The market is almost bare of Louisiana, but is well supplied with Cuba Molasses. There has been very little demand, however, for either, and the sales are confined to 40 bbls Louisiana at 55c, and 100 hhds Cuba at 50c per gallon. An offer of 45c per gallon was refused for a cargo of Cuba. At the current rate of gold and the cost of Molasses in Cuba, it stands here at over 50c per gallon.

FLOUR—The supplies are small, and Superfine and the grades above are scarce and in request at advancing prices, but the grades below are dull and neglected. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 4000 bbls, in lots, at $8 to $8 37½ for Fine, $9 25 for Unbranded Superfine, $9 50 to $9 75 for Superfine, $10 75 to $11 for Low Extra, $11 50 for Fair do., $12 to $12 75 for Good Extra, and $13 to $14 50 per bbl for Choice Extra. Yesterday the demand continued good, and the descriptions wanted being scarce, prices ruled still more in favor of sellers, with sales of 1800 bbls, very Choice Extra bringing $15 to $15 75 per bbl.

PORK—Buyers offer $33 50 per bbl for Mess, which holders refuse and ask $34. Some purchases could probably be made at $33 75 per bbl. A lot of 200 bbls Mess sold on Saturday at $33 55 per bbl, but since then $34 has been obtained for lots of 50 bbls. Mess is retailing freely at $34 25 to $34 50 per bbl.

BACON—The supplies continue small and barely sufficient for the demand, which is good, and previous prices have been fully sustained. Operations have been restricted by light supplies and only a retail business has been done in consequence. Shoulders are retailing freely at 16c, Ribbed Sides at 20c, Clear Ribbed Sides at 20½c, Clear Sides at 21½c, and Sugar-cured Hams at 26c per lb.

GREEN MEAT—There is very little on hand. It is held by dealers, who are retailing at 15c per lb for Shoulders and 16c for Sides.

LARD—Continues scarce and in request, but owing to insufficient supplies the movement is only in a small or jobbing way at 24c per pound in tierces and 25c in kegs. Yesterday there were sales of 25 tes at 24½c, and of 300 kegs, in lots, at 25c per lb.

BUTTER AND CHEESE—Butter is plenty and dull at 45 to 48c per lb for Choice Northern and 30 to 35c for Western. Common Butter is very dull 20 to 25c per lb. Cheese is in fair supply but not much demand. It is selling slowly at 15 to 20c for Western and 16 to 20c Northern, and English Dairy at 25 to 27c per lb.

CORN MEAL—There have been small sales Choice Kiln-dried at $5 75 per bbl.

CORN—Has been in good supply and demand and prices are about the same as previously. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 20,000 sacks, at 80 to 85c for Mixed, 85 to 87½ and 90c for Yellow and Yellow Mixed, 95c for White Mixed, and $1 per bushel for White. Yesterday only a part of the receipts were landed and the movement was restricted in consequence. The sales were confined to 5000 sacks at 82½ to 85c for Mixed and $1 per bushel for White.

OATS—Are in good supply but slow of sale and prices are easier. About 3,000 sacks were sold on Saturday and Monday at 50, 51 and 52c per bushel. Yesterday the market was dull. There were sales, however of 1700 sacks at 50, 51 and 52 per bushel.

MALT—Is in good supply but sometimes very dull. Canada is retailing at $1 75 and Western at $1 50 per bushel. Round lots of Western cannot be quoted better than $1 25 per bushel.

BRAN—The market has been dull and previous prices have been barely sustained. Only 1,200 sacks were sold on Saturday and Monday at $1 10 to $1 12½c per 100 lbs. Yesterday 1000 sacks sold at $1 10 to $1 12½c per 100 lbs.

HAY—The market is well supplied but the demand is limited and only 2000 bales have sold in small lots at $21 to $23 per ton for St. Louis and $21 to 25 for Prime Western. $24 could not be obtained for any lot of magnitude and St. Louis is quoted very dull at $21 to $22 per ton.

WOOL—There has been quite a demand since our last review, several buyers having been in the market. The stock on hand is small and is estimated at about 50 bales Texas, mostly bur-ry. A lot of 40 bales sold at 23½ to 24c per lb for washed, unwashed and burry—good prices. The market is steady and firm at 15c per lb for burry, 23½c for unwashed, and 25 to 30c for washed Texas Wool.

INDIA BAGGING—The stock is small and firmly held. A lot of 25 and one of 40 bales sold at 30c per yard. Dealers are supplying the demand for the country at 29c in rolls and 31c in bales.

BALE ROPE—We have no round sales to report excepting 100 coils yesterday at 18c per lb. The previous sales were at 18 to 18½c per lb. Dealers are obtaining 18½c per lb. Iron Cotton Ties are selling at 12c per lb.

COFFEE—The market is dull and prices are lower. There is some demand for the country, which dealers are supplying at 24 to 28c per lb, currency, for Ordinary to Prime Rio.

GUNNY BAGS—The stock on hand is small. The demand is good and a further advance of 1c has been realized. About 40 bales have sold in lots of 10 bales at 20c a piece.

STAR CANDLES—There is a fair jobbing business doing at 20c per lb for 12 oz., 23c for 14 oz. and 25c per lb for 16 oz.

NAVAL STORES—There have been sales of Common and No. 2 Rosin at $3, No. 1 at $6 50, Virgin dip $10; Pitch $3; Tar $2 50 per bbl; Spirits Turpentine 92½ to 95c per gallon.

SALT—Is quoted by the cargo at $1 55 to $1 60 per sack for Coarse and Fine. There is a fair demand for the interior, which dealers are supplying at $1 80 to $1 85 per sack for Liverpool Coarse and $1 90 to $2 for fine, in store.

HIDES—There are not many in the market. They have continued in good demand and have sold readily at 7½ to 8c for Green Hides, 8 to 9c for Kip Skins, and 11 to 12c per lb for Dry Hides.

ESCULENTS.—New Potatoes are selling at $4 to $4 25 per bbl. New Onions $2 80 to $3 25 per bbl.

POULTRY AND EGGS.—Chickens sell on the landing at $8 to $10 50, Geese at $10, and Turkeys at $35 per dozen. There have been large receipts of Western eggs and they are dull at $16 to $18 per bbl.

BEANS—Are dull at $6 to $8 per bbl.

☞ It should be understood that the above quotations generally represent the wholesale prices. In filling small orders higher rates have to be paid.

WHOLE NUMBER 589.

NEW ORLEANS, SATURDAY, JUNE 23, 1866.

OFFICE—112 CAMP STREET.

Sketch from the Life of Gossner.

One Saturday he found an order on his tablo forbidding him to enter the pulpit again. The Emperor, through one of his council, assured him of his esteem; repeated that it was impossible to retain him; begged him, if he was in any strait, to look with confidence to him; and handed him 1000 ronbles. He handed them back, with the remark that he served a richer Lord than the Emperor, and prepared to depart.

Some of his writings were burned, others confiscated. He wrote on the second volume of his Spirit of the Life and Doctrines of Jesus Christ in the New Testament: "On the 8th May, 1824, thou, dear little book, didst drive me out of St. Petersburg, leaving thy first-born brother there in arrest, to be burned in the cloister on the 9th October."

GOSSNER'S FINAL REFUGE.—Hitherto his life seemed aimless and broken—a wandering and loosing of any ties that held out promise. He was scarcely in one place till he was persecuted to another; scarce opened his lips till a sealed order closed them; scarce at rest till he was in motion. It was a painful education. Every step of the journey he had to stop and cry, Pereat Adam! Vivat Jesus!

But now he fixed on Berlin, though a hundred asylums were pressed upon him at once, and princes and statesmen were as ready as the common people to receive him. Before leaving Leipzig, Gossner quietly passed into the Protestant Church. As long back as 1804 he had thought of taking this step, but upon asking the advice of Shoner in Nuremberg, he answer, in accordance with the time spirit of the time, was: "Remain where you are; the Lutheran devil is every whit as black as the Romish." In 1811 he went to Basel on the special purpose, but when he arrived there it seemed as if the stones burned his feet, as if an inward voice warned him back, as if it was God's will that he should preach the Gospel where God had sent him; and so long as he could freely teach Christ, he had no wish to leave the Roman Catholic Church. When at last he did leave it, in 1827, it was only in name. He had left it thirty years before. When he ascended the pulpit at Bethlehem, where he was installed by the consistory of Berlin, the people flocked to hear him. "Five years since," he wrote a friend, "I fell—rather was thrown—out of the pulpit. How hard to climb to it once more! Pulpit stairs are perilous for me to go up, and grievous to go down." He was pastor there for seventeen years. He became a living center for the work of God in the city.

While the special sphere of his influence was with the middle class and the artisans, he was also welcomed in the royal household, and ministered to the dying Princess Wilhelmina. "Father Gossner," in fact, was as much a part of Berlin as Schelling or Neander. It was only now that the real work of his life began. He was in his fifty-sixth year; truly a late starting, but he was to have yet thirty years of service. His influence spread to the northeast ends of heathendom. He prepared young men for foreign missions all over the earth. Wherever people were living without God, there Gossner was waiting to step in. It is difficult to realize how many missions were conceived, organized, controlled and sustained by one man. The secret was his power in prayer. "Here I sit," he would say, "in my little room: I cannot go here and there to order everything; and if I could, who knows that it would be well done? But the Lord is there, who knows and can do everything, and I give it all over to him, and beg him to direct it all, and order it after his holy will; and then my heart is light and joyful, and I believe and trust him that he will carry it all well out."

He undertook his first mission when he was sixty-five years old, a period that generally bids men to ease. He sent in all one hundred and forty-one missionaries (including the wives of those who were married, two hundred,) of whom fifteen were regularly ordained ministers, and one hundred and thirteen are still in active service. Thousands of souls have been brought to the true light through his labors.

HIS CHARACTER DESCRIBED.—Gossner was in the highest sense practical. He never felt any interest in denominational matters; any stress on the form or idea of a church seemed to him a check upon the "spiritual" life, an outward thing which ought to be passed by among Christians, and more nearly allied to bondage than to Christ. Of scientific theology he had an instinctive dread, lest it should usurp the place of the theology of the heart. "The scholastics," he said "never opened my eyes; if they did not make me skeptical, they left me just where the false philosophy did."

And to philosophy of any sort he was not very patient. It represented the human to him; he wanted only the divine. When Hegel's writing desk was presented to the hospital, he made a kitchen table of it, and professed it did better service than it did before. "You would discern no more philosophy in it now," he said, "than a few spots of ink."

His exposition of Scripture was simple, naive, personal. The homeliest Bavarian stories would be dropped in to illustrate it. The Scripture was pictured from the life of the present day. If he found the Baptist preaching in the wilderness of Judea, he could not help bringing him into the Thier-Garten of Berlin, and drawing the doctors of the law and the soldiers and students out to him through the Brandenberg gate. Gleams of the playfullest humor lighted up the most commonplace truths and views; and, after an hour of close personal conversation, he would cease.

He wrote a great deal to the last. At seventy he learned English, and translated some of Ryle's tracts when he was upwards of eighty. His writings, at present numbering forty-six, occupy a separate Book and Tract Society; and many volumes of posthumous papers are announced. Those already published possess an unusual popularity, some having run through annual or semi-annual editions for many years. Up till the spring of 1858, he corrected proofs and continued his correspondence. The summer previous he was still able to train his vines. By the end of March he had fought the good fight and finished the course—a young old man of eighty-five.

His life was—like the life of Abraham—one of wonderful faith. From humble little Hansea and the unnoticed struggles of a country priest, he rose to be the Father Gossner of a reverent, religious Germany. The story of his life is well told in a little volume published by the Carters, of New York.

The Jesuits in Rome.

An event of great importance has just occurred in Rome, which, like most Roman events, has escaped attention in Great Britain. The Civilta Cattolica, the Jesuit newspaper, has been suddenly raised by an exercise of the Pope's plenary authority to an integral portion of the Catholic Church. This journal was founded by the Society of Jesus in 1850, and was originally published in Naples; but its editors could not entirely conceal their belief in the great dogma of the "Company,"-the supremacy of the papacy over all temporal authority; and Ferdinand, though a bigot by natnre and an Ultramontane by policy, was still a Bourbon, prepared to worship the pope as long as the pope supported the secular authority, and to resist him if he interfered with any royal prerogative. He ordered the society and their paper to quit Naples. The Civilta Cattolica was consequently removed to Rome, and the whole influence of the society used to extend its circulation, which soon became unrivalled in the Catholic world. Twelve thousand copies are sold in Italy alone, though the paper is as remarkable for the bitterness of its hostility to Italian freedom as for the fanatic Ultramontanism of its doctrine, and the virulence, not to say ruffianism, of its style. It is of course the organ of the special theology, philosophy, and ecclesiastical system upheld by the society, as distinguished not only from the liberal school of Dollinger, but also from the orthodox Catholic system taught in Louvain. This production, which is to strong Catholics what the Record is to educated Calvinists, a paper read but loathed, has just been raised by Pius IX, in a solemn brief addressed to the world, to the position of authorized defender and exponent of the Catholic faith. Its writers are formed into a college in perpetuity, absolutely dependent on the General of the Society of Jesus, and formally authorized to compose and publish writings on behalf of the holy faith and the Holy See. The paper in fact is to be the Catholic Moniteur. The college is to possess presses and a library of its own, and to remain for a time in its present house; but should events compel the college to quit Rome, the Jesuit General has absolute authority to select its headquarters, a singular provision, as he may not choose to select the same place as the pope, and the journal, therefore, though so nearly made infallible, may be beyond papal reach. Should it, however, happen that no suitable retreat can be found, then the property and revenue of the institution are to be left untouched until Providence once more does its duty by restoring the Jesuits to Rome.

The effect produced by this astounding decree, which really makes articles in the Civilta peculiarly binding upon Catholics, has been, as was to be expected, very great. The liberal Catholics are thunderstruck, for they see in the brief the intellectual death-warrant of men like Dollinger and Newman, while the old orthodox party are disgusted at this new proof of the ascendancy of the Jesuits, always detested by the other orders and the secular clergy, both for their oppressiveness and their pretensions to be the only power capable of subduing the modern spirit.

The Jesuits have already gained a point over the Louvain professors in the Ecclesiastical Court, though the decision has not yet been made public. Still, it is known they have gained their point—a fact the more remarkable because to gain it they had to break through the immovable system of the Ecclesiastical Court. Englishmen are apt to imagine that the Pope is absolute in the way Napoleon is absolute; but though this is no doubt true in a sense, the papacy is very strictly bound by its own rules, and the act of Pius in withdrawing the Louvain teaching from the control of the congregation created as much surprise as the Queen's exercise of her legal veto would. It is quoted as proof positive that the Pope, who once prompted a book in defense of Clement XIV's order dissolving the Jesuits, and furnished materials for it from the secret archives, has now surrendered himself absolutely into their hands. They direct the schools of the University, they weigh upon the Secretary of State, they direct the consciences of the college, they provide the whole intellectual food—thin pap it is—allowed to Rome, and they can affect the very bank. They are in fact just in the position which, if history teaches anything, precedes a priesthood's fall.

They are even descending into the streets. In the last half of the Lent season the Pope was induced to order missions to preach in the open streets, on the ground that the evil infection of the times made it incumbent to stir the people to implore that the intervention of Heaven might avert the scourge impending. The sight to be beheld day after day, as the shades of night began to fall on public localities, was truly painful from its grotesque caricature. Long files of cowled and fantastically dressed devotees in gloomy robes, their heads and faces covered with sacks, slits in which let the gleam of two eyes flash through, preceded by monster crucifixes borne aloft, and chanting at tip-top voices lugubrious hymns, were to be seen marching along the streets in every direction, escorting preachers to the temporary stages, from which they delivered frantic harangues to the mob by the light of torches flickering upon the convulsive gesticulations of the ranting friars, who were flanked by a spectral array of mutes, glaring without motion, like spell-bound figures, through the holes in their horridly shapeless masks. Of the preachers who thus performed in the streets and squares religious burlesques of the most spasmodic convulsiveness, all, with hardly an exception, were members of the Society of Jesus, or of some body directly affiliated, such as the Passionists and Lazarists. But the crowning spectacle of the last night of these missions threw all the former exhibitions into the shade. Then the flames of twelve burning heaps cast their lurid light over Rome at dusk on the twelve different sites of missionary preaching, and to the amazement of the bystanders the preachers, with the wild action of men possessed by raving spirits, pitched vehemently on these heaps the incarnation of wickedness, the books condemned by the Index. On the steps of San Carlo, in the Corso, the fashionable church of Rome, the Bishop of Aquile, in the spasmodic attitude of a frantic St. Michael combating the devil before the eyes of the astounded elite, thronging home at twilight on that spring Sunday afternoon from the Pincian, flung into the fire the literary productions of impiety, to the grotesque accompaniment of furiously gesticulated anathemas. But even this strange scene was outdone by the performance got up at two of the preaching sites, at St. Maria Maggiore and at the Church of the Consolazione on the Forum. Here, as a Passionist—one of those weird-like figures, clothed in black, with a wounded heart in glaring white worked on the breast—after working himself into a semblance of delirious paroxism, was devoting the Scriptures of wickedness to destruction by fire, there appeared of a sudden persons who professed to have been moved to remorse by his appeals, and who bore aloft daggers and other weapons, which they declared to have been given them by Free-masons and other secret sectarians, wherewith to work out their impious ends. And then the Passionist man of God felt transported with heavenly joy at the blessing so visibly attending his spasmodic eloquence, and calling upon a smith, who happily found himself among the loiterers and was at once recognized as such, and who as happily had both hammers and anvil ready with him, caused at once those weapons of the devil to be broken to pieces, to the edification of the staring mob. One may have nothing but a shrug of disgust for such a coarse pantomime in Rome, but the thing acquires a lurid aspect when taken in connection with the scenes to which these stimulants to fanatical passion have led at Barletta.

The entire scene now transacting at Rome, the strain put upon all powers, the wild appeals to all passions, the pope's decrees and the pope's admissions, the brief which almost declares a newspaper inspired, and the speech which told M. de Rohan and the 300 French Legitimists that the spiritual power could not perish, wears to observant eyes the appearance which precedes revolution. Swaying between Franco and the Jesuits, Voltaire and Loyola, with a weak old man on the throne, a foreign legion in the barracks, mad priests playing Savonarola in the streets, Russia defiant, Prussia peremptory, Austria powerless, and raging Italy surging all round up to the very gates, the Holy Chair is rocking ominously. If it falls, the destruction will be due mainly to the tremendous strain the weight of the Society of Jesus has placed upon its decaying strength. It might, as Catholics affirm, bear Poter safely, but nothing framed by mortal hands could long carry Ignatius. Even in Paraguay the leaden rule of the men who think they alone can arrest the progress of mankind broke hopelessly down. Even a Neapolitan Bourbon was compelled to expel them from among the people they had helped him to enslave.—Spectator.

A DREAM OF PARADISE.

BY CHRISTIANA G. ROSSETTI.

Once in a dream I saw the flowers
That bud and blossom in Paradise;
More fair they are than waking eyes
Have seen in all this world of ours,
And faint the perfume-bearing rose,
And faint the lily on its stem,
And faint the perfect violet,
Compared with them.

I heard the songs of Paradise;
Each bird sat singing in his place,
A tender song, so full of grace
It soared like incense to the skies.
Each bird sat singing to his mate
Soft cooing notes among the trees;
The nightingale herself were cold
To such as these.

I saw the fourfold river flow,
And deep it was with golden sand;
It flowed between a mossy land
With murmured music grove and low.
It hath refreshment for all thirst,
For fainting spirits strength and rest;
Earth holds no such a draught as this
From east to west.

The Tree of Life stood budding there,
Abundant with its twelvefold fruits;
Eternal sap sustains its roots;
Its shadowing branches fill the air.
Its leaves are healing for the world,
Its fruit the hungry world can feed,
Sweeter than honey to the taste,
And balm indeed.

I saw the gate called Beautiful;
And looked, but scarce could look within;
I saw the golden streets beglo,
And contskirts of the glassy pool.
O harps! O crowns of plenteous stars!
O green palm branches—many leaved—
Eye hath not seen, nor ear hath heard,
Nor heart conceived.

I hope to see these things again,
But not as once in dreams by night;
To see them with my very sight,
And touch, and handle, and attain;
To have all heaven beneath my feet
For narrow way that once they trod;
To have my part with all the saints,
And with my God.

Distinctions in the Gospels.

It is no accident that the New Testament contains four Gospels instead of one. There are important differences in them, which are thus brought out by an English Bishop, in a lecture on the Life of Christ:

1. In regard to their external features and characteristics:

The point of view of the first Gospel is mainly Israelitish; of the second, Gentile; of the third, universal; of the fourth, Christian.

The general aspect, and so to speak, physiognomy of the first, namely, is oriental; of the second, Roman; of the third Greek; of the fourth, spiritual.

The style of the first is stately and rythmical; of the second, terse and precise; of the third, calm and copious; of the fourth, artless and colloquial.

The most striking characteristic of the first is symmetery; of the second, compression; of the third, order; of the fourth, system.

The thought and language of the first are both Hebraistic; of the third, both Hellenistic, while, in the second, thought is often Oriental, though the language is Hebraistic; and in the fourth the language is Hellenistic, but the thought Hebraistic.

2. In respect to their subject matter and contents:

In the first Gospel we have narrative; in the second, memoirs; in the third, history; in the fourth, dramatic portraiture

In the first we often have record of events in their accomplishment; in the second, events in detail; in the third, events in their connection; in the fourth, events in relation to the teaching springing from them.

Thus in the first we often meet with the notice of impressions; in the second, of facts; in the third, of motives; in the fourth, of words spoken.

And, lastly, the record of the first is mainly collective, and often antithetical; of the second, graphic and circumstantial; of the third, didactive and reflective; of the fourth, selective and supplemental.

3. In respect to their portraiture of our Lord.

The first presents him to us merely as the Messiah; the second, mainly as the God-man; the third, as the Redeemer; the fourth, as the only begotten Son of God.

Special Providence.

BY REV. THOMAS GUTHRIE, D.D.

Near by my old country parish there rose from the shelving shore a range of iron-bound cliffs, against which, in stormy weather, the sea dashed with amazing fury. Accompanied by a friend, I one day descended these in search of anemones and sea-weed, in pools which the ebbing tide left at their feet.

While thus engaged, I leaped down on a rock that sloped away into the sea, then roaring and foaming in a strong northeaster. On my feet touching the rock, which was covered, not as I imagined, with dry, but with slippery sea-weed, they went out from below me, and I found myself flat on my back, launching away into the sea. All the danger of the position flashed at once into view; the impossibility of swimming, though I could swim, in such a roaring surf, a horrid death by being hurled on the jagged rocks, and the certainty that though I should get hold of the slipping tangle, it would slide from my grasp and leave me to fall back again, wounded and bleeding, into the deep. My companion could do nothing, but stood petrified at the sight. Yet I was saved to write this paper, and do some little work in the world, by what I believe and, looking modern philosophy in the face, call God's good providence.

It had been a miracle had a monster of the deep swallowed up a man in such circumstances, and, making for a sandy bay, vomited him ashore, safe and sound as Jonah; a miracle had the seabirds, that soared and screamed over the intruder on their domain, borne him aloft on their white wings to set him down safe on the top of the cliffs. The age of miracle is gone; but not that of the special providence, which brings about events where reason can, and religion delights to recognize the hand of God. In my circumstances, when I was moving off like a ship from the slips into the deep, life could only be saved by the arrest of such a fatal launch. For this purpose I put on the brakes, to use railway language, pressing strongly with my heels against the rock; and when descending with constantly accelerating motion, my back to the rock, my face to the sky, my ears filled with the roar of death, and my feet within less than a yard of a watery grave, I was suddenly arrested. It so happened that the heels of my boots had been newly shod with iron. Being rough, one of them, instead of slipping over, caught against a small pebble imbedded in the rock; and I have ever regarded it as a special providence that, in this hour of peril, I had, in the rough iron, the only means which could save life; and that, my mind being kept as calm and collected as it is now, I had the self-possession to remember the rough state of the iron on my boots, and resort to the one only possible means of saving me from a watery grave.

Knowledge of the Bible.

The Emperor Theodosius wrote out the whole New Testament with his own hand, and read some parts of it every day. Theodosius II committed a great part of the Scriptures to memory. George, prince of Transylvania, read over the Scriptures twenty-seven times. Alphonsus, king of Arragon, read the Scriptures over, together with a large commentary, fourteen times.

Sir Henry Wotton, after his customary public devotions, used to retire to his study, and there spend some hours in reading the Bible. Sir John Harop, in like manner, amid his other vocations, made the Book of God so much his study that it lay before him night and day. James Bonnel, Esq., made the Holy Scriptures his constant and daily study; he read them, he meditated upon them, he prayed over them. M. De Renty, a French nobleman, used to read daily three chapters of the Bible, with his head uncovered, and on bended knees.

Lady Frances Hobart read the Psalms over twelve times a year, the New Testament thrice, and the other parts of the Old Testament once. Susannah, countess of Suffolk, for the last eleven years of her life read the whole Bible over twice annually.

Dr. Gough used to read fifteen chapters every day, five in the morning, five after dinner, and five in the evening before going to bed. Mr. Jeremiah Whittaker usually read all the epistles in the Greek Testament twice every fortnight.

Joshua Barnes is said to have read a small pocket Bible, which he usually carried with him, a hundred and twenty times over. Mr. Robert Cotton read the whole Bible through twelve times a year.

Rev. Mr. Romaine studied nothing but the Bible for the last thirty or forty years of his life.

A poor prisoner, being confined in a dark dungeon, had no light, except for a few moments when his food was brought him; he used to take his Bible and read a chapter, saying he could find his mouth in the dark when he could not read.

Henry Willis, farmer, aged eighty-one, devoted every hour that could be spared from his labor during the course of so long a life, to the devout and serious perusal of the Holy Scriptures. He had read with the most minute attention all the books of the Old and New Testaments eight times over, and had proceeded as far as Job in his ninth reading, when his meditations were terminated in death.

Christian Devotion.

The intelligent fidelity of heathen converts to Christ is often a sharp rebuke to the lukewarmness and worldliness of many churchmen in Christian lands. The following record of a convert in India, whom his family sought to induce to abstain from a public profession of belief in Christianity, is an illustration:

"I love Jesus Christ, because He loved me, and I must obey Him. Even if I knew that heaven were full, and there was no room for me, I should still love Him, and live for His honor and glory." Efforts were made to convince him by argument. He said, "Should they even be able to bring sophistical arguments which I cannot answer, I should not be troubled. I have an inward experience of the love of Christ which can never be shaken or removed!" His relatives wept over him as going to perdition. He said to the missionary, "Threats I can bear; arguments do not shake me; but the hardest thing to bear is the persecution of tears. It almost breaks my heart to hear them, but not even for this can I leave Christ." Other converts and inquirers in his native village were told that he was about to return to his old faith. He said, "Should I go back, they will all be discouraged. I thank God that He has helped me to stand firm for their sake. No, even if my own soul were not worth saving, I would cling to Christ, in order to bring them to Him also." Surely, this is the spirit of primitive consecration and endurance.

Large Noses.

The epoch of the grand Louis Quatorze, of France, was the epoch of great men, great ideas, great things, because it was the epoch of large noses. The epoch of the Regency, on the contrary, was the epoch of little men, little art, little every thing, because it was the epoch of little noses. All great times, all great peoples, all great men, have been distinguished by long noses. The nose is the rudder of the human frame, only placed in front. With a long, straight nose one marches direct to his goal, without looking to the right hand or to the left; but, with a short nose, or a turned-up, one advances by taking a zigzag line, fluttering to and fro like a butterfly. This is the reason why children, grisettes, and negroes have no stability of character; in fact have no character at all, but cry and sing without cause, and just as chance directs them. All the generals of the Jesuits have been long-nosed to a man. The order, indeed, is only recruited from men with long noses. All founders of empires and systems have been remarkable for their long, straight noses; such as Alexander the Macedonian, Augustus Cæsar, Napoleon, Aristotle, Moses, Mohammed, and Ignacius Loyola. Socrates, indeed, had little to boast of in this respect, but his favorable disciple, Plato, made up for this deficiency, and had nose enough for both.—Home Journal.

It was a happy sentiment of some devout writer, that God carries His people when they cannot walk; He pities our weakness, but not our sloth.

Actions, looks, words, steps, form the alphabet by which you may spell character.

SLEEP NORTH TO SOUTH.—A learned German, in a recent work, tells us:

In sleep any position except north to south is disagreeable, but from east to west almost intolerable, at least in our hemisphere. Probably in the southern hemisphere it is otherwise. The cause of this phenomenon can obviously be found only in that great magnet which is formed by the earth and its atmosphere—i. e., terrestrial magnetism. The terrestrial magnetism exerts on certain persons, both healthy and otherwise, who are sensitive, a peculiar influence, powerful enough to disturb their rest; and, in the case of diseased persons, disturbing the circulation, the nervous functions, and the equilibrium of the mental powers. There are persons whom I know, the head of whose beds are to the north, and who, in order to wake early, will reverse their usual position in the bed, but without knowing the reason why, beyond "that they could always wake earlier," the rest (sleep) being more broken. I have it related to me that, at a military hospital in Russia, there were some sick patients of highly sensitive natures, and who were rapidly recovering. When necessity compelled them to be removed to another wing of the building they did not get on so well; in fact, prostration seemed to be setting in; and it was found advisable to get them back to their former wards as quick as possible, where the heads of the beds were to the north. I have heard of horses going blind through changing their position from north to south to that of west to east.

AN IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.—The Pall Mall Gazette has the following announcement:

A discovery of at least as vital importance for Egyptology as the celebrated Rosetta stone itself, was made some weeks ago by a party of four German explorers—Roinisch, Roslor, Lepsius, and Weidenhach—at a place called Sanc, the whilom Tanis, the principal scene of Rameses II's enormous architectural undertakings. A stone with Greek characters upon it was found protruding from the ground, and when fully excavated proved to contain a bilingual inscription in no less than thirty-seven lines of hieroglyphic and seventy-six lines of Greek, in the most perfect state of preservation, and dating from the time of the third Ptolemy, Euergetes I, in 238 B.C. The stone measures two meters twenty-two centre-meters in length, and seventy-eight centi-meters in width, and is completely covered by the inscriptions. Their first attempts at editing this important inscription having failed, the travelers returned to the spot, and during a stay of two days, the 22d and 23d of April, copied the inscription most carefully, and photographed it three times. The next post will bring particulars as to the contents, and copies of the document itself.

ITALIAN IGNORANCE AND SUPERSTITION.—The following extract from a letter written by an English lady, residing in Sicily, gives a painful impression of the deplorable ignorance and superstition reigning in these fair regions. Facts such as these should stimulate us in helping forward the efforts at evangelization, in which our Waldensian brethren are engaged:

"We have got some of your bad weather now—torrents of rain, with hail and sleet. The people in Sicily have been crying out for rain, and at Cattanisetta, up in the mountains, they became so furious with St. Michael, their patron saint, that they took off his wings, took away his lance and helmet, wrapped him up in the dirtiest old rags—and you have no idea what dirty rags in Italy are like—and took him away from his place in the church to some dark hole under a convent. In four days the rain came; he was then taken back to the sound of drums and trumpets, his fine clothes put on, his spear and wings restored, and he was presented with a pair of earrings, and other suitable ornaments. Could you imagine such superstition to exist?"

It is a curious fact that, in sacred history, the age, death and burial of only one woman, Sarah, the wife of Abraham, is distinctly noted. Woman's age, ever since, appears not to have been a subject for history or discussion.

"Thank God that I have got my hat back from this congregation!" said a disappointed clergyman, turning it upside down, when it was returned empty to him at the close of a contribution.

Spurgeon says: "Teaching men morals is as though I had a clock that would not go, and I turned round one of the cog-wheels; but faith takes the key and winds up the main-spring, and the whole thing runs on readily!"

NEW ORLEANS:
SATURDAY, . . . JUNE 23, 1866.

TO ADVERTISERS.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has always been well known in this community as the very best advertising medium by which the business men of the city could bring their merchandise, trades, professions, and the like, before country readers in the States just named. This is easily understood when it is remembered that the four hundred preachers who are scattered throughout these States, in the Rio Grande, East Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Montgomery and Mobile Methodist Conferences, are all, more or less, active agents for the paper; and when it is also remembered that our paper circulates among a large class of people who seldom see any other New Orleans paper.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

	1 Month.	6 Mos.	12 Mos.
One square....	$ 5 00	$20	$30 00
Two squares....	7 50	25	40 00
Three squares..	10 00	30	50 00
Four squares...	12 50	35	60 00

Larger advertisements in proportion.

TO OUR AGENTS AND SUBSCRIBERS

1. The price of the paper is FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE; and it will be sent for 12 months only, unless the subscription price is renewed. We propose to keep no other books than the one containing the names of subscribers and their address. Due notice will be given in the paper a few weeks previous to the end of the subscription.

2. All travelling Preachers in the several patronizing Conferences throughout the Southwest are our Agents. They will receive a paper for five subscribers, and be paid one dollar for each subscription over that number.

3. If money forwarded by mail is registered at the Postoffice when it is mailed, we will take the responsibility of its safety. But where it can be forwarded by private hands, the security is greater.

4. Be explicit in writing names and offices and routes—especially in directing to the "New Orleans CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE," as the Church North has already issued a sheet in this city entitled the "New Orleans Advocate."

Address Rev. J. C. KEENER, D. D., or Rev. J. B. WALKER, D. D.

B. F. ALEXANDER, P. E.

We call the favorable attention of our friends to the business card of Messrs. PAYNE, HUNTINGTON & Co., cotton factors, No. 32 Union street.

The Rev. C. C. Gillespie, the former editor of this paper, now editing and publishing the Houston Telegraph, is on a visit in this city. We were glad to see him looking none the worse for war; having no marks of bonds or imprisonment, and but few if any gray hairs. His paper is one of the best of our exchanges and the best in Texas.

PERSONAL.—We notice that our venerable Bishop Early has been seriously injured by an accident on the Danville Railroad. The cars were thrown off an embankment. He was, at last accounts, doing well—hopes entertained of his recovering from the injury.

GERMAN PIC-NIC.—The German Methodists of the M. E. Church South in the Third District intend holding a Pic-Nic for the benefit of the Craps street Church, on the FOURTH OF JULY, in the Barracks. Their object is a very laudable one—to raise funds for finishing their Church. They have been long struggling to build a church worthy of Methodism and the increasing demands of the Protestant German population in this city. A few persons have borne the weight of the enterprise for years. They deserve help, and we doubt not will receive it from the fast-friends of our Church, both Germans and Americans. Many parents may already be planning recreation for the young people on that national day. We commend to them this proposed gathering of flowers, music, honest people, bright faces, and substantial cheer.

NORTHERN PRESBYTERIAN COALITION.

The present year has long been set apart as the period for the fulfilment of many important prophecies. And no one can doubt that some new tide in the affairs of men has fairly set in, who reflects upon the recent sessions of the two Assemblies at St. Louis. The spectacle of Two Schools of Theologians, diverse in doctrine toto coelo, who for long years have warred against each other, each in the defense of vital points of faith which they declared to be irreconcilable, at last meeting in the same town, at the same time, commingling and flowing for awhile in the same channel, and taking steps preliminary to a perfect union, is enough to convince the most skeptical that the sword has actually returned to its scabbard. If we had been asked twenty-five years ago for an illustration of the prophet's vision, "The leopard shall lie down with the kid," we could have answered, it means such overpowering influence of Christian harmony as you might suppose were Robert J. Breckinridge to fold a New School brother warmly to his bosom. Never was there displayed more of the odium theologicum than by the Old School and the New School Divines of that period; but now all is peace.

However wonderful this concord is in itself, it is more so in view of the times in which it obtains. The whole country has been stirred by the angry passions of war to its depths, and the waves have scarcely had time to subside when this wondrous grace of a United Presbyterianism emerges from the sea foam. So the Greek myths had a philosophy in them. The Millenarians ought to find support in these theological harmonies—surely something is about to happen. Though we believe their theory is, that things are to get disastrously worse until, "as in the days of Noah," they shall provoke the interference of a visible "power and coming." The question presents itself to the Christian philosopher, how it came to pass that such overflowing love should spring out of the bosom of strife. Judging by our experience down this way, it required all the prayer and faith and grace one could command to maintain the life and the spirit of Christianity, so as that love and charity should not be quite borne away by the tumult and passion of the war. But the graces of those people flourish in the fire!

And yet, judging by the "deliverances" of the New School Assembly, there is something of earth still left in these godly men. The Assembly sent five of those "deliverances" to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, as follows:

First: Notice that the Assembly approves of the Freedmen's Bureau and Civil Rights bill, and demands negro suffrage.

Second: That if negro suffrage cannot be had, the Constitutional basis of representation must be altered so as to keep the Southern traitors and rebels in their places.

Third: That loyalty is the highest civil virtue, and treason the highest civil crime; and therefore, that condign punishment must be visited upon the fomenters and representatives of rebellion.

Fourth: That ministers and people shall pray for the President, for Congress, for the Cabinet, for the Judges of the Courts, and the officers of the army and navy.

Fifth: That the members of churches shall henceforth set aside all partisan and sectional aims and low ambition, and do their full duty as Christian freemen, that the sacred interests of national loyalty and national unity may be enlarged and perpetuated.

We rejoice indeed that there is a body of Presbyterians in the South separated and distinct from this coalesced Presbyterianism. We have no right to question those Two Assemblies when they profess love for each other, but it is evident that they indulge in a good deal of outside hate: hatred for sin, of course; for slavery, if there is any left; but O how they do hate disloyalty—in the South—anywhere; they look on it "as the sin of witchcraft," especially when it refuses to pray for two-thirds of Congress. As to the Presbytery of Louisville, it must find shelter no where; whoever harbors it shall "ipso facto be dissolved."

And so these people in the North, Assemblies and Conferences, go on: under the plea of "loyalty" they rake over the ashes of war for coals of vengeance. Afraid lest the country and the Church should fall back again into a state of tranquil peace, they talk of rebellion and cry for justice, and band together in order to swell their power and clamor. Ecclesiastics who were themselves "exempt from service," assume the role of Martyrs, and cry, "How long dost thou not judge and avenge our blood?"

There must be some powerful influence at work on these Knight-Templar Theologians. Their unity and concord argues the presence of some principle stronger than the dividing force of a thirty years' theological war. That it is the "fruit of that righteousness which is sown in peace of them that make peace," we do not believe. Their "peace" is, we fear, that which Pilate and Herod made over their illustrious prisoner. It portends evil. What, Robert J. Breckinridge melted into love! That Theological Cromwell, whose sanctity of manner never culminates but in his highest periods of vindictive controversy; who never uses his dagger without saying "my brother!" During the war he made a speech to a body of soldiers, which, for savagery, surpassed the utterances even of that heated period. He told them that nationalities were cemented by blood; that the more blood there was shed, the stronger would be the country; and to remember that every blow they struck and every drop of blood they shed added a year to the life-time of the Government. As we hope to be mercifully judged, we may well afford to leave the man himself with his Judge; but as the moving and guiding spirit of the Assembly, his antecedents and record must of necessity enter into our estimate of the deliverances and moods and utterances of that most loyal body.

If these Northern Christians are men of true peace, why do they trouble themselves to keep pace with those politicians who are still lashing their sides? men who kept out of harm's way, who smelt the battle afar off, and responded not; but who now "Raven as a wolf: in the morning they devour the prey, and at night they divide the spoil." If they do not attempt to throw oil on these waters, "can faith save them?" It would seem that the evil passions which have been let loose are the last to leave the Church. "Fury is not in me," saith the Lord; and the Almighty will not hold guiltless those men who profess to be ministers of the Gospel of peace but who will not "follow after peace." What means this cry about rebellion? is it not dead, buried? or will not the ghost of this rebel brother lie quiet in his gore?

We are free to say that complete and wonderful as the victory is which has been achieved over us by Northern skill and arms, we have yet to see the first exhibition towards us of grace, love or magnanimity, either in that Party or in those Churches which mainly contributed to the result. The continuous effort to make out that a revolution of eight millions of people, and a war of proportions beyond precedent, is a mere Pennsylvania Whisky Rebellion, evidences the truth we affirm. The only slight exception is the movement of Dr. Whedon, and from this, true to the instincts of his blood and school, upon the slightest pretence he himself drew back. So far from magnanimity, it cannot be disguised that the dominant party is not willing to let the country assuage, lest the war should be forgotten and its occupation gone. To revive the past by military trials, by laws disfranchising the South, by unequal taxation, and by endless denunciation, is its constant effort. Meanwhile, the Churches of the North are bidding against each other for place and power. Willing equally to affiliate with the politicians, it is a struggle who shall be able to wheel into action the largest and best drilled membership. So far the Northern Methodists claim to have done, by large odds, more for the support of the Republican party than all others. The effort to compete in this contest has doubtless moved the Two Assemblies, Old and New, to lay aside minor differences, to coalesce, and after glory run. Peter said, "Lord, behold here are two swords." And it may be that while these people have sheathed one, they do it in order to grasp the other.

Memphis Christian Advocate.

This is a large and well printed sheet, full of most excellent reading. The editor displays good taste in its selections, and the general arrangement indicates a practiced hand. The original matter is able, and the whole publication evidences much labor and a genius for editing. Published at Memphis; price $3 per annum.

New England Methodists.

A New England Methodist Convention was held on the 5th of June in Boston. It was composed of all the traveling preachers in the New England Conferences, and one lay delegate from each society. There were one thousand delegates and one thousand visitors. Hon. Wm. Clifton, Lieut. Governor of Massachusetts, presided.

A committee of arrangements had perfected everything beforehand—selected themes for essays and discussion, limited time for each, etc. Letters were read from Gen. Grant, Judge Chase, Secretary Harlan, Senator Wiley, and Mayor Lincoln of Boston. We append a list of the topics of the essay:

1. The importance of more systematic efforts to strengthen the weak places in our Zion, and to extend the Gospel into fields among us. Would not a return to the circuit-system in some portions of the work be beneficial both to the temporal and spiritual interests of the Church?—Rev. George Webber, D. D.

2. How can the social power of the Church be more fully developed, and by organization or otherwise, so directed as to subserve the interests of our cause?—Rev. J. H. Twombly.

3. Home and Sunday School instruction in the doctrines and usages of the Church.—Rev. James Thurston.

4. The Education of the Ministry.—Rev. S. M. Vail, D. D.

5. Would a more extensive system of ministerial transfers subserve the interests of the Church?—Rev. L. D. Barrows, D. D.

6. Church Finance and the Support of the Ministry.—Wm. C. Brown, Esq.

7. The Endowment and Patronage of our Literary Institutions.—Rev. Jos. Cummings, D. D.

8. The duty of New England Methodism to the South.—Hon. J. J. Perry.

9. What ought New England to do in the Centenary movement?—Rev. D. Patten, D. D.

10. How can the old connectional spirit of Methodism be revived and perpetuated?—Rev. A. Prince.

11. The necessity of Spirituality to the preservation and growth of Methodism.—Rev. Wm. D. Malcom.

A long series of resolutions were presented by the Business Committee, and adopted, and an able address was read by Rev. Dr. Barrows, of the N. H. Conference. All the proceedings of the Convention are to be published in a volume. One of the most important papers read before the Convention, and which produced the happiest and most profound impression, was the report of the Statistical Committee—a portion of which we append, from the Boston Journal:

The Committee on Statistics made a very elaborate report, in which it was shown that the growth of the Methodists in New England has been in the following ratio, as compared with Baptist denominations:

In Boston, increase of Baptists from 1850 to 1865, 12 per cent.; Methodists, 43 per cent. Boston and vicinity, during the same time, Baptists, 29 per cent.; Methodists, 67 per cent.

In Massachusetts, increase of Baptists, 14 per cent.; Methodists, 37 per cent.

In New-England, increase of Baptists, 7 per cent.; Methodists, 28 per cent.

As compared with Congregationalists—Boston, from 1850 to 1865, increase of Congregationalists, 7 per cent; Methodists 43 per cent. Boston and vicinity—Congregationalists, 39 per cent.; Methodists, 67 per cent.

Massachusetts — Congregationalists, 16 per cent.; Methodists, 37 per cent.

New England—Congregationalists, 15 per cent.; Methodists, 28 per cent.

Increase as compared with population—1850 to 1865—Boston, increase of population, 40 per cent.; Methodists, 43 per cent.

Boston and vicinity—increase in population, 58 per cent.; Methodists, 67 per cent.

Massachusetts — increase of population, 27 per cent; Methodists, 37 per cent.

New-England — increase of population from 1850 to 1860, 14 per cent.; Methodists, 53 per cent.

The Methodists of New-England number 104,000 members and local preachers, 111,000 Sabbath-school scholars, and 370,000 volumes in the Sabbath-school libraries. Rhode Island and Connecticut have the largest number of volumes for the use of the scholars. Rhode Island and Massachusetts have the largest number of scholars as compared with members. There are 910 churches, and 430 parsonages, valued at $4,250,000, or at the rate of $40 for each member. The largest average is in Rhode Island, where the value of this property to each member is $81."

New Orleans Commercial.

This Daily deserves the patronage of all Southerners. It advocates the development of the industrial arts and commerce in the South. It is quite possible for the individuals of a community to be independent and the community itself fatally dependent. In the nineteenth century property is not the least of a people's sins, if they have not that property in the shape of engines of iron, ships, manufactures and such other elements of strength. There prevails throughout the South a notion that agricultural or commercial pursuits are more elevating and noble than mechanical. This prejudice must yield to the true and more practical one, that a people is self-supporting and independent in proportion to the amount of educated muscle in the country. We most heartily wish that our people might produce no more cotton than they can themselves manufacture. We have coal mines, iron mines, copper mines, marble quarries, which in themselves are the great sources of commercial and manufacturing wealth. These should be worked and explored. We therefore welcome this paper. Office No. 18 St. Charles street, formerly office of the True Delta.

Monthly Meeting.

The membership of the Moreau street Church were assembled, by previous call of the pastor, at 4½ o'clock on Sabbath evening, June 10th, for the purpose of organizing the Church Meeting. The meeting was opened by reading the Scriptures, singing and prayer by one of the members.

The Pastor, being President ex officio, took the chair. He stated that the first business of the meeting was to elect a Secretary. In order to expedite matters as much as possible, he appointed a committee of three to nominate a suitable person. The committee retired, made the selection, and in a few minutes reported to the meeting. The nominee was elected unanimously.

The President then explained the objects of the meeting, by reading and commenting on the bill passed by the General Conference.

The roll was called, and the status and whereabouts of each member was inquired into as his or her names were called.

The names of those who had left the city permanently were dropped from the list.

The names of those concerning whom no satisfactory account could be obtained were erased; subject to being restored should they ever come forward and give satisfactory reasons.

The names of those who had withdrawn by letter were announced, and dropped.

The names of those who had united with other denominations were also dropped.

The names of the sick were reported.

No reports having been previously prepared by the Pastor, Class-Leaders, etc., and not wishing to protract the session beyond a reasonable length, the meeting adjourned, to meet again on the following Sabbath evening.

JUNE 17.

The meeting assembled pursuant to adjournment.

After the introductory exercises, the call of the roll and the reading of the minutes, the reports were called for.

1st. The Pastor's report, containing the number of accessions, conversions, baptisms, etc.

2d. The report of the Class Leaders, showing the number usually in attendance, the interest manifested, etc.

3d. The report of the Superintendent of the Sabbath School, showing the number of teachers and scholars, the condition of the library, etc.

4th. The report of the Board of Stewards, exhibiting the amount of receipts, expenditures, etc.

These reports were made, and those of them that were in writing were ordered to be spread upon the minutes. [They ought all to be made in writing.]

After these, the President called for any suggestions that any of the members might think fit to make, having in view the good of the Church.

This called forth a number of resolutions and motions—one in reference to repairs needed on the church building; one having in view the relief of the poor of the church; another in regard to the payment of the monthly expenses of the church; and lastly, a resolution to the effect that each member of the church obligate himself or herself to visit every other member, at least once every three months, for the purpose of cultivating Christian unity and sympathy.

The session having been already protracted rather long, this last resolution was laid on the table for consideration at our next meeting.

On motion, the meeting adjourned to meet again on the first Sabbath in July.

Respectfully, J. J. L.

THE POOR.—An ancient writer has styled the poor "the receivers of Christ's rents." "The poor," said Bishop Wilson, "receive at our hands the rights and dues belonging unto God." And the mother of the Chevalier Bayard, in her advice to him says, "Be bountiful, of the goods that God shall give you, to the poor and needy, for to give for his honor's sake never made any man poor; and the alms that you shall dispense will greatly profit both your body and soul."—Mrs. Sigourney.

MR. EDITOR: I have entered upon my third series, or, in Methodist nomenclature, round of Quarterly Conferences, having commenced early that more time might be afforded me for holding protracted meetings during the summer and fall. I have had to encounter more water this year than ever before. By long rides through rain and mud, and by swimming creeks and sloughs, I have been enabled to meet all my appointments. The past winter and spring have been very unfavorable for the labors of the itinerant; but, even under very unpropitious circumstances, my heart has been cheered by the hope of doing good and saving souls, and the fatigue of travel has been lessened by the assurance of cheerful fires and hearty welcomes. Though very often the weather has been unfavorable for religious services, our meetings have not been altogether in vain. We have had some excellent love-feasts and happy communion seasons. Some souls have also been converted, the church somewhat built up, and the membership encouraged. I can report, up to the present time, forty-seven conversions and reclamations; and it is cause of thankfulness that any sinners have been converted, yet, when I reflect that the conference year is half gone, what a meager report!

I recently closed a meeting at Carrollton which resulted in twenty-eight conversions and reclamations; and, considering the circumstances and surroundings, it was truly an excellent meeting. Such interest on the subject of religion, I am informed, has not been felt there for a number of years. I spent two weeks of what might be called my rest time very pleasantly, with that kind people, and though I had desired to have attended the General Conference, I do not regret that my time was so agreeably and profitably employed.

The acts and doings of the General Conference, I presume, will generally meet with approbation; though where there was such diversity of opinion among its members, it cannot be expected that every act will meet with universal approval. But though we may not fully endorse all that was done, yet it may be our duty to acquiesce, and all go to work to carry out the changes and plans inaugurated, that universal harmony may prevail and urge forward the glorious conquests of Gospel light and truth. It is the prayer of all true Methodists, that, under the guidance of Divine Providence, the Church may prove a more efficient agent than ever in the evangelization of the world. Whatever may be our polity, it can never be efficient without the annointing of the Holy Ghost. What we need most is a "separated" and consecrated ministry; and when the church, properly aroused to realize this, places the ministry in such a position that it may be the case, she will put on her robes of unparalleled light and her armor of irresistible conquest.

I want a preacher for the Yazoo valley—a zealous, "able-bodied," warm-hearted preacher, and one who, in high water, is able and willing to "paddle his own canoe." Can the Bishops furnish me one?

An interesting Sunday school celebration and pic-nic came off recently at Yazoo City, where prizes were awarded. "The premiums were beautiful books. Keys Russel took the first, for reciting sixteen thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight verses of Scripture; Ernest Massey the second, for reciting twelve thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven verses; and Frank Russell the third, for reciting three thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven verses, in two months." Quite a deep interest has been awakened in the school, under the efficient superintendency of Mrs. Dr. Kidd.

The preachers on this district are at their posts, earnestly engaged in the prosecution of their work, and I hope before the conference year closes many may be added to the church. The condition of the country is such that in many places, at this season of the year, it is impracticable to protract the quarterly meetings; but I confidently expect during the summer and fall months, when the circumstances will be more propitious, that extensive revivals will be enjoyed.

Fraternally, J. M. PUGH.

Yazoo District, Miss. Conf., June 1, 1866.

P. S.—A certain ecclesiastical dignitary has recently passed through my District, and has, as I am informed, in many instances, and I believe generally, endeavored to make the impression that the Methodist Church is waning; that she is fast coming over to Mother Church, and that a half dozen of our most distinguished ministers had gone to his Church; and thus has, wherever opportunity offered, been endeavoring to proselyte our members. The rebuffs he sometimes meets with ought to convince him that he should desist from his proselyting course. We can spare him a dozen or two more and scarcely miss them. His church is greatly indebted to us for its ministry. I saw it stated recently that about two-thirds, if I mistake not, of their ministers came from other churches. This proselyting course, I think, needs a rebuke, and when my ecclesiastical jurisdiction is entered, and Methodist families are sought after for this purpose, I feel like administering it. P.

Sunday School Items.

We see something now in the shape of a report, in the Western Christian Advocate (Church North), of "The Second Annual Conference of the Sunday Schools of Ohio," held at Dayton. It continued for several days, which were filled up with most appropriate exercises, discussions, illustrative class exhibitions.

In this connection we give an account of the meeting of a Teachers' Institute, held in Washington. On this all interesting subject we are thankful for any contributions:

The second meeting of this Institute, held in Washington, was the most complete success we have known or heard of in the whole history of the institute movement. It was not largely attended; many of the teachers having been released from their ordinary engagements in order to attend the children's jubilee on the Capitol grounds the day before, were unable to leave a second day. Those who did come were abundantly rewarded. It was a day of hard work, not only by the leader, Rev. J. H. Vincent, but by a majority of the teachers present.

The programme was carefully prepared long beforehand, and widely circulated among the schools. It comprised four general departments:

1. The teacher acquiring knowledge.
2. The teacher communicating knowledge.
3. Sacred Geography and Antiquities.
4. Infant class and question drawer.

To the consideration of the first topic, two hours were assigned. The following questions were placed in the programme:

1. Why does a Sunday school teacher need a general preparatory training in order to teach specific lessons successfully?
2. What does this general preparatory training comprise?
3. Why does an educated Sunday school teacher need special preparation for each lesson?
4. What is your method of preparing a Bible lesson?

As each question was announced, slips of white paper were distributed, and all were requested to give concise answers in writing. The replies were sent to the conductor's desk and read out. They were then combined, arranged, condensed, put on the blackboard, and copied by the teachers present. The number and thoroughness of the answers was very gratifying.

The institute then proceeded to examine the Scriptures, giving an account of the birth and youth of Christ—first ascertaining when, where, and by whom they were written, and then arranging the harmonized account in a series of topics. After this the institute took for a subject of study The Wonderful Watchnight, Luke ii, 8–14, and examined it as a regular teachers' or preparatory class would do.

In the same way the remaining subjects were disposed of. The evening session was fully attended. An address on infant classes, with a specimen lesson, was given by Mr. Vincent. The question drawer was opened. Questions on Sunday school subjects were sent to the conductor's table from every part of the house. Each was read, answers were received—any person being permitted to give a short reply, but no regular speeches allowed. This system condenses things admirably, and packs as much valuable matter into thirty minutes as ordinary speech-making conventions give in a session of three hours.

GOLD.—The gold market has been surging violently during the week. This stormy period demands a financial Barometer. A man may be rich in the morning and poor in the afternoon of the same day. A difference of 20 per cent. in value in a few hours suggests the hazard which waits upon all speculation in money. Actual hostilities have begun in Europe. This is a sufficient reason for the disturbance of our currency. A paper medium must, in its nature, be subject to great vibration in the disturbed atmosphere of the political world.

WEEKLY SUMMARY OF NEWS.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Both Houses have finally passed a bill to dispose of about three millions of public lands in the South to actual settlers. It is in effect extending the provisions of the Homestead bill over those lands. It restricts the amount of land to be entered by one person to eighty acres for two years, after which one hundred and sixty acres may be entered. Until January next, all who have taken part in the rebellion are excluded from the privileges of the bill. After that this restriction is removed.

The House Committee on Post Roads decided to-day to report to the House the Senate bill authorizing the construction of draw bridges across the Upper Mississippi river. The committee do not look with favor on the project, but decided to let the House dispose of it as they saw proper.

The Attorney General to-day appeared before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, and argued against the proposed repeal of the neutrality laws, as recommended in the Fenian resolutions referred to them last Monday. Mr. Speed did not think the law ought to be interfered with, as it was essential for occasions like the present. There is no prospect that the committee will report in favor of the repeal of the law, though the pressure from prominent and influential Fenians is very great.

The Senate Finance Committee have finished the Tax bill. It will be reported on Monday. The committee have yielded to the Eastern manufactures and changed the cigar tax from a part ad valorem one to a full specific tax. The income is changed from the House bill so as to allow it to remain as under the present law, and the committee propose to raise the salary of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to $6,000.

The only pardons ordered by the President to be issued to individuals charged with treason were two—one to B. T. Buckner, of Louisiana, and one to William S. Oldham, of Texas—under the twelfth clause of the amnesty proclamation excepting all those from general amnesty who have been indicted for treason in any United States Court. Oldham was a Confederate Senator from Texas.

WASHINGTON, June 15.—The report of General Humphreys, concerning the losses by crevasses in Louisiana sent in to day, shows the breaks to be numerous and unusually disastrous. He recommends appropriations for repairs as follows: Yazoo bottoms, $305,000; eight levees on Teesas bottoms $295,000; three levees on the Mississippi delta, $217,000, an aggregate of $817,000.

He says that the crops of cotton growing in the alluvial regions above Red river in 1860 would amount to $108,000,000, and the sugar crop below that would, at present prices, amount to fifty millions of dollars. The complete repair of all levees would require three million nine hundred thousand, divided between Arkansas, Louisiana and Mississippi. He estimates all arial lands at three hundred and seventeen thousand square miles, of which one hundred and twenty-three thousand are in the sugar region, of which one third might be brought under cultivation, or a million and a half acres for sugar, and seven million acres for cotton.

WASHINGTON, June 20.—The secretary of the treasury, in a communication to the House, expresses an opinion, based upon his observation of the operation of the law of 1861, that an additional enactment, authorizing the resumption by the Southern States, respectively, of the remainder of the direct tax due from each would, in view of the present impoverished condition of their people, prevent much hardship in individual cases, and save from confiscation the property of many persons against whom the government has no grounds of complaint, while no public interest would be injuriously affected by the change. He states that should this policy be adopted, the collection of taxes under the present system might, and ought to be discontinued until an opportunity for assumption be offered. Whether the amount realized from resales of property bid in for the government should or should not be allowed to the States respectively, in computing the taxes still due, is a question which is well deserving of consideration, but which is submitted without comment.

FOREIGN.

It is fully confirmed that the proposed conference has been abandoned, owing to the demands of Austria, which were regarded by England, France and Russia as tantamount to refusal. All negotiations are broken off by the neutrals, and it remains for armed powers to negotiate among themselves or commence war. Hopes of peace have almost vanished.

The London Times says that daily, almost hourly, the chances of peace fade away.

It believes that the first events will occur in the Elbe Duchies, but that the great move of Austria will be to attempt to possess herself of Silesia.

The Daily News says appearances indicate that a declaration of war, or manifesto equivalent to it will proceed from Prussia.

The Prussian Government had issued a circular note to neutral powers, charging Austria with a flagrant breach of treaties by referring the Holstein question to the Diet.

Prussia also sent a protest to Austria, declaring that the measures announced by Austria violated the treaties of Gastien, and cause a suspension of the Duchies, and before the two powers to the position accorded by the treaty of Vienna.

An Austrian circular declares that Austria will observe the Gastien Convention until a definite settlement of the question of the Duchies is effected.

Her only object in referring the matter to the Diet was to effect such settlement.

Military preparations are reported from all quarters.

After another long debate in the House of Commons on the Reform bill, Mr. Hoyt's amendment in favor of its postponement was withdrawn, and the bill ultimately referred to a committee.

The impression was abroad that the measure would be withdrawn, but the movement gave no indication of such a step.

A licensed victualler, near the monument, in London, visited the Derby this week, and took with him a pigeon, to send home the names of the first three horses in the race. As soon as the numbers of the winning horses were hoisted he tied a piece of paper round the pigeon's neck and started it off on its journey home, where his friends were waiting its arrival. About ten minutes after the news was known of the arrival of the pigeon a neighboring licensed victualler received a telegram from his friends on the race course to inform him of the result of the race. The news thus arrived more speedily by the pigeon than the telegraph by one-third of the time. This was no doubt on account of the senders of the messages on the course having to wait their turn, as the news was received at Tattersall's three or four minutes after the race. The pigeon performed the journey in fourteen minutes, which is, allowing for the direct path in which it travels, about a mile per minute.

The French minister of public works has awarded a gold medal to Albaret & Co., of Linncourt, for a steam coach to run on ordinary roads. This coach recently descended a hill from Laon to the railway terminus at the rate of five miles an hour, and afterwards ascended the same hill in eight minutes, with a weight of five tons. The trial was repeated with so much success that it is now ascertained that the engine can draw a weight of thirty-nine tons on an ordinary road at the rate of from three to four miles an hour.

A determined double suicide, near Paris, has just been brought to light. A river keeper on the Marne, while passing along the banks near Johnville-le-Point observed the bodies of a male and female floating near the surface. Having brought them to land, they were found to be bound together, the man's left arm to the woman's right, while the former had also about ten pounds weight of stones in his pockets. They were each elegantly dressed, bore no marks of violence, and had evidently been in the water about a fortnight.

A quaint letter from Dr. Guillotin has been discovered. It reads thus: "Mon cher—The punishment which I have invented is so gentle—so gentle that really it is only the idea of death which could make it disagreeable. Indeed, if one were not thinking of death, one would only experience the sensation of a slight and pleasant coolness on the neck, et voila tout!"

During the first day of the panic in London the Submarine Telegraph Company transmitted and received 2155 messages to and from the continent.

BURNING OF A COOLIE SHIP—672 LIVES LOST.

The Italian ship Napoleon Canevero sailed from Macao on the 8th of March, with a crew of forty, and six hundred and sixty-three coolie emigrants, bound to Callao. Part of the cargo consisted of eight thousand boxes of Chinese fire crackers. A few hours after leaving port the officers of the ship discovered that there was a plot among the coolies to poison them, and that two hundred had agreed to revolt and if possible capture the ship. Some of the ringleaders were flogged, while others were placed in irons. At four o'clock the next day the interpreter reported to the chief mate, Mr. A. F. Faw, that the coolies intended to revolt at five o'clock. To the captain of the vessel they denied any such intention, and the provisions were served to them. At a quarter past five o'clock the coolies revolted and broke up the sleeping benches, into which they had driven spikes, for weapons. They also had several knives, spades and two cutlasses taken from the men on guard.

The crew fired upon them, and, after about thirty had been shot, the captain called upon them to surrender. They refused and set fire to some stuff in the hold of the vessel, probably thinking that the crew would rush down the hatchway to extinguish it, giving the coolies below a chance to go upon deck and join their comrades. The fire rapidly increased, and the coolies again refused to surrender. Two boats were lowered and swamped; but a third was lowered in safety and several of the crew got into it and put off from the ship's side. The captain, mate and supercago were saved by swimming to one of the swamped boats, from which they were taken by the crew in the third boat lowered; but the doctor, storekeeper, interpreter and several others of the crew perished. At ten o'clock that night the vessel blew up, the fire having reached that part of the hold in which the eight thousand boxes of Chinese fire crackers were stowed, and all those on board perished.—Boston Traveller, June 13th.

Extract from Gen. Steadman's Report.

There are on these islands one hundred and forty-one valid possessory titles to land held by freedmen, under the order of Gen. Sherman. They encumber thirty-two plantations, situated on James, Johns, Wadmalaw and Edisto Islands. The number of freedmen now on all the South Carolina islands is about 30,000. They form, however, but a small proportion of the aggregate number who have occupied the islands since Gen. Sherman's order was issued; many of those who first came here remained on the island but a short time, and then returned to their homes on the main land.

Others, who made small crops, gathered them in, and left to seek more profitable employment. A large majority of the freedmen, who still remain on the islands are in destitute circumstances. On Wadmalaw and Edisto islands, many who are cultivating lands for themselves would be compelled to abandon their crops were it not for the provisions furnished by the planters. Last season Government rations and clothing were furnished to most of the freedmen, who were working on their own account, with the agreement that they should afterwards pay for these supplies, furnished out of the proceeds of their crops, but none of the outlays thus incurred have been repaid.

We found, on inquiry, that some of the freedmen raised good crops, and could easily have reimbursed the Government for the supplies provided for them, but most of them were swindled out of all they made by a gang of white sharpers who, pretending to be their friends, gained permission to come upon the islands and set up stores, provided with sweetmeats, cheap jewelry and worthless articles of dress, with which they plundered these poor creatures of their hard earnings. The same class of persons who thus defrauded the freedmen last year have made extensive preparations to secure this season's crop by the same means.

We found a number of their stores on Edisto and Wadmalaw islands, and will mention one case where one of them is connected with a plantation as an example. This store is on a farm rented and cultivated by a Mr. Underwood, of Boston, Massachusetts. Accompanied by Gen. Scott, we stopped on the plantation and investigated the condition of the freedmen thereon, working by the "task," which is precisely the same manner in which their former owners worked them. The price per task is fifty cents, which, if paid in money or its equivalent, would be fair wages; but, in lieu of money, tickets were given then, on which was printed "Good for——in provisions at our store." These tickets were taken up by the storekeeper, with corn at $3 per bushel, and other articles at similarly exorbitant prices.

There was no meat in the shop. The freedpeople gathered around us while we were there, and complained bitterly of their treatment, stating that with the wages paid them they were unable to earn enough to buy, at the prices charged, their necessary subsistence. If these freedmen were paid in money for their labor, they could escape the extortions of the shop keeper, but with the tickets issued to them they are compelled to pay the prices charged and take whatever the store-keeper sees fit to give him. Competition, which would greatly reduce the price of provisions, is prevented, at least on this plantation, by military orders. Mr. Tolls, on an adjacent plantation, was selling corn to these people at $2 per bushel, and taking Underwood tickets in payment, but he was compelled to desist by special order.

LOUISIANA INTELLIGENCE.

CATAHOULA.—The Harrisonburg New Era of the 13th says: From every quarter we learn that storms have prevailed, causing loss of life and property.

DUEL.—On Thursday, the 14th inst., a duel took place at Waterloo, in Point Coupee, between Messrs. Robin and Ed. Vigue, with shot guns, distance forty steps. Both parties were badly wounded, Mr. Robin having received a ball through both hips, and Mr. Vigue was badly wounded with three buckshot in the legs.—Baton Rouge Advocate.

PLAQUEMINE.—We take the following "Home Items" from the Empire Parish: Though the weather has been of late too wet and cool for the season, the crops in this section of country continue to be in a prospering condition; Barring accidents, we are safe in stating that the yield of the cane and rice will be next fall much above the average of the last few years.

If we are not entirely exempt from sickness, yet it cannot be denied that the sanitary condition of this community could be worse than it is now.

Our district court will not be in session before next October. We understand that there are, so far, but a few civil and criminal cases on the docket. Legal business does not flourish here at present.

Large crops of sweet potatoes will be raised in the upper part of this community.

The chinchone is still prevailing within the limits of this parish.

If not at all, the greatest number of the people on the coast continue to be in possession of excellent health.

The late heavy rains did some damage to the water melon fields at and near Jesuits' Bend.

From the 1st of last September up to date, 18,517 sacks of clean rice, of 100 pounds each, have been shipped from this coast to the city market.

We have had fine weather this week for the crops, and everything is growing rapidly. The water in the overflowed part of our parish has been fluctuating for some time past; sometimes at a stand, and sometimes falling, but now it seems that there is no doubt it is falling steadily. We hope it may continue to fall, and that this will be the last overflow our parish will ever suffer.—Houma Civic Guard, 16th.

THE CROPS IN TEXAS.

A Richmond letter of the 4th says the cotton worms are making sad havoc with the cotton in that section.

The Galveston Bulletin of the 19th says: Gens. Kiddoo and Gregory have just returned from an inspecting tour through Washington, Grimes and the adjacent counties. They report that the planters are generally satisfied with their laborers, who are working as well as could be expected. In some places where it was very wet the grass has got the start, but the negroes are working very hard to get ahead of it. The Generals assembled the hands at many places and gave them wholesome talk, taking for their text, "get out of the grass." They told the darkies that it was their duty to work early and late in the present strait. The Trinity bottoms, which were overflown, are being replanted. Those planters from other places that went there for hands returned without them. In some places the stock was drowned. Of course it will be impossible to do much without mules and horses. When all the drawbacks from bad seed, rains and overflows are accounted for, Gen. Gregory estimates that the crop will not fall short of the calculation on the first of May more than twenty-five per cent. They regard the whole appearance as hopeful.

The Dallas Herald of the 9th says: The wheat harvest is now over, the crop is the largest ever raised in Dallas county, and in many cases the yield will be as much as twenty-five bushels per acre. We think the amount of wheat in this county, for sale, will reach at least three hundred thousand bushels, and should our farmers be able to sell their surplus grain for anything like a fair price, say one dollar per bushel, they will be all right as regards money.

THE LAKE SUBSCRIPTION FUND.—The books are now open in this city for subscriptions to the Lake navigation fund, and the list is headed by $1000 from the house of J. M Murphy & Co. We shall have more to say in regard to the matter in our next issue.—Jefferson Jamplecute, 12th.

The Convention of the Episcopal Church assembled in our city this morning, with a goodly number of ministers and laymen present. We are informed that they will probably get through with the business of the Convention by Saturday noon, after which the ministers and members will leave for Galveston, to dedicate the new Episcopal Church in that city on Sunday.—Houston Star.

At Savannah, one evening last week, a cannon in the Court House square was mischievously fired to the alarm of many, and the annoyance of some sick persons. One man, however, who had been pronounced at the point of death, rallied under the shock and is likely to get well.

A few days since, while making some hydrographic explorations in the Ogeechee river, a gentleman who was formerly in the Confederate service, and in that capacity assisted in putting down torpedoes to protect against incursions by the Federal navy, discovered five of the formidable machines in the exact position where they had been left. Three of the five were in good condition, and on being taken up, the powder in them was found dry, and the exploding apparatus intact.—Savannah News.

Generals Fullerton and Steadman arrived in town by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, and are stopping at the Battle House, where they will be happy to meet as many of the citizens of Mobile as will favor them with a call for the purpose of exchanging views and imparting information relative to the operations of the Freedmen's Bureau in Mobile and the State at large.—Mobile Times.

THE TELEGRAPH MONOPOLY.

A MAMMOTH CONSOLIDATION — 104,000 MILES OF WIRE.

NEW YORK, June 14.—The American and Western Union Telegraph companies are about concluding an agreement of union which amounts to a consolidation of interests. The public demand for prompt and uninterrupted transaction of business renders it indispensable to get rid of all delays in checking and booking from one line to another. The new consolidation will control and operate over 104,000 miles of telegraph wires, covering all the territory and connecting all points of the United States from New Foundland to San Francisco and Vancouver's Island. From the latter point a line, 14,000 miles to St. Petersburg, will be done within a year. Cuba and the West Indies will be connected, and the success of the Atlantic cable in August next is confidently hoped for. It is to be regretted that the telegraph business cannot have the lively stimulus and restraint that so favorably affects every other; but at least five attempts within the last five years, by men of energy and large capital, to build up and sustain a cargo opposition, have signally failed.

When the United States telegraph company had acquired over 16,000 miles of line, the public looked for the fruits of opposition in a reduction of rates; but the rates had to be twice advanced, to enable the business done to support two companies instead of one. The formidable opposition being compelled at last to succumb and sell out at a loss.

The question seems settled for the present, that the telegraph business will not yet bear competition, and against the immense advantages of this combination it would be useless to attempt it. One company can do all the business, and do it cheaper than two can; for two companies, with a duplicate of offices and employees, must double the expense of the aggregate business, and customers must be taxed to meet the expense. Let enlarged views govern this mammoth corporation, and let them serve the public promptly, courteously, and as cheaply as they can afford, and the press and the public will be satisfied.

Fraternal.

In the interchange of civilities at St. Louis the other day, Mr. Nelson, the delegate from the New School Assembly, informed the Old School divines that "fraternal relations were possible now, simply because slavery was dead!" Six years ago such an announcement would have roused each Old School doctor of divinity, and brought forth a storm of indignant rebuke sufficiently violent to unroof the house.

But in May, 1866, the Moderator of the Old School Assembly, the Rev. Dr. Stanton, received the address with his accustomed sweetness, acknowledging the fact, and promising the best efforts of the body over which he presided to bring about an organic union of the two schools. Our correspondent suggests that "Dr. Stanton owed his election to his admirable mixture of zeal and philanthropy, he having once said he hoped to meet Drs. Thornwell and Palmer in heaven, and also hoped to see them both hanged on earth. From present appearances, he is as likely to receive the fruition of the one hope as of the other." It seems highly probable that the "fraternal relations" so happily begun over the unwholesome corpse of slavery, will be consummated in Cincinnati in May, 1867.—N. Y. News.

DEATH OF GEN. CASS.

WASHINGTON, June 18.—The following was issued this morning:

Washington, June 18, 1866.

The President directs the undersigned to perform the painful duty of announcing to the people of the United States that Lewis Cass, distinguished not more for faithful services in varied public trusts than by exalted patriotism at a recent period of political disorder, departed this life at four o'clock yesterday morning. The several Executive Departments of Government will cause appropriate honors to be rendered to the memory of the deceased, at home and abroad, wherever the national name and authority are acknowledged.

WM. H. SEWARD.

THE PRESIDENT WILL NOT INTERFERE.—The Washington Republican has the following:

We have the best reasons for asserting that the President does not intend to interfere, either directly or indirectly, in the case of Jeff Davis, notwithstanding the strenuous efforts being made by his counsel in his behalf for executive interposition. The President considers the case entirely a judicial question, and will in no event interfere with the course of justice in the case of Davis.

THE FRESHET OF LAST WEEK.—We have verbal accounts of extensive overflows of cultivated lands on the Chattahoochee, Flint and Alabama rivers, by the freshets last week. Some planters represent nearly the whole of their grounds overflowed—all of the best they had planted. We hear this report from a number of large plantations on the Flint and Chattahoochee rivers, and as these were under water a great many others must have been in the same condition. Where the lands overflowed so late in the season were planted in cotton, that crop must now be abandoned for this year, and it will be too late to substitute even corn. We fear that immense disaster has been occasioned by these late rains, and that they have ruined the prospects of very many planters.—Columbus Enquirer.

A young friend, who has just reached home coming through the country from South Alabama, reports the crops of wheat and corn in Autauga, Shelby and Jefferson counties as very promising indeed, but there is a great scarcity of present subsistence, and farmers are feeding stock on the growing wheat.—Ib.

Our farmers for the last few days of sunshine, are beginning to look more hopeful. They speak more hopeful of their crops than they did a week or ten days ago. They say if they can have two weeks of favorable weather they will make tolerable fair crops. The prospects are a great deal brighter to us than they were ten days ago, and we trust the weather will favor the farmers the remainder of the year.—Grenada Gazette 16th.

A gigantic cotton factory, called the "Manassas" manufactory, has been built at Carrollton, Mississippi. It contains 180,000 spindles, 1800 looms, and goes into operation on the first of July. The stock now stands fifteen per cent. above par.

REPORTED INDICTMENT OF GENERAL BRECKINRIDGE.—After the excitement produced in the courtroom at Richmond by the remarkable "charge" of the presiding head center had passed away, the Grand Jury, after a retirement of some hours, returned, and the foreman handed to the Judge five folded sheets of paper, which he stated were indictments. The Judge cautioned the Jury against hurling "these matters," and adjourned the Court till the first Tuesday in October. The Richmond Times declares that one of the documents was an indictment of General Breckinridge. It says:

Of the five indictments handed to Judge Underwood, one was against General John C. Breckinridge. This is no ascertained fact; and the indictment is verbatim the same as that brought in against Mr. Davis, except that for the words Jefferson Davis are substituted John C. Breckinridge. The overt act is alleged in both instruments to have been committed on the same day, the 15th of June, 1864. The object sought to be attained by the indictment of General Breckinridge, who is now in Canada, is to prevent his being pardoned by the President and his return to his home in the United States. It is considered certain that the President will not pardon him while he is under indictment.

THE INCOME TAX.—The commissioner of internal revenue has issued an order correcting certain instructions to assessors, concerning assessment of incomes for the year 1866, by which it appears a guardian residing abroad should return the income of his ward in the district where the ward resides; and that all expenses for insurance upon property, and all actual losses in business may be deducted from the gross income of the business of the year.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

WEEKLY REVIEW.

The general market (says the Price Current of Wednesday) has exhibited more animation since our last report, and holders have evinced a disposition to advance their pretensions on account of the rise in gold. Both Pork and Flour have been, moreover, stimulated by favorable accounts from the West, and sold at higher prices. Our leading staple, also, has recovered its previous firmness and been in better request, mostly for the North. There has also been some inquiry for foreign export, the demand for which has been received by the advance in Foreign Exchange.

COTTON.—We noticed in our last report that the market was at almost a stand still, the sales on Friday embracing only 350 bales, mostly at prices showing a reduction of 2c per lb from previous rates, putting Low Middling at 35c, but that prices were too unsettled for regular quotations. There was but little change on Saturday, when, including 210 bales damaged sold at auction, the business embraced 550 bales, the largest purchase being at 36½c for even-running Low Middling and 37c for Strict Low Middling. On Monday, under the influence of the foreign news and the gold excitement, the demand improved, and prices assumed more firmness and steadiness, 1800 bales changing hands on the basis of 37c for Low Middling and 37½c for Strict Low Middling. Yesterday the market relapsed into its previous dullness, but factors continued firm in their pretensions, and the sales, which comprised 650 bales, were at figures fully up to the currency of the previous day. This makes an aggregate for the past three days of 3000 bales, taken mostly for the North.

The receipts proper for the four days ending on last evening comprise 2296 bales, against 2050 during the corresponding period last week, showing an increase of 240 bales.

We now quote as follows: Ordinary, 28 to 30c; Good Ordinary, 32 to 34; Low Middling, 36 to 38; and Middling, 40 to —c.

TOBACCO—Supplies are coming in regularly, the stock is fair and is accumulating, and the assortment is good, offering inducements to foreign buyers to operate in this market. There has been some little inquiry for Choice and Selections, but only a few small sales were made at prices ruling within the range of the following quotations—the lower descriptions being very dull and much neglected: Low Refused, Light, 4 to —; Good do., 6 to 6½; Common Leaf, 9 to 10; Fair, 12 to 14; Good, 15 to 16; Fine, 18 to 19; Choice Selections, 21 to 23. Heavy—.. to 5; Good do., 7 to 8; Common Leaf, 10 to 12; Fair, 14 to 17; Good, 17 to 18; Fine, 19 to 20; Choice Selections, 21 to 27—in currency.

SUGAR—There is very little Louisiana but an ample stock of Cuba Sugar on hand. The market has continued dull, but holders are firmer in their views, and ask higher prices, in currency, owing to the advance in gold. There has been no movement, however, and only a few small retail sales were made at previous prices: 13 to 14c for Common to Fair Louisiana, 14½ to 15c for Fully Fair, 15½c for Prime, 16c for Yellow Clarified, and 16½ to 16¾c for White. Cuba Sugar has been retailing slowly at 13 to 13¼c for No. 12, 13½c for No. 13, 14½c for No. 14, 15c for No. 15, and 17½c per lb for No. 20. Yesterday the foregoing prices of Cuba Sugar were advanced 1 to 2c per lb, but only a few small retail sales were made.

MOLASSES—The market is almost bare of Louisiana, but is well supplied with Cuba. There is very little or no demand, however, for either. The stock is much more firmly held, nevertheless, and better prices are asked, owing to the advance in gold. There have not been any sales since our last review; the last were at 55c per gallon for small lots of Louisiana and 50c for Cuba. Purchases could be made by the cargo at 55c per gallon.

FLOUR—The supplies are very small and insufficient for the demand, and the better grades have further advanced at least 25c per barrel. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 2500 bbls, in lots, at $9 10 for Fine, $9 50 to $9 62½ for Good Flue, $10 for Unbranded, $10 25 to $10 50 for Superfine, $11 87½ for Fair Extra, $13 to $13 75 for Good Extra, and $14 to $15 per bbl for Choice Extra. Yesterday the demand was good, and prices ruled still more in favor of sellers. The sales embraced 2100 bbls, at $10 and $10 75 for some on its merits, $10 50 for Superfine, $12 to $12 75 for Fair Extra, $14 25 for Good Extra, $15 to $15 25 for Choice Extra, and $10 to $17 per bbl for very Choice Extra.

BACON—Continues in light supply, and very good demand, and prices are still looking up. There were sales on Monday of 20 casks Shoulders at 16½c, 10 and 25 casks Clear Sides at 21½c per lb. Shoulders are retailing freely at 16½ to 16¾c, Ribbed Sides at 20½c, Clear Sides at 21½ to 21¾c, and Sugar-cured Hams at 25 to 26c per lb.

PORK—Has been in active demand, and the stock being small prices have advanced fully $2 per bbl. There were sales on Monday of 1000 bbls Mess, in lots, at $34 75, $35 and $35 25 per bbl. Subsequently $34 25 was refused and $36 asked, and yesterday 600 bbls Mess sold in two lots at $36 per bbl. It is retailing freely at $36 per bbl.

GREEN MEAT—There is very little on hand: It is held by dealers, who are retailing it at 15½c per lb for Shoulders. There are very few or no Sides in the market.

LARD—Continues scarce and in request, and prices are still ruling with an upward tendency. Owing to light supplies, only small sales are made at 24½c per lb for Prime in tierces and 25½ to 26c in kegs.

BUTTER AND CHEESE—Butter is plenty and dull, and prices are lower. Choice Northern is selling at 42 to 45c and Western at 28 to 32c per lb. Cheese is in fair supply but very little in demand. It is selling slowly at 15 to 20c for Western and 16 to 20c Northern, and English Dairy at 25 to 27c per lb.

WHISKEY.—The market continues extremely dull and only a retail business is doing at $2 26 to $2 30 per gallon for Western Rectified. Arrived during the past three days 334 bbls. Cleared for Mobile 25 bbls, Montgomery 2, Texas 150.

CORN MEAL.—There have been small sales Choice Kiln-dried at $5 75 per bbl.

CORN—In good supply and fair demand but at easier prices. There were sales on Saturday and Monday of 27,000 sacks at 78 to 80c for Mixed, 90c for White and White Mixed, 90 to 95c per bushel for White. Yesterday the sales embraced 10500 sacks at 78 to 80c for Mixed, 85c for Choice Yellow, 92½c for White and White Mixed, 95 for White. Arrived during the past three days 5000 bids, 22,888 sacks. Cleared for New York 1912 sacks, Texas 3800, Cuba 2000 sacks.

OATS—Are in good supply but only in moderate demand and previous prices are barely sustained. The sales on Saturday and Monday comprised 6,000 sacks at 50 to 51 and 52c on Monday, and 50 to 51c on Tuesday. Yesterday there were sales of 2500 sacks at 50 to 52 per bushel, one or two small lots very choice commanding 53c. Arrived during the past three days 4907 sacks. Cleared for Texas 1000 sacks.

MALT—Continues very dull. Canada is retailing at $1 75 and Western at $1 30 per bushel. Round lots of Western cannot be quoted better than $1 25 per bushel.

BRAN—The market has been quiet but firmer and better prices have been obtained. About 1,200 sacks were sold on Saturday and Monday at $1 15 per 100 lbs. Yesterday 1200 sacks sold at $1 15 per 100 lbs.

HAY—The stock on hand is now mostly in store. There is not much demand for round lots, but in small way full prices are obtained. The sales on Saturday and Monday were confined to a few hundred bales at $20 for Ordinary and $25 per ton for St. Louis. Yesterday we did not hear of a sale.

INDIA BAGGING—The stock is small and firmly held at 30c per yard. The demand is good and 220 bales were sold in two lots 30c per yard. Dealers are supplying the demand for the country at 29c in rolls and 31c in bales.

BALE ROPE—Is in request and 150 bales have sold, in two lots, at 18½c per lb. Dealers are obtaining 18¾c per lb. Iron Cotton Ties are selling at 12c per lb.

COFFEE—Owing to the advance in Gold, currency prices have advanced fully 2½c per lb. Dealers are now supplying the demand for the country, which is small at 26½ to 31c per lb currency for Ordinary to Prime Rio.

GUNNY BAGS—The stock on hand is small and the demand is good. Several small sales have been made at 26c apiece.

STAR CANDLES—The stock is light, the demand is good and the market is firm. We quote 12 oz., 20c, 14 oz. at 21c, and full weight at 25c per lb.

WOOL—The stock on hand is small and consists principally of Texas, mostly burry. A lot of 2000 lbs unwashed Lake sold at 24c per lb. The market is steady and firm at 15c per lb for burry, 24c for unwashed, and 28 to 35c for washed Texas Wool. There is very little or no Louisiana on hand. All descriptions are now in request and receipts would meet with ready sale.

SALT—Is quoted by the cargo at $1 55 to $1 60 per sack for Coarse and Fine. There is a fair demand for the interior, which dealers are supplying at $1 80 to $1 85 per sack for Liverpool Coarse and $1 90 to $2 for fine, in store. The imports comprise 0907 sacks from Liverpool.

TANNER'S OIL.—The last sale was at $1 20 per gallon.

NAVAL STORES.—There have been sales of Common and No. 2 Rosin at $3, No. 1 at $6 50, Virgin dip $10; Pitch $3; Tar $2 50 per bbl; Spirits Turpentine 92½ to 95c per gallon.

ESCULENTS.—New Potatoes are selling at $5 to $5 50 per bbl. New Onions $2 50 to $3 25 per bbl. New Apples from Vicksburg at $7 to $10 per bbl.

HIDES—There are not many in the market. They have continued in good demand, prices are looking up and they sell readily at the advanced figures of 8½ to 9c for Green Hides, 10c for Kip Skins, and 11 to 12c per lb for Dry Hides.

POULTRY AND EGGS.—Chickens sell on the landing at $7 to $7 50, Geese at $7 to $9 and Turkeys at $20 to $22 per dozen. Western eggs are dull at $18 to $20 per bbl.

BEANS—Are dull at $6 to $8 per bbl.

☞ It should be understood that the above quotations generally represent the wholesale prices. In filling small orders higher rates have to be paid.

MONETARY.

The principal feature of the Money Market since our last report is the extraordinary course of Gold, the fluctuations in which are without precedent in our financial annals. We noticed in our last report that on Friday evening the market closed at 116½ to 147. On Saturday it opened at 145¾ to 140, advanced under the foreign news to 153, and closed at 152½; on Monday, being stimulated by later and exciting intelligence received from New York and London, it opened at 160, advanced to 170, then relapsed and receded to 150, and closed at 152 to 153; while yesterday it opened at 149 to 150, sold up to 156 and down to 145, and closed at 147½.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

A Boy who was a Martyr.

They are called martyrs who have died a cruel death rather than deny Jesus Christ, or say they did not love him. About three hundred years ago, the Roman priests sent bad men one night to break into a house in Holland, and bring to prison a man and his wife and two boys, because they would read the Bible and pray to Jesus.

They soon took the father and his eldest boy out to burn them alive in the open street. When they got to the place the boy looked up, and said:

"Look, my father! all heaven is opening; and I see ten hundred thousand angels joying over us. Let us be glad; for we are dying for the truth."

They kept the mother and the other boy in prison seven more days; and then, when they found that they would not deny Jesus, they brought them out, too, and burned them to ashes. And so this family, parted by wicked men for a few days on earth, soon met again in heaven, to live that eternal life which Jesus gives to all who love his name.

"From burning pains to endless joys,
On fiery wheels they rode,
And strangely washed their garments white
In Jesus' dying blood."

And not only in Holland, but in England, about the same time in the reign of that wretched woman, Queen Mary, many men, and women, and young people were put to death, for the same things, by the Romish priests. In Spain, hundreds were burned; and now, though they dare not burn them, they send to prison for reading the Bible. How thankful we should be who live in England now!—Children's Picture Magazine.

What Young People Should Know.

The best inheritance which parents can give their children is the ability to help and take care of themselves. This is better than a hundred thousand dollars apiece. In any trouble or difficulty, they have excellent servants in the shape of two hands. Those who can do nothing, and have to be waited upon, are helpless and easily disheartened in the misfortunes of life.—Those who are active and hardy, meet troubles with a cheerful face, and easily surmount them. Let young people, therefore, learn to do as many things as possible.

Every boy should know how, sooner or later—

1. To dress himself, black his own boots, cut his brother's hair, wind a watch, sew on a button, make a bed, and keep the clothes in order.

2. To saddle a horse, grease a wagon and harness a team.

3. To carve fowls and meat, and wait on the table.

4. To milk the cows, shear the sheep and dress a veal or mutton.

5. To reckon money and keep accounts correctly, and according to book-keeping rules.

6. To write a neat and appropriate briefly expressed business letter in a good hand, fold and subscribe it properly, and write contracts.

7. To plow, sow grain and grass, drive a mowing-machine, build a neat stack and pitch hay.

8. To put up a package, build a fire, mend a broken stool, whitewash a wall and regulate a clock.

Every girl should know how.

1. To sew and knit.
2. To mend clothes neatly.
3. To make beds.
4. To dress her own hair.
5. To wash the dishes and sweep the carpets.
6. To make good bread and perform plain cooking.
7. To keep her room, draws and closets in order.
8. To work a sewing machine.
9. To make good butter and cheese.
10. To make a dress and children's clothing.
11. To keep accounts and calculate interest.
12. To write, fold, and subscribe letters properly.
13. To nurse the sick effectually and not faint at the sight of a drop of blood.
14. To be ready to render efficient aid to those in trouble, and in an unostentatious way.

A young lady who can do all these things well and who is always ready to render aid to the afflicted and mitigate the perplexities of those around her, will bring more comfort to others and happiness to herself, and be more esteemed than if she knew how to dance, simper, sing and play on the piano.

Admirably Illustrated.

There are now multitudes of inquirers who need to be dealt with as Mr. Patrick, of Scotland, dealt with a woman who had been long anxious, but seemed to obtain no relief:

Placing himself beside her and looking steadily in her face, he said.

"Do you believe the Bible?"

"I do," she replied.

"Can you tell me what made the world?"

She smiled a little contemptously, and after a pause said "It was God!"

To which he immediately replied, "How dy'e ken! Were ye there to see?"

She seemed surprised, perceiving that there was evidently more meant by the question than she supposed, and then remarked,

"No, I was not there, but the word of God says that he made it."

"Ah, well, ye believe a' the Bible says, dy'e?"

She said, "Yes."

"Ah, well, we'll see. 'This is My beloved Son in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him.' What says that?"

"The Father."

"Well, will yo do as the Father bids ye? He commands yo to hear the Son."

To this she assented.

"Well, then, what does the Son say? 'Him that cometh unto Me I will in no-wise cast out.' 'Come unto Me and I will give you rest.' To the woman in the Gospel he said, 'Daughter, thy sins, which are many, are all forgiven thee,' and will He not say the same to you? Is he not saying it even the noo? Ye dinna believe that, yo dinna believe Him. I tell ye, ye dinna believe a' the Bible."

She instantly saw the sin and shame of not trusting in a promising, present Redeemer, and as instantly ventured on His mercy and found the peace she sought.

The Religion of Money.

PART II.

Reader are you acquainted with a tract in which it is clearly shown, that in the Romish church everything is SOLD, while in the gospel everything is GIVEN, and that thus, between the religion of the Pope and the religion of Jesus Christ, there is a "great gulf fixed"? At all events, here is the second part of it, which may in case of need serve for the first as well.

It was after "The Religion of Money" had gone through six editions (now, more than two hundred copies have been sold) that an editor of a daily paper, too honest himself to believe in the possibility of the numerous corruptions of the Church of Rome, started doubts as to the accuracy of the facts brought forward in this little treatise. As I was the author, I thought it best to write to the then Archbishop of Paris, M. de Quelen; and I told him that the last edition of "The Religion of Money" being exhausted, I had taken the liberty of inclosing a copy, which I earnestly entreated him to read, and to point out any inaccuracies, however trifling, that I might thus be enabled to correct them, before the next edition went to press. In conclusion, I said, that if he did not send any answer, I should regard his silence as an approval of what I had written.

A week later, as I was on my way to the printer's, I received a letter from the Vicar-General, fixing a meeting at his own house, by order of the Archbishop. On my arrival at the time appointed, I found the Grand-Vicar seated in the midst of books and papers, and quite prepared to convince, if not to win me over. As this was not my object, I put my questions one by one, distinctly. "Is it true—yes or no, is all I ask—but is it true that in your church people pay to be baptized, buried, &c.?" Now I solemnly aver, that to each of these questions the Grand-Vicar was compelled to answer "Yes;" only he disputed the price, assuring me that baptism cost only twenty sous, while I had set it at forty-five; that the wax candle offered at the first communion, and valued by me at three francs, fifty cents, "is not thicker than that," showing his little finger.

I admired his simplicity, and went on with my questions. I must, however, plead guilty to an omission of which I was convicted by the Vicar-General. In my text I had said nothing about marriage; the Vicar obligingly informed me that this, like all the rest, had its price. I beg pardon; but I again affirm that the Grand-Vicar was obliged to confess that, as I had already said, everything is sold in the Romish Church. Undoubtedly, like a skilfull casuist, he pretended that it was not the spiritual grace that was paid for, but only the ministering of this grace. To this I replied, that so purely logical a distinction would never be grasped by simple minds; and that although the priest may not profess to sell anything but his trouble, the people will nevertheless believe that it is the sacrament which he sells, and by which they purchase salvation. I withdrew, perfectly convinced that I had stated nothing but truth in "The Religion of Money."

Five years after this conversation a very curious paper fell into my hands. In "The Religion of Money," the reader has only been introduced to the public part of this Romish traffic. In what follows he will see the secrets of its negotiations. We may indeed form some idea of the nature of a business from the appearance of the shop; but to know it thoroughly we must get behind the counter, we must talk to the clerks, we must examine the books, and inspect the warehouses. Well then, my readers have already seen the shop; we will now exhibit the rest. This system of trickery must be unmasked; this ecclesiastical trading must be stopped; and this infamous commerce, in which souls are the merchandise, must be buried beneath the ruins of its own downfall. To hasten this downfall is my present object, not for the pleasure of demolition, but to prepare the way for rebuilding. The throne cannot be occupied by two sovereigns, by the Pope and Jesus Christ. The Pope must come down, and Christ must be seated thereon. The system of the Romish Church is but that of making gods of the clergy, just as Paganism made gods of its idols of wood and stone; and if I strive to overset the idol, it is that the pedestal may be restored to God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, to Whom it belongs. But at the very threshold I am met by an obstacle. What I have to state is so extraordinary, so monstrous, that I dread the effect of such a demand on the faith of my readers. How meet the difficulty? Simply by assuring them that I have in my possession, and am ready to show them, on application through the bookseller, the following original and authentic papers:—

1st. The Circular addressed to the clergy.

2nd. Two letters addressed to myself by the agent who signed it, and in which the above traffic is plainly avowed.

3rd. A letter from a Catholic priest, sent by the said agent to my house, to ascertain exactly who I was, as I had merely sent my name without any qualifications to the former. It will be seen by this letter, that the agent refused to sell me one relic, valued at a few francs only, in order to oblige me to take the whole packet of eighteen relics; or rather, having found out who I was, he would not allow me to have the relic in question.

4th. An extract from the sentence pronounced in a course of justice, in a public sitting on the 14th of November, 1842, proving the fact of this traffic in Popish goods, by the condemnation of the traveling agent. This document is stamped, signed, and authorized. I now proceed to lay the facts before the reader:—

The travelling agent of the "General Correspondent of the Catholic Apostolic Agency of Rome, in France," having sold articles to a certain amount to several abbes, from whom he was unable to get payment, came one new year's day to consult a friend of mine as to the best method of obtaining justice, placing in his hands the circular, which this friend subsequently gave into mine, and which I now give to the reader without further preface; for, I repeat it, there is no fiction here—nothing but a simple statement of facts. Behold, then, this mysterious circular, addressed to the clergy, copied word for word, and accompanied only by some reflections of my own:—

"AGENCY

"Of the Catholic Apostolate,

"Established at Rome

"For the despatch of all kinds of Ecclesiastical Affairs. — (See Gazette du Midi, of the 15th October, 1863.)

"GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE.

"CIRCULAR

"To the Clergy of France.

"POUR HONORAIRES.*

"Not to be paid for till the papers have been received.

"M.'

"It is enough that a work tends to the glory of God, to the edification of the faithful, and to the increase of the respect due to the Holy See, to the which the Church of France is bound by her very bowels, to insure its acceptableness to the French clergy, whose zeal is a guarantee for its success."

Delicious style of prospectus! But we proceed:—

"It is this assurance, sir, which, when I was at Rome, induced me to accept the agency of the Catholic Apostolate for France, in order to co-operate in securing the advantages which this agency is calculated to procure for the most Christian kingdom. It is with this view that I have the honour to transmit to you the inclosed prospectus of the principal objects which may be obtained at Rome through the medium of the agency; and also the bulletin in which you can write the list of such as you wish to receive. Your zeal, sir, for the glory of God, and for the welfare of the souls committed to your charge, inspires me with full confidence in your choice of the articles best calculated for the attainment of this two-fold object in your parish."

I beg the reader's pardon, but I cannot repress the desire of repeating the assurance that it is not I who speak; that I am the faithful copyist of a paper which, if he desire it, I can place before him. Having said this for the last time, I proceed:—

"You will transcribe the list of articles literally into the bulletin, and after having filled it up according to the inclosed directions, you will forward the duplicate, keeping the original in your own hands, to enable you to verify the correctness of the return. Have the goodness to frank the packet—[excellent suggestion!]—as the sine qua non of its reception, and of that of all missives connected with the agency."

What caution! what suspicion! and all with reference to the clergy. But let us read on, and we shall see better, or rather worse still:—

"You will then receive with all possible despatch, and in the manner pointed out in the bulletin, those articles entered in your list, unless there be any that are not to be procured in Rome.

"Receive the assurance," &c.

[We suppress the signature.]

"Correspondent-General of the Apostolate in France, at Munduel, by Nimes (Gard.)

"To be franked. [Third notice to this effect!]

List of the principal objects to be procured through the medium of the Catholic Apostolate Agency at Rome, as well as of all such as affect the glory of God and the salvation of souls."

To say nothing of the interests of the Pope and the clergy. But we hasten to the particulars, of which we copy but a part, a fair sample of the whole document.

"PONTIFICIAL BRIEFS.

"1st. For the personal use (Indult) of the privileged altar, by which Plenary Indulgence is gained for those souls in purgatory in whose benefit the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass is applied. 12 frs. 50 cents."

It must be confessed, that if the sufferings of souls in another world are alleviated by the purchase of such an Indulgence, it would be the height of cruelty, in their friends and relations, to reject this cheap opportunity of helping them. But surely the conduct of the Pope presents the very climax of cruelty, since, having at his absolute disposal the whole treasury of works of supererogation, he yet neglects to apply it, en masse, to the release of the souls suffering the fiery penance. It would cost him so little; and the good done would be so great. But no! the Pope cannot grant the slightest alleviation to the very poorest of these souls, till he has received the sum of twelve francs, fifty cents. No money, no Pope! I would rather think that the Pope does not believe in purgatory, than suppose him so hard-hearted as to leave millions of souls in a state of torment, when it would cost him nothing to save them from it. It follows, indeed, that the sale of an Indulgence, in which we do not believe, is thus a mere traffic. . . .

You cannot admit this last supposition? Return, then, to the first. Choose between them. The Popes are monsters of cruelty, or of hypocrisy!

"3rd. For Plenary Indulgence after confession and sacrament, on the anniversaries of birth, baptism, first communion, entrance on the religious life, taking holy orders, and many other great epoch in life. 10 frs. 80 cents."

How accommodating are these indulgences! Have you committed a fault? You go to confession: some penance is imposed and the fault is thus washed away. Transformation the first. Suppose, however, that the penance imposed is irksome to you. What is to be done in this case? Nothing but to buy the Indulgence that releases you from the obligation of fulfilling it; and thus, for 10 francs 80 cents, you are perfectly free. Transformation the second. Now, as Indulgences are sold according to the degrees of sin, it follows that, from transformation to transformation, the redemption of your faults is reduced to a payment of money."

"4th. To obtain the same favours twice every month, not only for yourself, but for your relations and connexions, to the third degree of affinity inclusive. 10 francs, 80 cents."

You are perhaps astonished, candid reader, at this offer of Indulgences for relations, who are perfectly free to purchase them for themselves, if they desire it. But do you not see, that it is possible they might not desire it? And thus it is necessary to give to the well-disposed members of the family, to the good Catholics, the means of providing them with this disadvantage in spite of themselves. So even he who wills none of these things, shall have them. Admirable mode of including even the obstinately sceptical in the bargain, and of thus indefinitely extending the business and its favours!

"5th. In favor of confessors, who may thus grant to their penitents a Plenary Indulgence, after absolution, on certain days of devotion. 12 frs. 50 cents."

Why should the Indulgence, which is to benefit the penitent, be made in favor of the confessor? Just in order that, by passing through his hands, he may realize a small profit upon it.

"6th. For conferring the power of Indulgence on crosses and medals, and for, 'Vriglier,' (consecrating) chaplets. 12 frs. 50 cents."

The Pope gives his benediction daily at Rome, to priests and people, to all who go, or are taken there. But as the Pope cannot, even by the appointment of Jubilees, bring everybody to Rome, he has to mourn over the fact of these benedictions passing to the provinces, not through his hands, but through those of the bishops. What is the remedy? To send what we cannot give. An excellent method of multiplying and making it fruitful! The Pope blesses the cardinals; the cardinals bless the priests; the priests bless chaplets, crosses, and medals; and thus the Papal benediction, divided and subdivided into streams and rivulets, flows into every corner of the earth, to return to him in one great ocean of gold and silver.

"9th. To choose a confessor invested with the plenary authority of the Holy See, with power to absolve from censures, irregularities, and cases reserved for the Pope. 25 frs."

Somewhat strange, surely, that the Pope should SELL the cases reserved to himself! Why, then, reserve them? Was it because the bishops were unworthy or unable to decide them? That could not be: for here they are given over to anybody who will pay for them. The reservation, then, was nothing more than an artifice to enhance the value. The preceding favours had been sold for half the price.

"12th. For the communication of vows of all kinds. (The price varying according to the case.)"

Monstrous iniquity! I have taken a vow of celibacy, of poverty, of chastity; and from each of these you will give me a dispensation. But let us pause: it may be said that we are indignant without cause, since nothing is specified. A little further on, the thing is made clearer.

14th. For a domestic chapel in which mass may be celebrated . . idem.

Ecclesiastical avarice follows you even to your homes. You are not permitted to give yourself up to devotional exercises at your own house, without first purchasing the permission. This reminds one of those directors of privileged theatres, who only allow others to be opened on payment of an indemnity. In all this the Popes act like patentees, who make over the right of exportation for a consideration. Thus the thing is sold in the gross by the Pope, the half-gross by the bishop, and retail by the priest.

"15th. Brief of extra tempus, extra tempora, and interstitiarum, to receive, quam primum, the holy orders of sub-deacon, deacon, and priest, ab quocunque episcopo cum sancta sede communionem habente." This Latin will excite suspicion in the mind of the reader who does not understand it, that it involves something mysterious; he is not far wrong; but I am not going to scrutinize it—the following note is explanatory enough:—

"It costs less when the postulant is provided with letters dismissory from his bishop than when he has merely his excorporation; but either of these papers is a sufficient qualification for the pontifical brief, of which the lowest price is . . .

149 frs. 70 cents."

Through all this, one thing is plain enough; that is, the Pope's endeavour to baffle the bishops. The fact is, that to obtain holy orders, a paper, called a letter dismissory, must be obtained from the bishop, and paid for like all the rest; but here the Pope interposes between the merchant and the purchaser, and offers to dispense with the bishop's paper, thus closing the market against him. We shall see presently that the bishops have looked with no favourable eye on this agency of the Catholic apostolates.

"DISPENSATIONS.

"1st. Despensations of all kinds for the celebration, and the sanction of prohibited marriages."

For example. In marrying a heretic you expose your soul to damnation, as well as the souls of your children, and, of course, this is the ground on which the church opposes such unions: but take a dispensation, give money,—your marriage is legalised, you may expose yourself to damnation without any further scruple. Eternal shame! shame upon men, who, in order to quiet uneasy consciences, pretend to believe in Satan, and theo, for the sake of a golden key, themselves open for them the gates of hell!

"2nd. Dispensation from the vows of virginity, et cetera." Yes, reader, you have read, and I have copied correctly. It is thus in the circular:—"Despensation from the vows of virginity;" and this circular is to the clergy. We will be brief, and plain:—A priest cannot have a dispensation from celibacy, but from chastity. But, no; this, I am convinced, cannot be the intent of the permission, though it may be thus interpreted. And do you not see that nature, outraged in the person of the priest, will lead him to seek and accept any interpretation? I leave it to the reader, be he father, brother, or husband, to judge of the danger, and then, IF HE DARE, let him send his child, his sister, or his wife, to the confessional of the compulsory bachelor priest.

"3rd. Dispensation from the celebration of obligatory masses, for which funds are wanting. . . . 27 frs."

It is stated in "The Religion of Money," that a town priest who accepts masses at thirty sous each, can make them over to a country priest to celebrate, by paying him half the sum. It appears that this is not all, and that this broker priest can be dispensed, not only from the personal celebration of the mass, but from the mass altogether, even though paid for performing it, by making over to the Pope the sum of 27 francs. So then, simple-minded Roman Catholics, pay your priest to chant, or mumble, a mass with such and such an intention, and he will receive your money, transmit 15 or 20 per cent. to the Pope, and neither say your mass himself nor appoint any one else to say it. Would it not have been better to keep your money?

"4th. Dispensation from the obligation of reciting the Breviary, or other prayers, or duties, &c. . . . 21 frs. 60 cents."

That the Pope should give dispensations from obligatory works, such as fastings, vows, &c. is easy to be understood; for we know that these penances have only been invented in order to make dispensations indispensable; but it is indeed an enormity deserving special remark, that the Pope here dispenses with "prayers." It affords the most infallible proof of his own disbelief of the efficacy of prayer, and shows that, according to the Romish Church, prayers are not prayer, in the true sense of the word, but a repetition of words imposed as a penance. At school, the master gives us an imposition a certain page to be copied, ten, fifteen or twenty times; so in the church the priest imposes the repetition of fifteen or twenty Paters. But in the course of the week the scholar gains a number of good marks; he shows these, and the imposition is repealed—Idem—the penitent has money, he gives it to the priest, and so, "no more Paters to be said." If the Pope and his clergy assure me that it is not so, and affirm their belief in God as hearing and answering prayer, I reply, "If you do indeed believe this, and yet interpose to prevent prayer being made, it is plain that you deprive the faithful of the grace of God, in order to have their money, and you thus make a gain of their damnation."

"AUTHORIZATIONS AND FACULTIES.

"1st. To read forbidden books, and to keep them in your house, &c. 21 frs. 60 cents."

My pen falls from my hand as I copy these words. Nevertheless, reader, let us take courage, and see the matter to the end. If a certain book is forbidden by the Pope, of course it is because the reading might be injurious. How then should the sum of 21 frs. 60 cents disinfect the book? I do not understand, and am bound to conclude, that the Pope is content to pollute the minds of his priests, provided they pay him for the contamination. Still, let us endeavour to find some good motive for the permission to read bad books. Perhaps it is allowed as a means of refuting them. Well, but if the priest read the book with this praiseworthy intention, why make him pay for the opportunity of doing good? It should not only be afforded him gratis, but he should rather be rewarded for a work so well calculated to benefit souls as the refutation of a bad book. But no? the Pope has but one rule,—he sells everything, he never gives. We are then thrown back upon our first supposition,—immoral books are authorized by Rome, allowed to the priests, as special dainties, for a PRICE.

"2nd. Authorization and faculty for blessing the sacerdotal ornaments, and for using all the other benedictions reserved to bishops, &c. 12 frs. 50 cents."

The Pope again cheating the bishops! I do not wonder that the bishops attack the agency, and bring its agents before the courts of justice.

"3rd. Authority and dispensation conferring the Papal benediction on the dying."

Surely the Popes would sell themselves if any one would buy them.

But it is enough. I have no heart to copy more. Only this: I warn you, that if you are thinking to publish some useful book, instead of helping you, the Pope will impose a tax upon it, as the equivalent for his approval. Thus, when on the title-page of a Roman Catholic book you read these words, "With the approval of the Pope, or the bishop," understand that the only meaning of this inscription is, that the author has paid into the Papal or episcopal purse a sum varying, according to the conventional forms."

Are you desirous, of having a saint in your family? My prospectus enlightens you as to the sum fixed for introducing to the Holy See the grounds on which you claim the beatification and canonization; so that, in due course of time, you can have the pleasure of honouring your uncle or your cousin, along with all the saints of the calendar, and soon a crowd of worshippers will kneel before the golden calf you have desired, and the Pope himself has set on high.

There is also the current price of relics of the true cross; only it is said of these, in a parenthesis, "difficult to procure," just as a bookseller might note of some rare book in his catalogue, that there were but few copies remaining.

In conclusion, the prospectus warns you, that to secure the transmission of the articles, the amount of the order must be at least twenty five francs—that several persons might unite in forming a list, but that it must be signed by one only,—and this brings me back to our travelling clerk.

He had introduced himself to an abbe, and had received an order; he had then repaired to the house of another priest, had shown his commission, and received another; and this he had done till his orders in that diocese were of sufficient value to pay for a journey.

Some weeks later, a package arrived at ——. Know, reader, that I could put a proper name in the place of these dashes; and if I do not, it is because my object is to attack things, not persons. I respect or pity the clergy of Rome. I detest the institutions of Rome.

The package of relics, indulgences, and dispensations arrived then at the abbe's house, and he rejoices in the hope of selling retail what he had bought in the gross; but, O cruel disappointment! the bishop refuses his sanction.

"But, my lord, these relics and papers are perfectly authentic."

"That is true."

"They possess, then, the same virtues as those which you yourself procure from Rome to sell again to us."

"Undoubtedly."

"Why, then, keep me from going to the fountain-head, and oblige me to receive these articles through the channel of your intervention?"

"Because"—

"Why? because"—

"Because"—

"I do not understand you."

"So much the worse."

"But, my lord, what am I to do with the relics?"

"Return them to the travelling agent."

"And what if he refuse to take back his merchandise?"

"You can refuse to pay for it."

The abbe was obliged to submit to his diocesan, but, be revenged himself on the agent, to whom he refused payment. And in order to strengthen his hands, he associated with him such of his brethren as were implicated in the same cause. The travelling clerk, although the representative of a house pretending to act only "to the glory of God," grows angry, institutes legal proceedings, carries the cause before a court of justice, and is condemned there.

Reader, let us take leave of the agency and its clerk, and turn to what is of more importance—Rome and its traffic. Declare then, yes or no—declare with your hand upon your heart—is this a religion of money? Do you not blush to think that this is, perhaps, the religion of your friends—it may be, your own? Will not all these enormities open your eyes to the light of simple common sense? Can you still, without disgrace and shame, nay, without danger to your immortal soul, continue in a church which makes a merchandise of its salvation? For myself, I have desired to fulfil a two-fold duty towards you: to point out error—this I have done; and to show the truth—this I am about to do.

My condemnation of the doctrines of Rome implies no condemnation of the doctrines of Christianity; on the contrary, I separate the two things as the wheat from the tares. Christianity is the wheat—Romanism the tares. The one will enter heaven, the other will be cast into hell. But how, you may ask, are I to distinguish real Christianity, since Romanism assumes that distinction to herself? The answer is simple. The wheat—the good seed—was sown first by the Saviour himself; the tares were not scattered till afterwards, by the enemy. Thus the good grain of Christianity is that which fell from the hand of Christ and his apostles, and the bad seed is that which was brought in later by the Romish clergy, too fond of honours, power, and gold not to be the enemies to truth. In other words, truth is the gospel from the lips of Jesus Christ and the pen of his apostles; falsehood is all that priests have added to this gospel. Now the difference between the gospel of Christ and the teaching of Rome is too striking to escape the notice of any who will compare the two. From his lofty throne the Pope exclaims, "Bring me money, money, and I will save your souls!" From His exalted cross Christ says, "By grace ye are saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the GIFT of God." The Pope, scared by the echo of this sentence, forbids the reading of the Bible; but, blessed be God! societies are formed, which, in spite of the thunders of Rome, go forth and distribute His Word to the utmost limits of the earth. The exasperated Pope exclaims, "O people! you are deceived; read it not!" Christians reply, "We do not wish you to take our word—read for yourselves!"

"No!—close your eyes!"

"On the contrary, examine!"

"Believe me; I am Pope!"

"Rather believe the gospel; it is the Word of God!"

"I tell you that you require a dispensation for reading all bad books; pay me, then read the Bible."

We, on the other hand, invite you to read the Bible—to read it without payment. As Christ ever spoke openly to the people;" as the apostles wrote openly to all the churches; so do we. We have nothing to conceal. We proclaim the truth in the high-ways, upon the house tops; and this book, containing the very words of Christ and his apostles, we bid you take it without money and without price; for if you are poor, know that we owe it.*

"Come to Rome."

"No, go to Christ."

"I will give you my Papal benediction."

"Christ will give you everlasting life."

"I will confess you, you shall do penance, I will absolve you; or rather, you shall buy it of me—me, the successor of St. Peter.

Peter himself speaks, and in the gospel exclaims, "Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast believed that the gift of God could be purchased with money." Acts viii. 20.

"Buy! buy my consecrated chaplets, my ecclesiastical dispensations, my plenary indulgences!"

"No.—Without money and without price," says the Lord. "Come unto me, ye that are weary and heavy laden, and you shall find rest to your souls. Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly of heart. I am come to seek and to save that which was lost. Look unto me, and be saved!"

"No, no! It is false! Buy! buy!"

Heaven's thunders fall upon the Vatican—Luther and Calvin stand up with the Bible in their hands—the printing press comes to their aid—the Holy Scriptures are translated into all languages—and the people, aroused from slumber, ask each other, how it is that they have borne the yoke of Rome so long? The truth of God revives the face of the earth, and in a few years one-third of Christendom abandons the Pope, to follow the gospel. The rest, too careless to examine, remain as they were, and receive baptism, the host, and extreme unction in the church,—remain in unbelief, and live in sin.

Roman Catholics, each is, in general, your position! Is it well to keep it? You may, without much danger, laugh at the Pope; but beware! "God is not mocked." My advice is very simple—Read the Bible! My request is not unreasonable—Examine these things! You know that Rome cheats you; but it is not enough to recognize error, we must also seek and receive the truth. And I end with these words—words spoken by God Himself, and deserving all your attention—"God so loved the world that he gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Now that you have heard this declaration, Jesus adds, "Light is come into the world, but men loved darkness rather than light." Are you of that number? If so, listen, and you shall hear how the Lord Jesus explains your preference of darkness—"Because their deeds are evil."

Will you, on the contrary, seek after and receive the truth? Then it is of you that He says, that "your works are done in God;" and it is for you that he adds, "He that heareth my word, and believeth on Him that sent me, hath everlasting life."

* When the Romish clergy pretended that our Bibles were falsified, the author of this little tract made a public offer, through the daily press, to distribute Roman Testaments, if the clergy would sanction it. He received in answer an anonymous letter, requesting him to keep silence.

The Last Work on the Fourth Gospel.

The Sinaitic Manuscript mentioned in the following article from the New York Observer, was rescued by Prof. Tischendorf from the obscurity of the Convent of St. Catharine, on Mount Sinai, and has been carefully edited in two editions. It may well be claimed as one of the greatest acquisitions of modern times, "for it is the only complete and perhaps the oldest of all the uncial codices of the Bible, or at least of the same age and authority as the Vatican Codex,—which is traced by some to the middle of the fourth century,—and far better edited." It is known among critics as the "Codex Sinaiticus." It is being freely and very profitably used in the preparation of the great Commentary of Lange, of which more anon. J. HAMILTON.

Dr. Tischendorf has signalized himself, before the learned world, by the greatest addition to our Biblical learning made in this century,—the discovery and publication of the now celebrated "Sinaitic" manuscript of the Holy Scriptures. His other contributions to Biblical criticism are important. He has uttered the latest word in the controversy on the date of John's Gospel, and it may be pronounced the most important word yet given on this question. It has not yet been translated into English, but will, doubtless, soon be given us; meanwhile, English readers can find a good estimate of it in the last number of the Christian Examiner.

The importance of the question may be considered inestimable. It is, indeed, supreme in, not only the Arian contest, but in the whole Evangelical controversy. Bunsen has hardly overstated it, in declaring that "it is frivolous self-deception, or bitter mockery, to attempt to persuade oneself or others, that ecclesiastical Christianity can continue to exist, on the supposition of the spuriousness of that Gospel." "Without it," he contends, "there is no historic Christ; and without a historic Christ, all church faith is gone, all Christian confession is hopocrisy, or illusion; all Christian worship, mummery." Baur, Strauss, the whole Tubingen school, have belabored the question with the utmost strength; they have been conscious that the authorship of the fourth Gospel, by John, would be fatal to their theological system. They have contended that it was written later than the day of John. The entire debate centres at this point. Tischendorf confronts this central point manfully, armed with the latest and completest learning of the controversy, and we cannot doubt that his argumentation will be pronounced conclusive.

He shows that it is an incontrovertible fact that the four Gospels were recognized as canonical authority by the last third of the second century, by Irenæus, by the "Muratorian Canon," and by Tertullian, who accuses Marcian of not discriminating between the canonical and uncanonical writers, and, therefore, is not to be supposed to have committed the same indiscretion. Tischendorf sets out from this point, and traces up the evidence of the recognition of John's Gospel through Tertullian, Irenæus, the "Harmonies" of Theophilus and Tatian, and Polycarp, to Justin Martyr. The contest has raged fiercely around the person of Justin. Tischendorf has an important new, verbal aid here, in his Sinaitic manuscript. Justin, in repeated passages, uses John's ascription of the Logos to Christ, a peculiar fact, found in none of the other Gospels, nor in "the oldest parallel writings." In his "Dialogue with Trypho," he cites the answers of Christ to the disciples of John the Baptist (John, 1:20, found only in John; and also) in his first "Apology," Christ's answers to Nicodemus (John, 3:4). It is in respect to this last evidence that the "Sinaitic" becomes important in the controversy. The passage in Justin has been contested, because one phrase differs from the received text; but most happily the Sinaitic codex shows that Justin's phrase is precisely the primitive reading. Thus a slight fact—three Greek words—becomes a decisive argument, and must challenge the Tubingen school to a new and apparently hopeless campaign in the momentous controversy. Strauss and his followers were not long ago baffled, in their original theory of the date of the fourth Gospel, by the newly discovered evidence from Hippolytus, as exhibited by Bunsen; they had to put the date farther back towards the Apostle's day, but were still sturdily insistent against its apostolic chronology; this new ray of light, reflected by Justin from the Sinaitic discovery, limited as it is, is too direct and intense to be averted.

Tischendorf makes other and important use of the Sinaitic and Nitrian lately discovered manuscripts. He also produces strongly the evidence found in the citations or allusions of the heretical writers of the second century, thus confirming its orthodox authorities by their adversaries. He shows that Valentinus, the Gnostic, who wrote about the commencement of the second century, obtained his terminology from John. He shows that the resemblance, if not identity, is such that either Valentinus borrowed from John, or John from Valentinus. The fact, however, that John was accredited by the Church, while Valentinus was deemed a heretic, is decisive of the question. Irenæus says that the disciples of Valentinus make full use "of the Gospel of John." Valentinus evidently used John, and endeavored to found his fantastic system on the peculiar genius of the fourth Gospel. "There can be," says Tischendorf, "no stronger proof of the ecclesiastical authority of the Gospels, in the first two decades of the second century." Thus this Gospel was evidently current within a very years after the recognized period of the death of John; and when we bear in mind the slowness with which manuscript publications extended in that age, we cannot question that it must have appeared considerably earlier, in order to have currency, at this time, as an authority or a model.

About the middle of the second century, Celsus wrote against Christianity. He endeavors especially to refute John's theory of the Logos, professedly citing from what were then the authorized or recognized Scriptures; and expressly passing by the apocryphal writings, he ridicules John's statement,—that blood flowed from the side of Christ on the cross.

The learned German brought to light, some time since, a Coptic papyrus and Latin palimpsest, by which he identifies the apocryphal "Gospel of Nicodemus" with the ancient "Acta Pilati," or "Acts of Pilate,"—a Judaizing writing. Now Justin quotes the latter as early as A. D. 138, and it gives the whole Johannean account of Christ's trial before Pilate. The "Clementine Homilies" have been used against the fourth Gospel. Hilgenfeld says: "The result of our investigation, therefore, is that also in the Clementine Homilies no use has been made of the Gospel of John." The Clementines, however, were at this time (1850) imperfect. Since then, Dressel has discovered at Rome a manuscript of the complete work, and has knocked away this position of the Tubingen school, by finding in the Nineteenth Homily an indisputable reference to John's account of the man born blind.

We have only glanced at this production of Tischendorf; yet sufficiently to show that it is of the highest importance. He demonstrates that within a quarter of a century after the death of John, his Gospel was not only current, but already a general canonical authority, among Christians and heretics; leaving no reasonable doubt of its publication in his life time. It is an interesting fact that, while "Lives of Jesus," and other attacks on the original data of Christianity, are arousing the attention of the world to the primary historical questions of the Faith, new and decisive light is providentially streaming forth from the obscurities of Nitria and Arabia, confounding hostile criticism and confirming the "faith once delivered to the saints."

Returning Good for Evil.

It has been said of Archbishop Leighton, that if any man did him an injury he was ever afterward most anxious to do that man a good turn. The same has been remarked of Cotton Mather and other eminent Christians. Barkitt beautifully observes in his journal, that some persons would never have had a share in his prayers but for the injuries they had done him. When some of the courtiers of Philip the Good would have persuaded him to punish a person who had used him ill, he declined, saying, "It is a fine thing to have revenge in one's power, but it is a finer thing not to use it."

There is a way, however, of revenging ourselves which is always in our power, and which we should always avail ourselves of: "love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you." A missionary once preached upon these words of our Saviour, and a Hindoo gentleman who was present was so impressed by them that he said to some of his friends, "What a beautiful doctrine! Love your enemies. Certainly there is nothing in our shasters like that."

The following is a touching illustration of the spirit which Christianity begets, contrasted with that which heathenism inspires: Two men living in the southern part of Africa had a quarrel, and became bitter enemies to each other. Soon after, one of them found a little girl belonging to his enemy in the woods, at some distance from her father's house. He seized her and cut off two of her fingers; and as he sent her home screaming with her bleeding hands, he cried, "I have had my revenge!"

Years passed away. The little girl had grown up to be almost a young woman. One day there came to her father's door a poor, worn-out, gray-headed old man who asked for something to eat. She knew him at once as the cruel man who cut off her fingers. She went into the hut, and ordered the servant to take him bread and milk as much as he could eat and sat down and watched him eat it.

When he had finished she dropped the covering that hid her hands from view, and, holding them up before him, she said, "I have had my revenge!" The man was overwhelmed with surprise. The secret of the girl's conduct was, that in the meantime she had become a Christian, and had learned the meaning of the verse, "If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat; if he be thirsty, give him water to drink: for thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head."

How beautiful the conduct of this injured Christian girl appears in contrast with that of her heathen enemy! Let us imitate such conduct, and endeavor by God's grace to follow closely the teaching and example of Him who is the bright pattern of the Christian life. Jesus conquers by kindness and love. When we were enemies, he died for us; and in proportion as we have his spirit shall we manifest love and kindness toward any who have injured us or are unfriendly toward us.—Christian Banner.

THE SABBATH.

FROM THE GERMAN OF KRUMMACHER.

The Sabbath is here!
Like a dove out of heaven descending,
Toil and turmoil suspending,
Comes in the glad morn!
It smiles on the highway,
And down the green by way,
Mong fields of ripes corn.

The Sabbath is here!
Behold! the full sheaves own the blessing,
So plainly confessing
A Father's mild care.
In Sabbath noonstillness,
The crops in their fulness,
How graceful and fair!

The Sabbath is here!
No clank of the ploughchain we hear, now,—
No lash, far or near, now,—
No creaking of wheels.
With million low voices,
The harvest rejoices,
All over the fields.

The Sabbath is here!
The seed we in faith and hope planted;
God's blessing was granted;
It springs to the light,
We gaze now, and listen,
Where fields wave and glisten,
With grateful delight.

The Sabbath is here!
Give praise to the Father,
The fields are confessing!
Soon the reapers will come,
With rustling and ringing,
Of sickles, and bringing,
The yellow sheaves home.

The Sabbath is here!
The seed we in fond hope are sowing,
Will one day rise, glowing,
In the smile of God's love.
In dust though we leave it,
We trust to receive it,
In glory above!

GLEANINGS FROM THE CONVERSATION OF REV. JOHN NEWTON.

If two angels were sent down from heaven to execute the divine command, and one was appointed to conduct an empire, and the other to sweep a street, they would feel no inclination to change employments.

I should have thought mowers very idle people; but they work while they whet their scythes. So devotedness to God, or whether it mows or whets the scythe, still goes on with the work.

A Christian should never plead spiritually for being an idler or a sloven. If he be but a shoe black, he should be the best in the parish.

My principal method for defeating error and heresy, is by establishing truth. One proposes to fill a bushel with tares—now if I can fill it first with wheat, I may defy his attempt.

A Christian in the world, is like a man transacting his affairs in the rain. He will not suddenly leave his business because it rains—but the moment that business is done, he is off—as is said in the Acts of the Apostles, "Being let go, they went to their own company."

Many have puzzled themselves about the origin of evil. I am content to observe that there is evil, and that there is a way of escape from it, and with this I begin and end.

Seldom will Satan come to the Christian, at first with a gross temptation. A green log and a candle may safely be left together. But bring a few shavings, and then some small sticks, and then some larger, and soon you may bring the green log to ashes.

I would not give a straw for that assurance which sin will not damp. If David had come from his adultery, talking of his assurance at that time, I should have despised his speech.

For an old Christian to say to a young one, "Stand in my evidence," is like a man who has with difficulty climbed by a ladder to the top of the house, crying to some one at the bottom, "This is the place for a prospect—come up at a step."

I shall preach, perhaps, very usefully upon two opposite texts, so long as I keep them apart—but if I attempt to reconcile them where God has not done it, it is ten to one if I don't begin to bungle.

Christ has taken our nature into heaven to represent us. He has left us on earth with his nature, to represent him.

A wise man looks upon men as he does on horses—all their comparisons of title, wealth and place, he considers but as harness.

Some Christians, at first glance, seem of a superior order, when they are not. They want one quality. At a florist's exhibition the other day, a certain flower was determined to bear the bell, but it was found to be an artificial flower. There is a certain quality called growth which it had not.

Berlin.

Berlin is to Germany what Paris is to all Europe. It leads the van in all political, ecclesiastical, and pedagogical matters. Though with regard to the number of inhabitants but the seventh city in Europe, it has many advantages not met with in any other place.

Frederick the Great was the founder of Berlin's present glory; for whatever may be said about his irreligion and profanity, he was a great lover of his native city, and a great lover of great intellellect and ability. It was on that account that Voltaire was called to his court. In short, he prepared the way for the establishment of the "Frederick-Wilhelm University," which was founded in 1810 by one of his successors, Frederick-Wilhelm III.

With unparalleled rapidity, this university outgrew all its competitors. The University of Paris, and those of England are only second to that of Berlin. Its average number of professors is near two hundred and the number of students is seldom less than three thousand. Both professors and students are called and arrive from all parts of the globe. All nations are more or less represented. The university buildings are nearly all located on the famous promenado Unter den Linden; a circumstance that shows unmistakably that the founder had not neglected well to consider the proper site of a university—that of Athens, for instance, where all beauties of art and nature combined to render this place interesting. When the University of Paris was at its zenith of glory, half of the present city was then an imposing promenade, ever reminding the student of the ancient groves of Greece.

But more than any thing else contributed to make Berlin what it is, was such a rare union of talent in all the four faculties. Here was Schleiermacher, the most noted divine of the present century; here taught Neander, the father of Church history; here were the illustrious Tholuck, Hengstenberg, De Wette, and Strauss. Metaphysics had in Hegel and Fichte their representatives. The brothers Grimm lectured on German antiquities. Bopp and Lachman attempted to make Gesenius and Ewald look to their laurels. Lepsius, the noted antiquarian, was here employed. Carl Ritter explained the surface of the globe; Encke measured the course of the stars; and Ehrenberg devoloped his new system of natural science. Here also lived the sage of sages, A. Humboldt, who never knew that "——Not in mental, but in moral worth

Had excellency placed."

The new Museum of Berlin, connected with the university, is the most perfect in its kind. It is principally noted for Egyptian antiquities, collected by Lepsius and Erbkam. Here also you can find masterpieces from all celebrated painters and sculptors.

The library is nearly as large as that of Gottingen; it has now nearfive hundred and eighty thousand volumes, both books and manuscripts.

But Berlin's state of morals does not compare well to the excellencies of its university. What Tacitus said of Rome, "Quo cuncta undique atrocia aut pudenda confluent celebranturque," is also applicable to this city. Berlin has a population of 478,154 inhabitants, and for that vast number it has but thirty-eight churches, so that near forty thousand souls are supposed to attend one hour of divine worship.

The Berlin statistics show that of its inhabitants 380,939 are Protestants, that is, Lutheran, or Reformed; 12,837 are Roman Catholics; 11,892 are Jews; 92 are members of the Greek Church; 14 Mennonites; the rest belonging to other sects.—From the N. Y. Watchman.

THE SEA.

The sea is not only the emblem of change: it is itself the cause, directly or indirectly, of nearly all the physical changes that take place in the world. Ascend the mountain summit, and there, amid the crags where the eagle builds her eyrie, and the heather grows in the blue immeasurable silence of heaven, you tread the shores of a former sea, whose shells and corals imbedded in the rocks are still as perfect and beautiful as when the last retiring wave rippled over them.

Descend into the stony chambers of the earth, and there in the darkness of the quarry you will see the petrified skeletons of fish that once swam in the waters, and the sands that formed the shores of unknown seas, and the undulating ripple marks left behind by the ebb and flow of long forgotten tides. We cannot name a single spot where the sea has not some time or other been.

Every rock that now constitutes the firm foundation of the earth was once dissolved in its waters, lay as mud at its bottom, or as sand and gravel along its shore. The materials of our houses were once deposited in its depths, and are built on the floor of an ancient ocean. What are now dry continents were once ocean beds; and what are now sea beds will be future continents.

Everywhere the sea is still at work—encroaching upon the shore—undermining the boldest cliffs on the coasts by its own direct agency. And where it can not reach itself, it sends its emmissaries to the very heart of deserts, and the very summits of mountain ranges, and the very innermost recesses of continents—there to produce constant dilapidation and change. Its own waters are confined by the shore line; but no voice has ever said to its fleet-footed winds and its viewless vapors, "Hitherto shall ye come, and no further." They rise from their ocean bed, these messengers of the sea, and pursue their flight along the sky until some lofty peak far in the interior arrests them; and they discharge their watery burden into its bosom, forming the sources of streams and rivers and glaciers, that carry on the work of change where the roar of the sea itself is never heard.—McMillan in Family Treasury.

The Silent Monitor.

In the great earthquake that destroyed the city of Caraccas in 1812, with 40,000 inhabitants, says a recent travoller:

The clock of the cathedral was stopped, as is supposed, by the first shock. The tower in which the dials are placed, one fronting each quarter of the heavens, remained standing. Although the clock has been repaired and set going again, one of these dials and its hands have never been disturbed. They still point to the hour and minute which heralded so many thousand souls without a single moment's warning into eternity. According to this, twenty minutes past four o'clock, P. M., was the moment of the first shock. I have seen the silent yet awful monitor myself. Now, when after the lapse of more than one-third of a century, a new city has sprung up on the spot where stood that whose destruction it witnessed, new thousands, when they raise their eyes to ascertain "what's the clock," are thus warned of the dread fate of those other thousands who thus so suddenly preceded them to the dim, cold home to which we are so speedily hastening.

Instance of Avarice.

My Lord Hardwich, the late Lord Chancellor, who is said to be worth $4,000,000, sets the same value on half a crown now, as he did when he was worth only $500. That great captain, the Duke of Marlborough, when he was in the last stage of life, and very infirm, would walk from the public room in Bath to his lodgings, on a cold, dark night, to save a sixpence in chair hire. If the Duke, who left at his death more than a million and a half sterling, could have foreseen that all his wealth and honors were to be inherited by a grandson of Lord Trevor's, who had been one of his enemies, would he have always saved a sixpence?

Sir James Lowther, after changing a piece of silver in St. George's coffee-house, and paying for his dish of coffee, was helped into his chair, (for he was lame and infirm,) and went home; some time after, he returned to the same coffee-house on purpose to acquaint the woman who kept it, that she had given him a bad half-penny and demanded another in exchange for it. Sir James had about $240,000 per annum, and was at a loss whom to appoint his heir. I know one Sir Thomas Colby, who lived in Kensington, and was, I think, in the Victualing Office; he killed himself by rising in the middle of the night, when he was in a profuse sweat, the effect of medicine which he had taken for that purpose, and walked down stairs to look for the key of his cellar, which he had inadvertently left on a table in his parlor; he was apprehensive that his servants might seize the key and rob him of a bottle of port wine. This man died intestate, and left more than $6,000,000 in the funds, which were shared among five or six day-laborers who were his nearest relations.

Sir William Smythe, of Bedfordshire, was my own khamau. When he was near seventy, he was wholly deprived of his sight; he was persuaded to be couched by Taylor, the oculist, who, by agreement, was to have sixty guineas if he restored his patient to any degree of sight. Taylor succeeded in his operation, and Sir William was able to read and write without the use of spectacles during the rest of his life; but as soon as the operation was performed and Sir William saw the good effect of it, instead of being overjoyed, as any other person would have been, he began to lament the loss (as he called it,) of his sixty guineas. His contrivance, therefore, was how to cheat the oculist; he pretended he could not see anything perfectly; for that reason, the bandage of his eyes was continued a month longer than the usual time. By this means, he obliged Taylor to compound the bargain, and accept of twenty guineas; for a covetous man thinks no method dishonest, which he may legally practice to save his money.—[Dr. King's Anecdotes of his own Times.

GOUP HIGHER.

You have heard of the poor traveler who, pursued by hungry wolves, took refuge in the wide-spread arms of a friendly tree. They could not climb, they could only howl and gnash their teeth below. But all their snarling only sent him higher into the leafy coverts above, till he had a secure resting place. He could hear their voices, it is true, but they could not harm him. They could not rise to his hight. No fear of his dropping asleep in such a position and falling into their midst. With his cruse of water and wallet of bread, he knew he could stand a siege as long as his assailants. Then, too, he had the hope that with the morning sun the dusky pack, which always love darkness better than light, would be off to their den and caves. The result proved his hopes were not in vain. With the morning sun came release and comfort to the thankful traveler.

Christians, when evil tongues assail you wrongfully, go up higher. They can not hurt you in those upper steeps. If some hungry, greedy wolf determines to make you his prey, fear not if you can rise above him in the shelter of God's loving favor. You may stand a life-long siege there. For the cruse of water and the bread of life will never grow less, however long you may feed upon them. God will bring you forth safe and unharmed, and will make even this affliction to work good for you.

But as sure as you stay on the low level of your calumniators—as long as you "render railing for railing," you will surely get hurt to your soul. Learn to love your enemies, bless them that curse you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you. And who is it that will harm you "if ye be followers of that which is good?"

A Parallel.

Paul, summing up the inward conflict of the Christian, says in the seventh of Romans, "So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin."—Kapiolani, one of the earliest and most intelligent of the Hawaiian converts, once asked a missionary if he did not think she had two souls, saying that it seemed to her that she had one good soul and one bad one. One says God is very good; and it loves God, prays to him and loves preaching, and loves to talk about good things. The other one says it does no good to pray to God, and to go to meeting, and keep the Sabbath." The first century and the nineteenth century speak the same language, for the workings of nature and of grace are the same. The inward conflict so graphically described by the Apostle is strange to all but those who have gone through it. To such, experience furnishes the best of commentaries.—Christian Intelligen.

They that deserve nothing should be content with anything. Bless God for what you have, and trust God for what you want. If we cannot bring our condition to our mind, we must bring our mind to our condition. If a man is not content in the state he is in, he will not be content in the state he would be in.

Humility is the lesson for the rich—contentment for the poor.

CHEERFUL WOMEN.

Oh, if "gloomy" women did but know what comfort there is in a cheerful spirit! How the heart leaps up to meet a sunshiny face, a merry tongue, an even temper, and a heart which either naturally, or what is better, from conscientious principle, has learned to take all things on the bright side, believing that the Giver of life being all perfect love, the best offering we can make to Him is to enjoy to the full what He sends of good, and bear what He allows of evil; like a child who, when once it believes in its father, believes all his dealings with it, whether it understands them or not.

Among the secondary influences which can be employed, either by or upon a naturally anxious or morbid temperament, there is none so ready to hand, or so wholesome, as that so often referred to—constant employment. A very large number of women, particularly young women, are by nature constituted so exceedingly restless of mind, or with such a strong tendency to depression, that they can by no possibility keep themselves in a state of even tolerable cheerfulness, except by being continually occupied.—Miss Mulock.

The Millennium.

A literary curiosity has just appeared in London, under the title of "Louis Napoleon the Destined Monarch of the world," &c., by the Rev. M. Baxter, author of "The Coming Battle."

It is said that 12,000 copies have been sold—the book finding readers, notwithstanding its apparent absurdity, on account of the noteworthy names used by the authorities. We are indebted to Mr. Baxter for the cheerful news that the world is to end in 1873—so that people may set about their preparations for that event as soon as they like; but during the brief interval of six or seven years, the Emperor of the French is to become sole monarch of the world, personally representing the Antichrist of the latter day. He is to become supreme over England and most of America, the rest of Christendom submitting to his sway. He is to make a covenant with the Jews, who by his aid are to return to Palestine, resume their rank as a nation and rebuild Jerusalem. Napoleon is then to begin and carry on the persecution of Christians, which answers to the pouring out of the vials. "Two years and six weeks" after the date of the covenant with the Jews, "the ascension of the 144,000 wise virgins" is expected to occur. The Jews are to be favored only for seven years and two and a half months, and then the great battle of Armageddon is to take place, in which Louis Napoleon (the "great beast") is to be defeated and slain. This is a revelation more startling than any of Dr. Cummings' inventions.

THE POPULATION OF FRANCE—CURIOUS STATISTICS.—Some curious statistics have just been published concerning the population of France. It appears that the females number 18,631,037, and the males 18,745,276, forming altogether 9,054,030 families. There exists 5,009,120 boys under age, and 6,106,331 girls. Of 8,579,016 unmarried persons there are 5,479,850 females. There are 931,023 widowers, and 1,790,126 widows. Of the widowers 18 are only 20 years of age, and there are 820 widows of the same age. France possesses at this moment 1,520,154 girls, of from fifteen to twenty years of age, and 1,308,366 boys of the same age. The greatest example of longevity are supplied by females. Three females out of four unmarried persons have reached the age of 106 and two widows have passed that age. 17,171 Frenchmen and only 9,508 Frenchwomen are deaf and dumb; 22,319 Frenchwomen have become insane, and only 2,372 Frenchmen.

THE OVERLAND TELEGRAPH.—The Overland Telegraph enterprise is a gigantic affair. Through British America, 1,200 miles; through Russian America, 900; across Behring Stralt, 184; across the Gulf of Anadyr, 210; and thence overland to the mouth of the Amoor River, 1,800; or a total of 3,394 miles. At the Amoor it is to be continued by a Russian line connecting it with Irkoutsk, through Western Siberia, communicating with Nijui-Novgorod and Moscow, and thence to St. Petersburg. The capital involved amounts to ten millions of dollars.

Afflictions may buzz and hum about the believer, like bees that have lost their sting; but they can never hurt him.

Humility glorifies God; pride dishonors Him. Humility makes men to be like angels; pride makes angels to become devils.

NEW ORLEANS:
SATURDAY, - - - JUNE 30, 1866.

TO ADVERTISERS.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has always been well known in this community as the very best advertising medium by which the business men of the city could bring their merchandise, trades, professions, and the like, before country readers in the States just named. This is easily understood when it is remembered that the four hundred preachers who are scattered throughout these States, in the Rio Grande, East Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Montgomery and Mobile, Methodist Conferences, are all, more or less, active agents for the paper; and when it is also remembered that our payer circulates among a large class of people who seldom see any other New Orleans paper.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

	1 Month.	6 Mos.	12 Mos.
One square....	$ 5 00	$20	$30 00
Two squares....	7 50	25	40 00
Three squares....	10 00	30	50 00
Four squares...	12 50	35	60 00

Larger advertisements in proportion.

TO OUR AGENTS AND SUBSCRIBERS

1. The price of the paper is FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE: and it will be sent for 12 months only, unless the subscription price is renewed. We propose to keep no other books than the one containing the names of subscribers and their address. Due notice will be given in the paper a few weeks previous to the end of the subscription.

2. All travelling Preachers in the several patronizing Conferences throughout the Southwest are our Agents. They will receive a paper for five subscribers, and be paid one dollar for each subscription over that number.

3. If money forwarded by mail is registered at the Postoffice when it is mailed, we will take the responsibility of its safety. But where it can be forwarded by private hands, the security is greater.

4. Be explicit in writing names and offices and routes—especially in directing to the "New Orleans CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE," as the Church North has already issued a sheet in this city entitled the "New Orleans Advocate."

Address Rev. J. C. KEENER, D. D., or Rev. J. B. WALKER, D. D.

PREMIUM TO AGENTS.

We offer Agents of the New Orleans Christian Advocate a PHOTOGRAPHIC PICTURE OF THE GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church South, held in New Orleans, for every FIVE subscribers they may forward to us: and this in addition to the commission already offered.

B. F. ALEXANDER, P. E.

Messrs. W. A. BELL & Co., General Commission Merchants, 41 Natchez street, insert their card in our advertising columns this week. At Vicksburg Col. Ogden, of this firm, gave full satisfaction to all who required his services.

BISHOP MARVIN.—We are requested by Rev. Thos. J. Upton to announce that Bishop Marvin will be at Mount Lebanon, La., on Sunday, the 22d July, and will ordain any who may desire ordination and who have certificates of election thereto.

BISHOP KAVANAUGH.—This excellent servant of the church, says the Memphis Advocate of June 14th, according to announcement, preached Sabbath morning last at the Central Church in this city.—The congregation was very large, filling the house to its utmost capacity, and though quite feeble in body, the Bishop preached a powerful and deeply impressive sermon.

The Old School Louisville Presbytery adjourned after a four days' session. This body proceeded, irrespectively of the General Assembly, to adjudicate the Walnut street church case, ignoring the elders indorsed by the Assembly. They adopted the action of their commissioners at St. Louis as their own, and proceeded throughout, on the ground that from the time their delegates were excluded, the Assembly had no jurisdiction over them, and its acts, so far as concerns this Presbytery, are an usurpation. A minority who desired to sustain the General Assembly withdrew, and formed another Presbytery, which adjourned after denouncing the old Presbytery as schismatics, and warning the people against them.

EXAMPLE DEMANDED.

The great change which has passed upon the social and political condition of the South, raises the inquiry, whether the discipline and doctrines, the church machinery and ministrations of the old period are adapted to the new. A system developed and fostered amid circumstances of abounding prosperity, may be supposed to be poorly suited to the straitened fortunes of our people at the present hour.—Both laymen and ministers of the Church South may find pressing upon them obligations and claims more than they ever bargained for, or even imagined as within the possible future. The minister is disposed to carefully go over the original grounds of his call to preach; and the layman examines with critical interest those great principles of christianity which require men to render to Cæsar the things of Cæsar, and to God the things of God.

To be able to receive the lesson of this new period, and to rise to the height of that great truth, that the obligations of the Church are not dependent on circumstances, implies the presence of the maturest and noblest graces of spiritual life. To solve the whole problem, as to present demands, it is necessary to go back, not to the state of things immediately preceding, but to the very starting points of Methodism. The labyrinth of difficulties in which our ancestors found themselves in its very inception, was of the most discouragiug nature. To use the language of Dr. Dixon, "They were not merely of a negative quality; as the want of encouragement, power, property, colleges, church organization, rules of action, and promising fields of inviting enterprize—all of which are important, and in most religious bodies essential. To advance into untried scenes of evangelical labor without being sustained by this corps de reserve of funds, friends, and means, is esteemed an evidence of enthusiasm. These advantages were all absent in the first efforts of our body. But more than this, positive barriers of every sort seemed to block up their prospect of success. The religious world frowned, took up the weapons of controversy, assailed the feeble but noble phalanx of evangelical soldiers; ecclesiastical authorities resorted to direct persecution; while in the world without almost unniversal ignorance of the truth of God prevailed, attended by indifference, irreligion, profligate habits, and all exasperated by a widespread skepticism."

To this state of things those early heroes opposed the force of a single principle, the felt imperative obligation to preach the Gospel. Their commission impelled them to disregard impediments and morbid views of consequences, and to act upon the one simple rule—discharge the present duty. "It is a noble spectacle to behold great and grand enterprises undertaken, difficulties overcome, conquests won, and important results wrought from the mere force of indomitable principle; or, rather, from the elevating influence of piety and the rich annointing of the Holy One." In taking a fresh "departure," we cannot too closely study and imitate the example and lives of men who were the embodiment of the qualities which insure success. And Methodism has been wondrously blessed in men. On the other side of the sea Wesley, and on this side Asbury, surpassed all modern evangelists in the abundance of their labors. As to Bishop Asbury, during the forty-five years of his ministry he delivered "not less than sixteen thousand four hundred and twenty-five sermons, besides lectures and exhortations innumerable; he travelled about two hundred and seventy thousand miles for the most part on horseback; he sat in two hundred and twenty-four Annual Conferences and ordained more than four thousand ministers. This is a series of great labors," says Dr., now Bishop Wightman, "to which I doubt if the whole history of Christianity for eighteen centuries can find a parallel." Add to this illustrious example that of McKendry, Valentine Cook, John Lane, Nolley, Rutor, Capers, not to mention scores of others, and we shall see that God has not left our Church "without witnesses" of her faithfulness.

As we believe that a purpose as single, a devotion as complete, and an energy as abundant, are demanded to carry our Church on and through the pressure of the present as at any former period of its history, we cannot doubt that the Spirit of God will

"With holy conquering zeal inspire"

the leaders of our Israel. It is natural for men to look upward for example. And "God hath set some in the Church, first Apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers." The idea that the aggressive character and forward movement which inheres to Methodism belongs to a pioneer condition of society, is wide of its history. It was born amid the aristocratic walks and cloisters of Oxford, and grew up in the crowded thoroughfares of London; it was the outgrowth of a period and a condition the most enlightened and christianly, speaking after the manner of men. It did not assail savages but sages. It stood on the Acropolis of Christendom and called men to a spiritual knowledge of Him whom they ignorantly worshipped. It flourished and flourishes best where men are crowded and in motion—in the great centres of human life. The time and energy it takes to travel round a continent is but a feeble illustration of this principle of aggression; but in this thin country a very necessary expression of it. Space is a disadvantage, but it must be overcome by somebody. And the way the world reasons, these long marches are great achievements when necessary to the success of the campaign. They are reckoned almost a part of the fight. Be that as it may, Methodism seeks the enemy, whether he dwells in "country wild or city full," with equal energy. "Nothing suits the genius of our economy but new enterprize, new conquests, and new fields of evangelical labor—successfully cultivated. We are not to wait for invitations—the dead in sin never cry for help or for places of worship; this follows, never precedes the preaching of the Gospel; nor are we to look for countenance, favor and support—these are won by the evidences of usefulness."

If Southern Methodism has any experience, any character, any men of cultivated power, of exalted moral worth, of tried qualities, who by long years of self-denial and godly zeal, have acquired a prestige and influence for God and for good among all classes of the people, the time has come for sending these men to the front. That is to say, it will no longer do to substitute the less accomplished, the less experienced, and the less commanding ministerial persons in the place of the PRINCIPALS, when arduous and perilous evangelic enterprizes are on foot.

Isaac Taylor, in his "Wesley and Methodism," has a paragraph which is in point, and which we quote entire, for the benefit of Elders and of "all whom it may concern:"—"It seems often to have been imagined that itinerant preaching is mainly useful as affording a preparatory exercise for tyro preachers—a serviceable training and breaking in, well fitted to the purpose of exhausting a little and of usefully expending the animal courage and the exuberant zeal of young and raw probationers for the ministerial office. 'Let these fiery youths,' it is said, 'go forth for us and break the ground;—they may, perhaps, do some harm; but they will do more good; and we will follow in due time.' Among the many errors into which senile indolence may lead men, there can be none, surely, more pernicious or more awfully delusive than this—none that is more conclusively contradicted by the most authoritative of all precedents, that of the apostolic age; or more at variance with the most pertinent of modern instances, that of Methodism. The pattern ITINERANT of primitive Christianity was none other than the loftiest spirit of the age, the most learned and accomplished man of his nation, and who lacked nothing that could fit him for this the most arduous of all services—nothing but a commanding presence. Or did Methodism make England and America its own to so great an extent as it did by the sending out of youths—preachers who had more fire than beard? Did the founders of Methodism—did those true heroes and martyrs of the modern Church, did they sit in committee, with maps and plans before them, and thence, from their chairs of ease, trumpet the question, 'Who will go for us?' It was not so: these great men—great they were in energy and courage—went themselves; they never said to others, 'Go, and we will follow you,' but always, 'We go—follow us and help us.'"

Duke W. Goodman.

We have read with sad interest the tribute paid to the memory of an honored and much loved friend in the following notice:

On the sixth of this present month of June, the sad intelligence spread rapidly through our city, that at half-past eight o'clock that morning Duke W. Goodman had passed away from earth. Although not altogether unexpected, his death came upon us with a sudden shock. A deep, heartfelt sorrow, at once pervaded the whole community. All felt that the city of Mobile had sustained a great loss, while many, very many mourned him as a dear personal friend. It is to our friend in whom we knew that we could confide, that we now pay this feeble tribute of affectionate and grateful remembrance; but in expressing our own admiration and regard, we are also giving words to the feelings of hundreds.

He was born in Abbeville District, South Carolina, April 5th, 1811. He removed with his father to Tuscaloosa, Alabama, but at the early age of sixteen, with that energy that always characterized him, he went out from the shelter of the paternal roof to seek his own fortune in the world. After a residence of some years at Claiborne in this State, he came in 1835 to Mobile, where he spent the strength and energy of his manhood, in the successful prosecution of his worldly business and in doing good to his fellow-men and to the church of God, until it pleased God to release him from the toils and cares of this life, by taking him to his everlasting rest.

As a man of business, he was charactorized by unbending integrity, industry, energy and perseverance. As a citizen, he was sagacious, enterprising and public spirited, showing kindness to the poor and ready sympathy with all kinds of distress. He was a genial, warm hearted, affectionate friend, he possessed a noble form and bright, speaking countenance, and when he met his friends his face would light up with a radiant expression of pleasure, and his ready hand would give the warm, honest pressure which left no doubt of the sincerity of his affection.

He was a man of truly noble nature, shrinking from all that was mean or base. For nearly thirty years he was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to which he was sincerely and ardently attached and to which he always extended a liberal support. His house where he dispensed a princely hospitality, was the home of the Methodist preachers, when their journeyings brought them to Mobile, and many hearts among them will be made very sad when they learn that they can never behold his face on earth again.

But though honestly attached to his own church, he had a truly Catholic spirit, and we as Presbyterians would be unjust to ourselves and ungrateful to our God, if we failed to present our tribute to the memory of the generous heart and open hand, which cheered and helped us in our labors for the cause of our one Lord and Saviour.—Presbyterian Index.

GOODMAN AND BAKER.

From Dr. Summers' Editorial correspondence we take this mention of these honored and sainted brethren:—

"I have just been informed of an event which fills me with inexpressible sorrow—the death of Duke W. Goodman! He was at New Orleans during the session of the General Conference, and an eminent physician of that city, who examined him, stated that this heart was seriously diseased. This filled us with painful apprehensions. He returned to Mobile, and grew worse rapidly, and, on June 6, was suddenly removed to his home on high. How quickly he followed his devoted bosom friend, the sainted Baker! Glorious Gemini! How brightly they shone in the firmament of the Church below? With what surpassing splendor do they now shine in the eternal heaven! "Lovely and pleasant were they in their lives; and in their death they were scarcely divided." It is well with them—but O! how sad it is to us who survive them! I hope one of our brethren in Mobile will furnish us, as soon as possible, an extended memoir of our dear departed brother, comprehending full details of his latter end. But in the case of such a man as Duke W. Goodman, we need no dying testimony.

His life was gentle; and the elements
So mixed in him, that nature might stand up
And say to all the world, This was a man!

A dispatch from Louisville, dated the 28th inst., says: A very large meeting was held at the Second Congregational Church last night. They sustained Dr. Stuart Robinson, their pastor, elected a new elder, and indorsed the Louisville Presbytery, against the late General Assembly at St. Louis.

From the Nashville Advocate of 21st inst., we take the following items of interest. We judge that Drs. Redford and Summers are both at their posts:

THE PUBLISHING HOUSE.

No Institution of the South suffered to a greater extent, during the war through which we have passed, than did the Publishing House of the M. E. Church, South. Soon after the occupancy of this city by the Federal troops, it was taken possession of by the military authorities, and held for some time after the surrender of the Confederate armies. The business of the House was nearly entirely suspended, and the small amount of business that was done was confined to the second floor of the building, almost entirely inaccessible to ladies, and presenting but few, if any, attractions to any one who might chance to have business with the Agent. For this condition of things the Agent was not and could not be responsible. His duties were as well and as efficiently performed as it was possible to perform them, under these circumstances. The large salesroom, on the first floor, was not in his possession; the military occupied it, and the only rooms which he could occupy were those to which we have referred.

A different state of things, however, now exists. The noise of war has been hushed in the stillness of peace. The Publishing House, with all its appurtenances, has been restored to us, and once more we enter the commercial circles, hoping to reoccupy the proud position held by us in our palmy days. The work of refitting the large salesroom, that was so inviting to our friends and patrons, previous to the war, will be commenced at once and in a few weeks we expect to place upon its shelves the most attractive stock of general and miscellaneous merchandise, belonging to our department, to be found in this vicinity.

From the Christian Recorder, the organ of the African M. E. Church, published in Philadelphia, we copy the following article:—

"M. E. CHURCH SOUTH—COLORED PEOPLE."

Under this caption, we find in the Christian Advocate and Journal, of the 31st ultimo, an article from the New Orleans Advocate, stamped with the superscription of the distinguished editor of the former journal.

We do not allude to it for the purpose of relieving the M. E. Church, South, from reproach for unfaithfulness to the highest interests of the colored people in the past, which it so justly merits, but to suggest that the wholesale tirade in which it indulges against the M. E. Church, South, comes with ill grace from a representative man of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North.) Especially from one who was so exceedingly anxious to bask in the smiles of the M. E. Church, South.

We find it impossible to discover what the M. E. Church did for the liberation or intellectual improvement of the colored people before the war. We do know that their ministers, generally, lent their influence to the oppressor—that admission to their Annual Conferences was denied to colored men—that pro-slavery pastors were foisted upon colored congregations, who would preach over a deceased member's remains and refuse to speak of him as a "Brother."

We do know that white pastors were frequently appointed over colored congregations in the Border States, who would not take a colored child in their arms to baptize it. We do know that the colored Deacons and Elders they ordained, received the rite in private. How the M. E. Church can read lectures to the M. E. Church, South, consistently, we are unable to see; for if they have gotten rid of their Anti-Negroism disease, they certainly have not been rid of it long, for we do not yet behold in their organization the healthful glow of the spirit of liberty. The representative man of the M. E. Church, speaking of the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, says:

"The Bishops of the A. M. E. Church, recognizing the fact that the M. E. Church, South, is their best friend, sent to the General Conference their Christian greeting, and, confiding in the world-renowned generosity of the southern people, preferred the humble request that certain church property occupied by their membership might be peacefully transferred to them."

Who told Dr. Newman about the "Bishops of the A. M. E. Church recognizing the fact that the M. E. Church, South, is their best friend?" The Bishops never said so. The organ of our denomination never said so. Did Dr. Newman hear it? dream it? or say so, because it was convenient and nice to say it, and it helped him to write a "caustic article?"

We have animadverted upon the treatment of our delegates by the General Conference failing to receive them in open Conference; but we think the representative men of the M. E. Church should "first take the beam out of their own eyes," before they talk about it. The Annual Conferences of the M. E. Church have never admitted colored ministers as members thereof, with perhaps this exception:—The New England Conference admitted one with some opposition and got rid of him as soon as they could.

The Kentucky, and perhaps Mississippi Conference, admitted colored men as probationers, with the understanding that they were to be formed into Mission Conferences by themselves. The M. E. Church cannot afford to talk about the M. E. Church, South, giving our delegate a back seat when they give the colored people a back seat nearly every where in the North.

We have gained rather more by our delegation to the M. E. Church, South, than what the learned Doctor of the Advocate supposes. We have established an amicable relation that will result in our peaceable occupancy of all meeting-houses whose congregations have or may unite with us. The M. E. Church (North) would have lost nearly all its colored congregations, if they could not have been made to give up the church property, which is deeded to the Trustees under conditions prescribed by the Discipline.

We have done what doubtless many in the M. E. Church tried to do and failed. We do not deal with the Southern people as our enemies, but seek to cultivate kind relations with them, believing that an Ex-Rebel Methodist can become a true friend to the colored man as well as a Northern negro-proscribing Methodist can.

From a recent number of the New York Methodist we take the annexed account of

THE CENTENARY AT JOHN-STREET.

It was to be expected that the members of the John-street Methodist church would have a conspicuous part in the celebration of the Centenary of American Methodism. And they appointed and have held a service in many respects unique. The representatives of the ancient families here many of them present. As many of the relics of the olden time as could be procured were gathered together. The venerable Daniel Ayres, who nearly half a century ago led the choir of this church, was on hand, and led the singing once more; and the equally venerable Heman Bangs, who was pastor of John-street in the olden time, presided, and made the opening address. The building was filled to repletion. Before opening the services Mr. Bangs struck a light, and lit the candles on the pulpit—a performance which afforded considerable amusement to the younger part of the assemblage. He then said: "In olden times they always commenced meeting at early candle light. Here are a couple of candlesticks that used to belong to Barbara Heck, the first Methodist in America. She gave them to the first church that was ever built in New York, and here they are to-night just as they used to be lighted on the old pulpit, and there is Barbara's old hymn-book that she brought with her from Ireland. It never has been rebound. And then we have a relic here. Look at that, enough to knock a man's brains out. (Here he held up a piece of timber about three feet long.) This is what is painted on it: 'This is part of the timber of the old sail-loft, the first Methodist preaching house in America, now No. 120 William-street, New York; and this is given to the John-street Methodist Episcopal church to take care of.' And here is some of the original pulpit, and here is the chair in which it is said Bishop Asbury used to sit. Look at this (exhibiting the wooden chair to the audience) you who sit on cushions."

After the close of the pithy address of Heman Bangs, Rev. G. L. Taylor recited a poem which was received with great favor, a hymn by Rev. F. Bottom was sung, and an address was delivered by Rev. J. B. Wakeley. The Sunday-school of John-street church was reviewed by G. P. Disosway, and an essay on our Methodist music was read by the venerable Daniel Ayres. The meeting continued with unabated interest until long after ten o'clock.

A sensation preacher in London calculates that the world has existed one hundred and fifty million years.

BRITISH METHODIST CHURCHES.—It is rumored that Rev. Dr. Osborn, one of the secretaries of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, is to be offered the presidency of the missionary college, which will be completed about a year hence, and that in case of his acceptance, Rev. Mr. Punshon will be called to the post of missionary secretary in his place. The question of the union of the various branches of British Methodism is now engaging the attention of some of the leading Methodists in England. The Wesleyan Times of May 14 contains an outspoken letter from Rev. Dr. W. Cooke considering the question affirmatively, and this letter has been transferred in full into the British Standard with an approving editorial by Rev. Dr. Campbell. The Times of May 21 says that thousands of intelligent persons who have no connection with Methodism, yet who ardently wish it prosperity, "inquire what are the distinctions between the several sections of Methodism; and, though they may see a sufficient reason for separation of the Methodist New Connexion and the United Methodist Free churches from another; and the continual exclamation from such persons is, 'Why do not the two bodies unite? Surely, when so nearly alike, they could make mutual concessions without any compromise of principle; and, united, they would become a powerful and an influential body. There is unquestionably much force in these remarks, a force of truth and of argument which cannot reasonably be resisted." The Wesleyan Methodists, some time ago, built a hall in Bishopsgate street, London, on freehold which cost them £35,000 ($169,400.) They have been recently offered £157,000 ($719,880) for the property.

THE POPE DISGUSTED.—Even the Pope, it appears, has become disgusted with the numerous sham miracles that have made a laughing-stock of the Romish Church in Europe. Several astounding cases of exorcism, said to have occurred recently near Rome, have especially excited his disapprobation. A young girl, named Mariangola, was taken every day for some weeks to church to be exorcised by the monks, who said she was possessed with a whole legion of devils. Every day two or three were got rid of. On Sundays crowds of people flocked to the church to witness the ceremony, when the names of the devils cast out that day were solemnly proclaimed. The girl must have been terribly possessed indeed, if we may judge by the list of one day: Bego, Asmodeo, Belzebu Lampo, Justiæ Declinator, etc. This imposition was too much even for the patience of a Pope, and he took the girl from the monks and gave her in charge of a physician.

SUPPLIES.—A very large number of the Congregational Churches of Massachusetts, are destitute of regular pastors, and are accommodated by supplies. Every Saturday, Congregationalist Headquarters, No 15 Cornhill, Boston, are filled with ministers, carpetbags in hand, waiting for the arrival, or application by letter, of committees desiring preachers for the Sabbath. Sometimes the number reaches from 40 to 75 preachers. The average price paid for a Sabbath day's work is $20 exclusive of traveling expenses. From this style of preaching the Gospel a large number of ministers are allowed an almost constant residence in Boston, but the Churches so served must suffer from the loss of pastoral attention.

The Paris Moniteur makes an important announcement. The town of Encemiadzin, near Mount Arrat, the residence of the Patriarch, contains a splendid library composed of three thousand Armenian manuscripts, of which the literary world was hitherto quite ignorant. A catalogue of the collection has now been printed, and presents a vast field for researches into the religious and political history of Central Asia. It reveals the existence of unknown works by the fathers of the church, and of fragments of Diodores Sicilius, and of Aristotle. The Armenian Patriarch states, in an official preface, that those manuscripts which have been kept secret will be for the future not only open to examination, but that extracts may be taken for learned men in all parts of the world, if they pay the cost of copying.

"O Thou God seest me!"

PROF. FORSHEY BEFORE THE RECONSTRUCTION COMMITTEE.

On the application of the Hon. Reverdy Johnson, of Maryland, Col. Forshey, formerly of this city, now of Texas, was summoned to appear before the Reconstruction Committee, to testify in the condition and disposition of the States lately in rebellion. He told them, in a very straightforward way, a good many truths:

Q. Of what State are you a resident, and how long. A. I have resided twelve years in the State of Texas.

Q. From what State did you emigrate to Texas? A. I claim to be a Virginian, though chiefly reared in Ohio, whither my father removed from Virginia in my childhood; I received my collegiate education at Kenyon College, Ohio, my military and scientific education at West Point; my life of manhood has been passed in Louisiana and Texas.

Q. Have you been in the rebel service, and in what way? A. I have served during the war; and was Lieutenant Colonel of Engineers, chiefly engaged in the defences west of the Mississippi.

Q. What is the state of public order and obedience to the United States authorities in Texas, and the other States of which you have acknowledged? A. Good order and obedience are universal in Texas and elsewhere, as I believe. It has never been otherwise in Texas, unless probably on the Rio Grande frontier there may be occasional exceptions among the turbulent characters that have no special habitation either side of the border.

Q. Please state whether that good order you describe is due to the presence and authority of the United States troops, and whether, upon their removal, there would not be disorder and disloyalty? A. It is certainly in no degree due to the presence of troops. In fact, any exceptions to the remark may be imputed to the irritating fact that soldiers are about. Their removal would be everywhere a public blessing, unless needed on the frontier to guard against Indians or Mexican robbers.

Q. Why do you say "irritating," are they not well behaved? A. Generally they are, but their presence is understood as an emblem of our submission. Every bayonet is a symbol of our subjugation, and is viewed as an evidence that our surrender and parole are not received in good faith. We need no watching, and naturally dislike the guards that watch us.

Q. Would loyal men be safe among you without Federal protection? A. All men were safe before there was any Federal authority among us. After the surrender we were months without officers or law. A military order vacated or annulled all official functions, and deprived us of every species of legal restraint, and for months furnished no substitute for the authority suppressed. Troops have not at any time reached our interior generally, and yet, throughout the vast area of Texas, just replenished by the return of fifty thousand disbanded soldiers, there was no good order and as much respect for rights and morals as in any Northern State or elsewhere. I regard it as a great test of our civilization; I wish the fact to be put on record in our favor. The same was true, as I believe, in most of the Southern States. Not a single resistance to Federal authority has ever taken place to the present day; and when it is considered that half a million of men have just returned from a conflict of four years in which they have fought for national life and honor, we think they should claim a respect that should remove sentiuels and disband the armies, white and black, that watch us.

Q. Is it generally believed that the troops are kept to humiliate the people? A. Perhaps that would too strongly express it. They feel it is calculated to humiliate, and that those who order it are reckless of this fact. We believe it to be obvious to all, both North and South, that negro troops placed to guard their late masters, is viewed with repugnance and proper indignation by every man, woman and child of true spirit in the South; and some of the military treatment of the South is accepted by them as intended to degrade them.

Q. Have negro troops been generally sent as garrisons in Texas?

A. Fortunately they have not. On the frontier they have been sent in great numbers, but we have very little population there, and do not feel it. At Galveston they have had them, but only passing to and from other service. I fear that the results would have been serious had they been generally sent through Texas. There are some things our returned soldiers would not bear, and I believe that is one. The question as to the safety of loyal men I have not fully answered. From the time of surrender there were agents and drummers, and cotton buyers from the Northern States all over Texas; and at this time they and other emigrants and travelers from the loyal States, so called, probably number thousands in Texas. In no case have they been interrupted, so far as I know. If there have been exceptions, they were doubtless the result of imprudent meddling, or censorious language. This will provoke individual retort and chastisement anywhere in Texas. Those who mind their own business will be unmolested. It is one of our habits to mind our own business, and to expect and require it of others. We are glad to receive men who bring capital to help us revive our shattered fortunes, and do not care whence they come. I believe these remarks hold good for all the late Confederate States.

Q. Do your people view the Freedmen's Bureau as a valuable and needful institution, and profitable in the re-establishment of negro labor?

A. They do not. According to my own observation and the testimony of acquaintances, with whom I have just compared views, from five distant portions of our great State, the influence of the Freedmen's Bureau is universally pernicious, and the institution is viewed by the people, almost unanimously, as a nuisance. The remark applies, too, according to my information, to the other States.

Q. Why so? A. For various causes; the bureau is administered, as far as I can learn, by persons having no knowledge of our people or the negroes; they are nearly all imported from a distance and are antagonistic in feeling to the people, and self-sufficient as to their duties, and their despotic power seems to have turned their heads; even well-disposed and conscientious, they are so profoundly ignorant of the subject they have to deal with, as to blunder continually, and excite ridicule; in Texas we have been unfortunate in the chief of the bureau, who was a fanatical and exceedingly self-sufficient man; he began by preaching to the negroes, and offending society by his social treatment of them; we don't need missionaries to teach us social relations or a labor system; and he offended us by his arrogance and turned the heads of the poor ignorant negroes.

Q. Could you manage the institution better yourselves? Would your people deal fairly and humanely by the negroes?

A. The institution is offensive in itself, and a nuisance in practice; if left to ourselves we would reject it, as the only management it deserves; we would pass but few laws relating to the late slaves, that would not apply to whites; and as for fair treatment, the best and only friend the poor negro has on earth is the old master; this the poor deluded creatures are fast discovering, and many thousands are returning to their former homes, tired of the freedom thrust upon them, which they never sought.

Q. How would you better the matter? Would the people return the negro to slavery? A. There is no such intent or disposition anywhere to re-enslave the negro. They regard that as entirely a settled question, and impossible if they desired it. It would be presumption on my part to submit a plan extemporaneously upon which our people would work. I give you only the views of a private citizen, who has never been in, or aspired to, political position. I would suggest, (and believe it would find favor with your people,) such legislation as would compel all men to comply with their contracts for service, in kind, at least for one year, under penalty of working on public works without wages. All men nearly would bargain with and treat them justly, and most men even kindly. The reported antagonism which his Northern Radical papers is not merely exaggerated, it is manufactured out of whole cloth—it is false. No such antagonism exists; and collisions have occurred, only, within my own knowledge, where negroes have been stimulated to impudence and hostility by opinions of soldiers or agents of the Freedmen's Bureau. This will never be tolerated.

Q. Have the freedmen gone to work in Texas, and on what terms? A. I am informed that they have generally, since the first of January. Up to that time they had a vague expectation of something more than a freedom which had only deprived them of homes. Finding that nothing but work would get bread, they have hired, generally at good wages; men, at $6 to $15, and women at $5 to $12 per month, they clothing themselves; some planters have hired by giving a share of the crop, one fourth to one-third.

Q. Is there a disposition to educate and Christianize them? A. We would first endeavor to find bread and clothing for them. I think no one would oppose their getting an education for themselves, like other poor people. It would, doubtless, be well if they could read the Bible, which has hitherto been taught them gratuitously. It will be well if the negro can maintain the moral and religious teachings he has enjoyed. I have no hope of it myself, as he will have to keep himself, and has neither disposition nor capacity to ameliorate the condition of his race. He has no history, no tradition, nothing without or within, to stimulate pride; no aspiration above the service of the master-race. Heretofore, his master has furnished him religious instruction, to the extent that one single denomination—the Methodist Church, South—reports a membership of hundreds of thousands. This is at an end now. They will have to pay for their own religious teachings, like other free people.

Q. Have they capacity to learn? A. To some extent they have. The little children learn rapidly to read and write; but their capacity is limited, I think. They are imitative, but without ambition; they will learn, but cannot apply their learning.

Q. Has not this been caused by their long degradation in slavery? We believe not. In fact we view the whole matter from a stand point so different from that of Northern men, that there is little room for debate.

Q. Will you state whether you are not a believer in slavery, and whether most Southern men share your opinion? A. Emphatically so. I believe that so far from the black man's degradation by slavery, he was exalted by it, and that to the best condition he has ever enjoyed, and to the best of which, as a race, he is capable. For some thousands of years he has been in contact with white civilizations, and has ever aspired to serve the master race. He seeks the menial employments, wherever he is found. Even in Northern States, after half a century of freedom, I find him on where teaching your schools, filling your pulpits or legislative halls, but blacking your boots and cleaning your stables and ditches. By appropriating him to this department and to manual industry, taking his service and paying him by thinking and providing for him, we believe we served God and the cause of humanity.

And as the questions have led to this point, please to indulge me in reciting some of the evidence that my researches have furnished, that this people have seen their best condition and will never flourish again.

Q. Certainly: Proceed. A. Our census takers furnish industrial vital statistics from which there is no appeal. They show three points that I will state from memory.

1. The free blacks in Northern States, in spite of the continual supplies from the South, decreased, in the last biennal period, nearly eight per cent. in numbers.

2. The free blacks of the Southern States increased about as much, making a difference of sixteen per cent., while

3. The slave black by his side increased twenty-four in numbers.

Taking, then, the axiom of political science, that the reproductiveness of a people is the most unfailing evidence of their social condition, the black slave has been in a better condition than any other people, white or black, on this continent. It is to this conclusion that you may impute our tenacity in defending the system. Our experience had taught us how to consult the best interest of both races, and we found them in precise harmony: believed the blacks were designed by Providence as a supplement to the white race, and that to this institution, in part, we owed the higher civilization we claimed.

Q. Please define what you mean by "higher civilization?"

A. The pride of character, the chivalrous tone, and the liberality and hospitality of our people; the broad views and great genius of our public men; the delicacy, modesty, refinement, and yet the lofty spirit of our women. We had a society without gossip, envy, or fanaticism; a population of millions without beggars or paupers. Whether this is a higher civilization is a matter of opinion. Certainly it had a different type, and one which would not longer harmonize with yours; and hence the necessity, as we believed, of separation.

Q. Then you were a secessionist, originally?

A. No, I was a revolutionist, and this merged, in my view, all minor questions of State right to secede. The right of a people to change their rulers and their form of government was questionable only with tyrants, and such I was ready to resist, from date of Mr. Lincoln's election.

Mr. Charles Morgan, contractor on the mail route between this city and Mobile, has been authorized to omit the Sunday trips on that route.

FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, June 22.—The President sent into Congress to-day the following message in relation to the reconstruction amendment to the Constitution:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I submit to Congress a report of the Secretary of State to whom was referred the concurrent resolution of the 18th inst., respecting a submission to the Legislatures of the States of an additional article to the Constitution of the United States. It will be seen from this report that the Secretary of State had on the 16th transmitted to the Governors of the several States certified copies of the joint resolution passed on the 13th proposing an amendment to the Constitution. Even in ordinary times, any question of amending the Constitution must be justly regarded as of paramount importance. This importance is at the present time enhanced by the fact that the joint resolution was not submitted by the House for the approval of the President, and that of the thirty-six States which constitute the Union, eleven are excluded from representation in either House of Congress, although, with the single exception of Texas, they have been entirely restored to all their functions as States in conformity with the organic law of the land, and have appeared at the National Capital by Senators, and have been refused admission to the vacant seats; nor have the sovereign people of the nation been afforded an opportunity of expressing their views upon the important question which the amendment involves. Grave doubts may naturally and justly arise whether the action of Congress is in harmony with the sentiments of the people, and whether to such issue they should be called upon by Congress to decide. Respecting the ratification of the proposed amendment, waiving the question as to the constitutional validity of the proceeding of Congress upon the joint resolution proposing the amendment, or as to the merits of the article which it submits through the Executive Department to the Legislatures of the States, I deem it proper to observe that the steps taken by the Secretary of State, as detailed in the accompanying report, are to be considered as purely ministerial, and in no sense whatever committing the Executive to an approval or recommendation of the amendment to the State Legislatures or to the people. On the contrary, a proper appreciation of the letter and spirit of the Constitution, as well as of the interests of national order and harmony and union, and a due deference for an enlightened public judgment, may at this time well suggest a doubt whether any amendment to the Constitution ought to be proposed by Congress, and pressed upon the Legislatures of the several States for final decision, until after the admission of such loyal Senators and Representative of the unrepresented States as have been, or may hereafter be chosen, in conformity with the Constitution and laws of the United States.

(Signed) ANDREW JOHNSON.

Washington, D. C., June 22, 1866.

Accompanying the message of the President is the report of the Secretary of State, announcing that he had, in conformity with the precedent which had been adopted by him in 1865 in regard to the proposed and afterwards adopted Congressional amendment of the Constitution of the United States concerning the prohibition of slavery, transmitted certified copies of the joint resolution to the Governors of the several States, together with a certificate and circular.

WASHINGTON, June 26.—The Freedmen's Bureau bill passed the Senate to day, with an amendment to the House bill, which peremptorily confirmed the negroes in possession of lands under Sherman's order. The Senate amendment is that the negroes shall surrender all Sea Island lands to their owners, excepting those sold for taxes. The bill is to continue in force for three years. It goes back to the House.

Congress has passed the House bill, amendatory of the organic act of Washington Territory. It makes the sessions of Territorial Legislature biennial instead of annual, and increases the compensation of the members from three to six dollars per day.

The President has approved the bill for the disposal of the public lands for homestead, actual settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas and Florida.

WASHINGTON, June 26.—The President is endeavoring to secure the release of all American citizens now held as Fenian prisoners in Canada.

It is believed the intercession will meet with a favorable response from the British Government.

The Democrats in Congress, with perhaps the exception of Senator Harris, of Maryland, indorse the call of a Union Convention at Philadelphia.

The restoration of the Southern States is considered by them paramount to all other political ideas.

WASHINGTON, June 26.—The precise position occupied by the Democratic members of Congress in reference to the Union Convention called at Philadelphia is thus stated: They are favorably disposed toward such a convention, believing that the representation of the Southern States in Congress is not only right but necessary to the harmony and prosperity of the country. They are willing, therefore, to co-operate with the Union Convention for that purpose, but that it shall not be perverted from its original and patriotic design for the formation of a new party. They prefer clinging to their own at present. The Democrats seem to further the movement.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—It is understood that the select committee of the Senate on the Mississippi levees, of which Mr. Clark is chairman, held a meeting on Monday and had before them Messrs. Claiborne, Field and other gentlemen who are now here representing the interests of Louisiana, Mississippi and Arkansas. The subject was thoroughly investigated, and we learn there was evinced a general disposition on the part of the committee to deal with the important topic in a liberal spirit.

Gen. Canby, late commander of the department of the gulf, and Major Gen. Humphreys, of the United corps of engineers, who executed the survey of the Mississippi delta, have been invitation appeared before the committee and given the information essential as a basis for the requisite legislation by Congress.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—Yesterday for the first time during the session, the Middle States and Western members of the House co-operated against New England interests. The latter were defeated in their efforts to secure the Northern Pacific railroad, the majority adopting what is termed the Union Pacific company, to change their route so as to go by Denver City, Colorado.

WASHINGTON, June 23.—Sometime ago, the House passed a resolution calling on the President to furnish any information in his possession showing whether officers of the Government have united in Georgia and other Southern States in bestowing honors on Confederate living or dead. All the heads of Departments have sent in separate replies, are inclosed with the President's message, each of them saying in effect, they have no information or knowledge of such conduct.

FOREIGN.

IMPORTANT CIRCULAR FROM COUNT BISMARK.

Bismark had issued an important dispatch to the Prussian representatives abroad, in very bitter terms towards Austria, and in one passage says:

"All our information agrees that the determination to make war by Austria is finally settled in Vienna. On the other hand, it is asserted that Prussia has been most conciliatory for peace, but the corresponding feeling no longer exist at Vienna. Not only was there manifested an entire absence of all readiness to enter into confidential negotiations and discuss the possibilities of agreement, but the expressions of the influential Austrian statesmen councilors of the Emperor, have been reported to the King from an authentic source, which leave no doubt that the Imperial Ministers desire war, at any price, partly in hope of successes in the field, partly to ride over domestic difficulties. Nay, even with the expressed intention of assisting Austrian finances by Prussian contributions or by honorable bankruptcy. We can only see a decided intention on the part of Austria of forcing war with Prussia, and of at most making use of negotiations, as to a Congress, to gain time by procrastination for her own not entirely completed arrangements, but especially for those of her allies. The fact of war is a settled determination at Vienna. The only further point is to choose the favorable moment to begin."

Referring to the Duchies, Bismarck says: "Perhaps we shall at least be believed when we solemnly protest against any notion of wishing to make good our claim to the Duchies by force, or of disregard to the rights of co-possessor. Now, too probably it will not be difficult to understand the real motives of the armaments by which Austria has given rise to the present crisis and whose removal by means of the Congress she has further taken care to render impossible by the attitude she has assumed."

The circular is dated June 4.

The Austrian Government, in sending the Prussian Ambassador his passport, informed him it took the step because it looked upon the withdrawal of the Austrians from Holstein as having taken place under compulsion from Prussia. Austria has confided her interests at Berlin and Florence to the Dutch Ministers at those courts.

The ministers of France and Bavaria are said to have declined to look after Prussian interests at Vienna.

The Prussian army which was in position on the Silesian frontier, was throwing up defences on all the roads which debouch from Bavaria.

Gen. Martentel had ordered every public functionary and official in Holstein to solemnly engage to submit unconditionally to all the orders of the King of Prussia and those acting in his behalf.

The London daily News' correspondent at Florence says the first hostile movement of Italy will be to throw eighty thousand men in one body across the Po, following this up by pouring 300,000 into Venetia.

The Vienna correspondent of the London Times describes the positions of the Austrian army of the North: The centre is between Olmutz and Prague. The left wing extends from Prague by the northwestern frontier to Bohemia, and the right wing from Olmutz to Cracow, where there is a strongly intrenched camp. It was stated that a body of Austrian troops is about to concentrate near Frankfort on the Main.

Gen. Gohlentz and the Duke of Augustenburg had proceeded thither.

Kussuth had issued an address to the Hungarians dated Turin, recommending them to wait for the course of events and remain as they are, or enroll themselves in a Hungarian legion, and if matters progress in such manner as to offer a field of action due notice will be given.

On the 20th of May the Prince of Bokhara, with 40,000 men and 21 guns engaged a Prussian fort and suffered defeat, losing 19 cannon and being completely routed. The Prussian loss was insignificant.

The cholern had broken out in the neighborhood of Berlin.

The Spanish Government is showing nervousness regarding its possession of the ever-faithful island. The new policy of the new administration is a repressive and restrictive one, very obnoxious to the Cubans, more especially by contrast with the former generous treatment of Gen. Dulce.

The Federal Diet having, on the 14th, by a vote of nine to six, agreed to the Austrian proposal for the mobilization of the Federal army, Prussia, agreeably to her previous notice, carried out her threat to consider it as an act of hostility on the part of those States which supported it, and on the following day, commenced war by sending troops into Saxony and Hanover. It was also rumored that Austrian troops had entered Saxony. This statement was not, however, confirmed, but it was believed. Gen. Benedek would immediately move to attack the Prussians.

After the action by the Federal Diet, the Russian representative protested against it as unconstitutional, said Prussia considered the confederation dissolved and immediately withdrew from the Diet. Great commotion and financial depression prevailed throughout Germany.

Baron Rienzola was forming a new station in the ainistry. La Marmora goes to camp with the king as minister without portfolio.

The Atlantic cable is finished. The Great Eastern leaves Sheerness on the 13th of July.

The ex-Confederate cruisers Tallahassee and Sumter have been sold at auction at Liverpool.

The action of the American government towards the Fenians in the United States gives general satisfaction.

NEW YORK, June 27.—At the closing of this dispatch there is no news of any collisions having yet occurred in Germany.

A Prague telegram of the 16th says the Prussians occupy Lodenstein and Mersen, Chemnitz and Gretz. The railway between Nissa and Dresden has been destroyed, and passenger and postal communication between Prussia and Saxony is stopped.

The crown princes of Saxony have proceeded to Vienna. The Saxony treasury valuables and provision for the army have been transported for security to Bohemia.

A Frankfort dispatch says Prince Charles of Bavaria will be appointed commander-in-Chief of the federal army. It was expected that Nickelburg would afford active defense to Schleswig-Holstein.

It has been ascertained that on the proceeding of the Federal Diet it had determined that the several powers who signed the treaty of Vienna of 1815, declare that in their opinion articles fifty-four and sixty-three of that treaty which form a part of the European international laws had been violated.

The Austrians had interrupted all lines of communication on the side of the Po and Mincio.

LIVERPOOL, June 17.—(Via Queenstown by telegraph.)—The Federal war vessels Augusta, Miantonhamie and A. S. Holt arrived at Queenstown on the evening of the 16th.

LONDON, June 17.—The entry of the Prussians into Saxony is fully confirmed, Prussia having previously declared war. The entry of the Austrians is hourly expected.

The Paris Press publishes a report that the first engagement took place near Toplitz on the 16th, but the rumor is unconfirmed.

The Diet held an extraordinary meeting on the 16th, to decide on the motion of Saxony, that Austria and Bavaria be requested to adopt immediately such measures as were necessitated by the Prussian invasion.

Prussia has issued a declaration to the great powers justifying the invasion on the ground that the decision of the Diet on the 14th broke the confederation, and that the laws of self-preservation compel Prussia to secure herself against the neighboring States in opened or concealed hostility; that she previously offered conditional alliance, which was rejected.

CROP PROSPECTS.

We are informed by planters from different parts of our parish that, notwithstanding the immense rains and storms which recently visited us, the crops are looking healthy and promise something more than an ordinary yield.—Baton Sara Ledger, 23d.

The glorious weather with which we have been favored for the past week, has instilled new life into our planters, and they have returned to their labors with renewed energy. The fields are being rapidly cleared of grass, while the cotton and corn have improved at least one hundred per cent. With anything like reasonable weather from this time out, we may expect to see fair crops made on all the lands that were overflowed, while it would not astonish us to see even good crops made on them, although rather late in the season. But one more enemy is to be dreaded this year, and that is the caterpillar. Should we be spared in this instance, every one will have cause for profound congratulations.—West Baton Rouge Sugar Planter, 23.

We have embraced every opportunity offered to ascertain from planters throughout the State, the condition of the corn and cotton crops. From information received by us from reliable sources, and from different parts of the State, we write it down as a settled thing that not more than one-fourth of a crop will be made, if that.—Jackson Mississippian, 24.

A French engineer named Rosen is exhibiting in London a bathing apparatus, which is also a life-preserver. It is of simple construction, resembling a child's cradle, the upper part having a cylindric cork-float, canvassed over, nearly surrounding the machine, which keeps the bather afloat with the greatest ease and safety. The body consists of a net with light iron tubular pipes for supports; and the bottom or bed a piece of twilled tick, at the foot of which there is a screw copper rudder, which turns upon a swivel, with a pair of cork soles the shape of the foot. Against this the bather places his feet, and is thus enabled to guide or steer himself in any direction, while by the use of a handle attached to the left side of the apparatus below the cylinder, he is enabled to propel himself or recede. This invention can be used in open sea, as well as on a river or lake.

A curious invention is to be tried in Paris. An iron tube is to be run up the side of the trees in the public gardens which require constant watering in summer. Up this tube water is to be forced so as to produce an artificial shower when needed.

At the recent dinner of the Royal Geographical Society in London, Sir Henry Rawlinson expressed his belief that there are not a dozen members of the House of Commons who know where the Bay of Fundy is!

At the beginning of this year there were 372 newspapers in Italy. Of these 41 were published in Genoa, 42 in Florence, 44 in Turin, 44 in Naples and 51 in Milan; the others in smaller towns.

NATCHEZ, June 26, via Bayou Sara, June 28.—An extensive fire occurred here this morning by which four stores were completely destroyed by fire, involving a loss of $100,000.

OBITUARIES.

It becomes my painful duty to announce the death of our much esteemed sister, MINERVA T., consort of Col. W. W. Harper, of Greenwood, Louisiana. She departed this life on the morning of the 3d of June, 1866. It has become so customary in obituaries to pass extravagant encomiums on deceased friends and eulogize the dead, that for fear of being censured by the outbidding world with unreasonable praise, my pen has been withheld in many instances. But were I to let this obituary notice pass away without a few observations on the life of this good woman, I should suppress my christian feelings and charge myself with an omission of duty. She was born in the county of Southampton, State of Virginia.

In early womanhood, she with her friends removed to North Alabama, where in February, 1829, she was married to her bereaved husband, Col. Harper. The year following, under the ministry of the sainted McKerren, she obtained religion and attached herself to the church, of which she was an ornament through life. The acquaintance of the writer with the deceased commenced in January, 1830. Then a youth far from home and friends, but that kindness and hospitality for which she was so remarkable was then extended to him. Since then his appreciation of her virtues has strengthened with the long years of his acquaintance. To known her was to love her. She was amiable in disposition, conciliating in manners, religious from principle. She has been a mother of affliction and bereavement—four out of the five children which God had given her, preceded her to the grave. And, although she dreaded not death, yet she wished to live to comfort her only child in her widowhood, and to assist in rearing her grandchildren—the descendants of the lamented Col. Wharton. When the trying hour came she was entirely resigned to the will of God, and died in full hope of immortality. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like her."

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

WEEKLY REVIEW.

We have no improvement (says the Price Current of Wednesday) to report in the general market, which continues extremely dull, and but little more movement to notice in our leading staple.

Foreign Exchange has continued without any movement, there being little or none offering and only a limited remittence demand, while rates have fluctuated with the course of the New York Gold market.

COTTON.—Arrived since the 22d instant of, Louisiana and Mississippi 1909 bales, Tennessee 44, Arkansas 7, Mobile 30, Texas 63; together 2052 bales. Cleared since the 22d inst. for Havre 901 bales, New York 1668, Boston 2254, Philadelphia 533; together 5356 bales. Stock in warehouses and on shipboard not cleared on the 26th inst. 113,072 bales.

We noticed in our last report, that the market was nearly at a stand-still, the sales on Friday having been confined to 150 bales, and that it closed nominally at 27 to 30c for Ordinary, 31 to 33 for Good Ordinary, 35 to 37 for Low Middling, and 39 to 40 for Middling. Yesterday, notwithstanding the encouraging tenor of the accounts from Liverpool, and the buoyancy they excited in New York market, the movement exhibited but little animation, and the sales were confined to 700 bales, without any improvement in prices.

TOBACCO.—Supplies continue to come in quite freely, the stock is fair and is accumulating and the assortment is good, offering strong inducement to foreign buyers to operate in this market.

SUGAR.—There is very little Louisiana but an ample stock of Cuba Sugar on hand. The market has continued dull, but holders continue firm in their views, and ask full previous prices. There has been no movement, however, excepting 50 hogsheads Louisiana Seconds at 15 to 15½c, and 39 Hogsheads Common Cuba at private terms. Yesterday 15 bxs White Cuba, No 20, sold at 17½c, and 62 hhds Prime, Cuba at 13½c per lb.

MOLASSES.—The market is almost bare of Louisiana, but is well supplied with Cuba. There is very little or no demand, however, for either. The stock is quite firmly held, nevertheless, and better prices are asked than buyers are willing to pay. There have been a few retail sales of Cuba at 55c per gallon.

FLOUR—Is in better supply, and in anticipation of freer receipts buyers have held back and prices have been easier. Yesterday the market was dull and prices ruled more in favor of buyers, with sales of 1,400 bbls. in small lots, at $10 25 for Superfine, $14 50 for Good Extra and $16 per bbl for very Choice Extra, showing a total decline of about 50c per bbl.

BACON.—Has been only in retail demand. Dealers have been selling Shoulders at 16½ to 16¾c, Ribbed Sides at 20½c, Clear Sides at 22c, and Sugar-Cured Hams at 25 to 26c per lb. There are no plain Hams in the market.

PORK.—The stock on hand is small but the market is very dull even at a reduction of $1 50 per bbl. Holders are now asking $31 50 per bbl for Mess, but we have not heard of a sale. It has been retailing slowly at $35 25 to $35 50 per bbl.

GREEN MEAT.—There is very little on hand. It is held by dealers, who are retailing it at 16½c for Shoulders. There are very few or no Sides in the market.

LARD.—Is in light supply and there has been only a retail business doing at 24½ per lb for Prime in tierces and 25½ in kegs.

BUTTER & CHEESE.—Butter is plenty and dull at previous prices. Choice Western, which is now very good, is taken in preference to Northern, owing to the difference in price. Northern is selling at 40 to 45c and Western at 28 to 32c per lb. Common Butter is very dull at 20c per lb. Cheese is in good supply but very little in demand. It is selling slowly at 15 to 18c for Western and 15 to 20c for Northern, and English Dairy at 25 to 26c per lb.

CORN—Is in good supply and moderate demand but at easier prices. Yesterday prices ruled in favor of buyers, and 1100 sacks were sold at 80c for Mixed, 82 to 82½c for Yellow, and 90 to 92c for White, one lot of White commanding 95 per bushel.

OATS—Are in good supply but not much in demand. About 4050 sacks were sold on Saturday and Monday at 52 to 58c mostly 52c per bushel.

BRAN.—The stock is small but there is very little demand. Yesterday 5000 sacks sold at $1 10 per 100 lbs.

HAY.—The market is well stocked but is extremely dull. Yesterday 585 bales Primo St. Louis sold at $82 per ton.

INDIA BAGGING.—The stock is small and firmly held at 30c per yard. Dealers are supplying the demand for the country at 29c in rolls and 31c in bales.

BALE ROPE.—There have been no round sales. The last were at 18c per lb. Dealers are obtaining 18½c per lb. Iron Cotton Ties are selling at 12c per lb.

THE BALTIMORE EPISCOPAL METHODIST will be issued in this city the first of next month. Its publication will be under the management of the Rev JOHN POISAL, Dr. THOMAS E. BOND and Rev R. S. ROSZEL, Editors. The "Episcopal Methodist," of Richmond, Virginia, having been transferred to Baltimore, Bishop Dogget and Rev. J. E. Edwards will continue their services as Editorial correspondents. Rev. C. K. Marshall, D. D., General Agent. The best talent of the Southern Church will be employed upon its columns. The publisher has the pleasure to announce that contributions may be expected from Bishop Pierce of Georgia, Bishop Marvin of Texas, Bishop McTyeire of Alabama, Bishop Wightman of South Carolina, Dr. Summers of Nashville, Dr. Marshall of Mississippi, Dr. Huston of Kentucky and others.

The contributions of some of the most eminent men of other denominations will also enrich its columns: Rev. Dr. Palmer of New Orleans, Dr. Burgett of Mobile, Dr. Bullock of Baltimore, Prof. McGaffy of the University of Virginia, Rev. Peyton Harrison, and others.

It is designed to make the paper the great organ of the Episcopal Methodist Church, yet in no partisan sense will it be denominational. The General Conference which recently met at New Orleans and the whole people of the South, concede to Baltimore a name and prestige as the proper place for its publication. No pains or expense will be spared to make it a first-class Journal and a welcome visitor to every Christian household. The names of the gentlemen who will have the Editorial management of the paper, and the corps of able coadjutors associated with them are the best pledge to its patronage, that they will find the "Episcopal Methodist," in its spirit and teaching, the advocate of conservative principles and a bulwark of defense against the dangerous tendencies of the times.

We deem it proper to assure our friends, that the salutary measures of reform, which were adopted by the late General Conference, meet the cordial approval of the conductors of this paper. As it will represent every State and Conference in the South, it will afford the best advertising medium in all our business and social relations. It invites a renewal in a stronger name of those commercial and fraternal ties which must bind Baltimore and the South more closely together.

This important organ of communication between our respective communities, will be published regularly once a week on fine paper, large type and quarto size at $4 00 per annum, or $2 00 for six months, invariably in advance.

Office of publication, 332 W. Baltimore Street Selby & Dulaney, where subscriptions and advertisements may be left. All the members of the Southern General Conference are authorized Agents. The preachers of the several annual Conferences and clergymen generally, are

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

The Pilgrims and their Pitchers.

It was long ago, and somewhere in the Eastern clime.

The king came into the garden, and called the children round him. He led them up to a sunny knoll, and a leafy arbor on its summit. And when they had all sat down, he said, "You see far down the river, and hanging, as on the hill, yon palace. It is a palace—though here it looks so little and far away. But when you reach it you will find it a larger and sweeter home than this; and when you come you will find that I have got there before you. And when you arrive at the gate, that they may know that you belong to me, and may let you in, here is what each of you must take with him."

And he gave to each of the children a most beautiful alabastar jar—a pitcher so exqnisitely fashloned that you were almost afraid to touch it, so pure that you could see the daylight through it, and with delicate figures raised on its sides. "Take this, and carry it carefnlly. Walk steadily, and the journey will soon be over."

But they had not gone far before they forgot. One was running carelessly and looking over his shoulder, when his foot stumbled, and as he fell full length on the stony path, the pitcher was shivered into a thousand pieces; and one way and another, long, long before they reached the palace, they had broken all the pitchers.

When this happened, I may mention what some of them did. Some grew sulky, and knowing that it was of no use to go farther without the token, they began to shatter the fragments still smaller, and dash the broken pieces among the stones, and stamped on them with their feet; and then they said "Why trouble ourselves about this palace? It is far away, and here is a pleasant spot. We will just stay here and play." And so they began to play. Another could not play, but sat wringing his hands and weeping bitterly. Another grew pale at first, but recovered his composnre a little on observing that his pitcher was not broken so badly as some others. There were three or four large pieces, and these he put together as well as he could. It was a broken pitcher, that could hold no water, but by a little care he could keep it together; and so he gathered conrage, and began to walk along more cantiously. Just then, a voice accosted the weeping boy, and looking up he saw a very lovely form, with a sweet and pleasant countenance—such a conntenance as is accustomed to be happy, though something for the present has made it sad. And in his hand he held just anch a pitcher as the little boy had broken, only the workmanship was more exquisite, and the colors were as bright as the rainbow round the stranger's head.

"Yon may have it," he said; "it is better than the one yon have lost, and though it is not the same, they will know it at the gate."

The little mourner could scarcely believe that it was really meant for him; but the kind looks of the stranger cheered him. He held out his hand for the stranger's vase, and gave a sob of joyful surprise when he found it in his own. He began his journey again, and yon would have liked to see how tenderly he carried his treasure, and how carefully he picked his steps, and how sometimes, when he gave another look at it, the tear filled his eye, and he lifted up his happy thankful face to heaven.

The stranger made the same offer to the playing boys bnt by this time they were so bent on their new amusements that they did not care for it. Some nancy children said he might lay his present down, and leave it there if he liked, and they would take it when they wanted it. He passed away and spoke to the boy who was carrying the broken pitcher. At first he would have denied that it was broken; bnt the traveler's clear glance had already seen it all, and so he told him, "You had better cast it away, and have this one in its stead." The boy would have been very glad to have this new one, but to throw away the relics of his own was what he could never think of. They were his chief dependence every time he thought of the journey's end; so he thanked the stranger and clasped his fragments firmer.

The boy with the gift-pitcher and this one reached the gate of the palace about the same time. They stood for a little and looked on. They noticed some of the bright-robed inhabitants going out and in, and every time they passed the gate, they presented such a token as themselves had once got from the king, but had broken so long ago. The boy who had accepted the kind stranger's present now went forward, and held it up; and whether it was the light glancing on it from the pearly gate, I cannot tell; but at that instant its owner thought that it had never looked so fair. He who kept the gate seemed to think the same, for he gave a friendly smile, as much as to say, "I know who gave you that;" and immediately the door was opened, and the little pilgrim was admitted.

The boy with the broken pitcher now began to wish that his choice had been the same; but there was no help for it now. He adjusted the fragments as skilfully as he could, and trying to look fearless, carried them in both his hands. But he who kept the gate was not to be deceived. He shook his head, and there was that sorrow in his look which leaves no hope. The bearer of the broken pitcher still held fast the useless pieces, and lingered long. Bnt no one took any notice of him, or felt the slightest pity for him; and though he made many efforts, every time, he approached the door it seemed of itself to shnt again.

Perhaps you will understand this story by laying the following texts together:—

"Without holiness no man shall see the lord."—Heb. 12: 14.

"But now THE RIGHTEOUSNESS OF GOD is manifested; even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ, unto all and upon all them that believe. Being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus; whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation, through faith in his blood."—Rom. 3: 21, 22, 24, 25.

"God made man upright."—Eccl. 7: 29.

"All have sinned and come short of the glory of God."—Rom. 3: 23.

"That all the world may become guilty before God. By the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight."—Rom. 3: 19, 20.

"Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ; by whom also we have access by faith into his grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God."—Rom. 5: 1, 2.

"For they, being ignorant of GOD'S RIGHTEOUSNESS, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God.—Rom. 10: 3.

Wooden Swearing.

I know a little boy who when he is "put out" slams the door, stamps hard with his feet, jerks his chair, throws down his playthings, and if he is told to pile up wood, makes a great racket in the wood-house.—His cross and angry feelings are apt to show themselves in this noisy way.

I know a little girl who does so too, to the great sorrow of her dear mamma. The other day I found out what to call such conduct. It is a very hard name but a true one. It is called wooden swearing, for it is the same kind of feeling which makes wicked men and boys curse and swear. Of course children who are brought up to know better do not dare use awful words and take God's name in vain; but they make doors and chairs and boots give vent to their angry feelings in a very noisy and troublesome manner, grieving their parents very much, and grieving and displeasing God, who looks at the heart and knows what is there whether it is spoken in words or not.

Think of this, children; and while I know you would not for the world be guilty of taking God's name in vain upon your lips, be equally careful not to do any wooden swearing either.—Child's Paper.

Wishes of an Envious Man, and of a Covetous Man.

It is not forbidden to desire health, honors, or riches, provided they are only acquired by good means and with good motives, but that is not what the envious do. At the court of a king of Sicily, whose name I forget, lived two officers, one of whom was envious, and the other avaricious. Both were known to the court as such. The prince wished to divert himself one day at the expense of their passions, to make them better understand how odious they were. He had them brought before him, and after praising their merit, declared that he had made up his mind to reward them, by giving them whatsoever they wished. "Nevertheless," added he, "I would have you remark that he who first prefers his request shall receive but once what he desires while the second shall obtain double that much." The two soldiers remained a long while silent. Neither wished to speak first. The covetous man said to himself: "If I speak first, I shall receive less than the other, for then he shall get twice as much as I." The envious man on his side, thought within himself: "I could not endure that this man should be more richly rewarded than I. I would rather get nothing than be the cause, by my own fault, of his obtaining double as much as I do." As the prince had already waited a considerable time for their answer, he decided that the envious man should be the first to express his wish. It was a hard thing—a very hard thing. "What favor can I ask?" said he to himself; "what means can I devise to prevent this greedy man, whom I detest, from obtaining more than I shall? If I ask a horse, he will ask two; if I wish for a house, he will likewise wish for two; and I could never endure that—no never! I prefer to ask for a punishment, so that he may be obliged to undergo twice what I do." After giving way thus far to his odious passion, he spoke as follows: "Prince, I would have one of my eyes scooped out, and this other man's two." At these words every one present burst out laughing; they all jeered and scoffed at the envious officer, who was thus entrapped into such a revelation of the shameful passion that was gnawing at his heart.

The Highlander's Prayer

A Scotch Highlander, who served in the first disastrous war with the American colonies, was brought one evening before his commanding officer, charged with the capital offense of being in communication with the enemy. The charge could not well be preferred at a more dangerous time. Only a few weeks had elapsed since the execution of Major Andre, and the indignation of the British, exasperated almost to madness by the event, had not yet cooled down. There, was however, no direct proof against the Highlander. He had been seen in the gray of the twilight stealing out from a clump of underwood that bordered on one of the huge forests which at that period covered much of the United Provinces, and which, in the immediate neighborhood of the British swarmed with the troops of Washington. All the rest was mere inference and conjecture. The poor man's defense was summed up in a few words. He had stolen away from his fellows, he said, to spend an hour in private prayer.

"Have yon been in the habit of spending hours in private prayer?" sternly asked the officer, himself a Scotchman and Presbyterian.

The Highlander replied in the affirmative.

"Then," said the other, drawing out his watch, "never in all your life had you more need of prayer than now; kneel down, sir, and pray aloud, that we may all hear you."

The Highlander, in the expectation of instant death, knelt down. His prayer was that of one long acquainted with the appropriate language in which the Christian addresses his God. It breathed of imminent peril, and earnestly implored the Divine interposition in the threatened danger—the help of Him who, in times of extremity, is strong to deliver. It exhibited, in short, a man who, thoroughly conversant with the scheme of redemption, and fully impressed with the necessity of personal interest in the advantages which it secures, had made the business of salvation the work of many a solitary hour, and had, in consequence, acquired much fluency in expressing all his various wants as they occured, and thoughts and wishes as they arose.

"Yon may go sir," said the officer, as he concluded; "you have, I dare say, not been in correspondence with the enemy to-night."

"His statement," he continued, addressing himself to the other officers, "is, I doubt not, perfectly correct. No one could have prayed so without a long apprenticeship; fellows who have never attended drill, always get on ill at review."—Hugh Miller.

Anecdotes of the Raven.

It was a common pratice, in the spacious yard in Belfast, to lay trains of corn to attract the sparrows within view of the window, opened just far enough to afford room for the muzzle of a gun, neither the weapon nor its wielder being visible from without. A tame raven used to scamper away at the sight of a man taking the gun towards the house, and hide himself within view of the scene of slaughter. As soon as the shot was fired, he would dash from his shelter, seize a defunct sparrow, hurry back to his nook with his prize, and repeat his performance as long as the battle lasted.

England, Scotland and Ireland are all favored with his presence, but he specially affects the Orkneys and the Hebrides. The people of Pabbay were once at their wit's end how to get rid of the ravens, who mustered force to feed on the carcasses of some grampuses. The islanders were afraid that, the grampuses disposed of, the birds would pay their attention to the fields of barley; but drive them away they could not. At last, one Morrison hit upon the plan. Stealing with some companions to the sleeping place of the ravens at night, he contrived to secure a few of them alive; these were quickly denuded of all their feathers except those on their wings and tail, and turned among their friends in the morning just as they were going to breakfast. The sensation created was immense, and the hubbub fearful, but it ended in the unwelcome guests departing with more haste than ceremony.

The raven possesses the power of imitating the human voice, and, if not so voluble as the parrot, enunciates his sentences with tenfold the gravity of Poll. A raven's corpse was once followed by a greater crowd than ever escorted the funeral of any of Rome's distinguished sons. This honored bird was born on the top of the Temple of Castor, but took up his abode in a shoemaker's shop opposite. Crispin took great pains in educating his black lodger, and his pains were well-bestowed. Every morning the raven used to fly to the Rostra and salute, in turn, Tiberius and his nephews, and having thus testified his loyalty, amused himself with exchanging greetings with the populace. For several years, the bird continued to delight the idlers of Rome, until a jealous brother in his landlord's craft killed him in a fit of anger. The mob rose as one man, drove the murderer out of the city, and then executed him. The body of the popular bird was then placed on a litter and borne to the pile amid the laments of Rome, and his ashes deposited in a field on the right-hand side of the Appian Way. —Chamber's Journal.

To Prevent Cholera.

Much depends on each individual as to the mode of life adopted as a preventative to the cholera. In the first place, eat nothing but the most wholesome, digestible, and nutritious food, avoiding everything likely to derange the bowels. Abstain from an excess of alcoholic drinks. It is a great popular error to suppose that drinking plenty of whiskey or brandy is in any way preventive against epidemics, but more particularly cholera. Avoid excessive study or labor; sleep in well ventilated rooms and keep the house well ventilated and dry, and at a moderate temperature. Dress warmly particularly about the abdomen. A very good plan is to wear flannel across the bowels.—Abstain from excessive pleasure; keep regular hours, retiring at a seasonable time. Take moderate out-door exercise, but regularly every day. Pay particular attention to water-closets, and see that they are kept clean. Chloride of lime should be thrown into them once a week, and if in a boarding-house or very large family, where there are many using them, it should be used twice a week. Cathartics should be avoided as much as possible, as when the bowels are once deranged it is difficult to get them right again, more particularly when there is any epidemic in the atmosphere. Water should be boiled and filtered, not through charcoal, but through regular filtering paper, which can be obtained from any druggist. By all means don't be induced to take the various patent medicines advertised as preventives and cures for the cholera.—N. Y. Lancet.

Useful Hints on Mixing Tints.

Useful tints of red may be prepared of orange lead, vermilion, burnt sienna, Venetian red, Indian red, and lake. Vermilion is the most brilliant of these reds; but its beauty depends very much on the particular parcel used. The pale vermilion is best for a bright tint as the dark, when mixed with the varnish, produces a dull red. Orange-lead and vermilion ground together produce a very bright tint, which is more permanent than vermilion alone.

Yellow tints are prepared with yellow ochre, gamboge, and chromate of lead. Of these, the brightest is the chrome; yellow ochre, when mixed with the varnish, produces a very dull tint.

Black tints are made from indigo, Prussian blue, and Antwerp blue. Of these, indigo is exceedingly dark, and not very easily lightened. Prussian blue is a very useful color, Antwerp blue is very light.

Green tints may be produced from a mixture of any of the blues and yellows, as gamboge and Prussian blue, chromate of lead and Prussian blue. These may be mixed in any proportions until the required tint is produced; but it must be remembered that the varnish has a considerable yellow tinge, and will produce a decided effect upon the mixture. With a slight portion of Antwerp blue it will, without the mixture of any of the yellows, produce a decidedly greenish tinge.

Purple tints of any degree of richness are made by judiciously mixing reds and blues.

Sepia produces a nice brown tint, burnt umber a very hot brown, raw umber a much lighter brown, lister a brighter still.

How to Judge the Weather.

The colors of the sky at different times are a wonderfully good guidance. Not only does a clear sunset presage fair weather; but there are other tints which speak with clearness and accuracy. A bright yellow in the evening indicates wind; a pale yellow, wet; a neutral gray color constitutes a favorable sign in the evening—an unfavorable one in the morning. The clouds are full of meaning in themselves. If they are soft, undefined, and feathery, the weather will be fine; if the edges are hard, sharp, and definite, it will be foul. Generally speaking, any deep, unusual hues betoken wind and rain, while more quiet and delicate tint bespeak fair weather. Simple, as these maxims are, the British Board of Trade has thought fit to publish them for the use of seafaring men.—Rural New Yorker.

Fun at Home.

Don't be afraid of a little fun at home, good people. Don't shut up your house lest the sun should fade your carpets, and your heart lest a hearty laugh shake down some of the musty old cobwebs there. If you want to ruin your sons, let them think that all mirth and social enjoyment must be left on the threshhold without, when they come home at night. When once a home is regarded as only a place to eat, drink, and sleep in, the work begins that ends in gambling houses and reckless dissipation. Young people must have fun and relaxation somewhere; if they do not find it at their hearthstones it will be sought at other and perhaps less profitable places. Therefore let the fire burn brightly at night, and make the homestead delightful with all those little arts that parents perfectly understand. Don't repress the buoyant spirits of your children; half an hour of morriment round the lamp and firelight of a home, blots out the remembrance of many a care and annoyance during the day, and the best safeguard they can take with them into the world is the unseen influence of a bright little domestic fireside.

HOME MADE HEARTH RUG.—A lady subscriber writes: "Procure a coffee-sack, tack it tightly on a frame the size you wish your rug, get a blacksmith to make you a crochet-needle about the size of a husking-peg, tapering rather more. With charcoal and rule 'lay out' on the sack the figure you wish for your rug. Gather all the old woolen rags, such as are too much worn for carpet, 'trums,' bits of wool, etc. Tear these in strips, and with the hook in the right hand, hold the strip beneath in the left thrust the hook through the meshes of the sack, catch the rag and pull it through about half an inch, then through again, as near to the first as possible. By sorting the different colors, and following the patterns, a very beautiful article can be made. After it is all filled up this way, take a pair of sheep-shears, or common shears, and shear it all off to an even surface. Old dresses are the best; heavy cloth will not work in well. I have seen such rugs in handsome parlors, and when tastefully made, they are equal to any."

CURIOSITIES OF ART AT THE FRENCH INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.—We are promised most marvellous things for the Exhibition of 1867. Among others, a photographic machine that takes likenesses in all colors but green, a color which still remains obstinate to the inventor's researches. The Pasha of Egypt has appropriated a sum equivalent to $40,000 for the mere fitting-up of that portion of the building destined to receive the wonders he intends to send. Turkey will favor us with the minaret of her mosque, a mausoleum, and a model of a Turkish house, with its divans, baths, etc. Persia has already informed the committee of her intention to contract, on the Champs de Mars, a certain number of original buildings, such as kiosques, silk worm nurseries, opium manufactories, &c; this country will also build a pavilion, with a model of the Shah's throne, and also copies of pictures, rich carpets, furniture, etc., which adorn the imperial residence, and the fountains that surround it. The King of Siam, the Emperor of Morocco, and the Tycoon of Japan have already announced that every preparation is being made that these countries may be well represented in the approaching Exhibition.—L'Invention.

THE ANGEL IN THE BLOCK.—It is related of Michael Angelo that, while walking with some friends through an obscure street in the city of Florence, he discovered a fine block of marble lying neglected in a yard, and half in dirt and rubbish. Regardless of his holiday attire, he at once fell to work upon it clearing away its filth, and striving to lift it from the slime and mire in which it lay. His companions asked him, in astonishment, what he was doing, and what he wanted of that worthless piece of rock? "Oh, there's an angel in this stone," was the answer. "and I must get it out." He had it removed to his studio, and, with patient toil with mallet and chisel, he let the angel out. What to others was but a rude, unsightly stone, to his educated eye was a buried glory of art, and he discovered at a glance what might be made of it. A mason would have put it in a stone walk; a cartman would have used it in filling in, or to grade the streets; but he transformed it into a creation of genius, and gave it a value for ages to come.

CHLOROFORM FOR BEES.—A gentleman writing to the Maine Farmer, says: "Having had little satisfaction, and much trouble, in fumigating bees with puff-ball, etc., I bethought me to try chloroform, and shall never use any thing else in future. I put about ten drops on a bit of rag, pushed it under the hive from behind, and in about five minutes the bees were all on the bottom-board. In this way I united two swarms most successfully."

What a curious being a printer is! He stands when he sets, and sets when he stands, and when he wishes to set with ease he always stands, erect. It is, however, the nature of the case which causes him to stand.

The dove was the first newspaper carrier, when one morning it went out and fetched a leaf for Noah. It contained a paragraph on the weather, notifying him that the heavy rain storm had subsided.

Barnum says that printers' ink is the best friend he ever had. He invested in it largely by judicious advertising, and prospered accordingly.

The best thing to be done when evil comes upon us is not lamentation, but action; not to sit and suffer, but to rise and seek the remedy.

American farmers may learn from Russian farmers how to store their corn in safety. In Russia, a pit is dug in the ground, in a well drained place, and the sides hardened by long exposure to fire. Before the grain is introduced, straw is ignited in the pit to purify and dry the air. The grain is thrown in and packed close. It is said to have been preserved in this way forty years, without deterioration.

Prof. Newman says, contrary to the generally received opinion, birds prefer to fly against the wind. The quails of Europe almost invariably start on their passage of the Mediterranean with a head-wind and if it chops around and blows fresh from the southwest they are drowned by thousands, and their dead bodies are washed ashore for weeks afterwards.

From Dr. Stevens' Centenary Sermon.

Lay Efficiency in the Methodist Church

One of the greatest facts of Methodist history, and one therefore of its greatest responsibilities for the future, is its lay activity. It may, indeed, be a question which has done most of the work of Methodism, its laity or its ministry. The ministry unpervised and propelled everything, and we could have been no Church without it; but the preacher darted from place to place, preaching a sermon and, it may be, leading a class, and was not seen again for a fortnight or a month; while the laity, with ten or twentyfold labors, were leading classes, bands, and prayer-meetings, or exhorting and expounding as local preachers, in the station and around it, for five, ten, twenty miles. Laymen, as local preachers, as class-leaders, founded Methodism in Nova Scotia, in Canada, in the United States, the West Indies, Australia, and even Africa. The history of the local ministry has never been written, and never can be written, except in "the record on high;" but without them the whole status of Methodism throughout the world would have been different from what it is to-day. There are fifteen thousand of them now on this continent, thousands more than the traveling ministry. What an arm of power is this for the Church! What service may it yield us during the next hundred years! What impolicy that we so much neglect it. They, who treat with indifference this part of our system cannot be conscious of its fundamental relation to the system. His the recruiting department to our whole ministry. Do it away, and how are we to supply the traveling ministry? It is striking to observe how in this respect the parts of the system are co-ordinates. The class-meeting and prayer meeting reveal the talents of the laymen; the young man found to have "gifts, grace, and usefulness" there is licensed to exhort; if his exhortations in the familiar meetings of the Church show that he has capacity for preaching, he is licensed as a local preacher and sent forth to supply suburban or rustic assemblies. The Church can now judge of his fitness to be a traveling preacher, and if he be fit, it admonishes him of the "woe" that will fall upon him that is called and preaches not the Gospel, and sends him forth to preach it. This has been the almost universal mode of reinforcing the itinerancy or regular ministry, and the most effective mode the world has ever seen. Can we then spare it? Can we impair it? What have we as a substitute for it? Can our literary institutions ever supersede it? Or, if they could, in our central points, shall we not need this old process so long as the wide world lies around us, a field for our progress?

To maintain this, and not this only, but the whole apparatus of our lay activity, is an indispensable necessity of our future. The prayer-meeting, the class-meeting, the love-feast, the watch-night, with ever-working class-leaders, exhorters, and local preachers, these are as essential, practical Methodism as Church-building, itinerancy, book agencies, editorships, or missionaries. I have said that the ideal of Methodism is a living, working Church. I have spoken of its life; these arts are its works and workmen, and the necessary complement of its life.

The lay activity of Methodism, I again affirm, has been, if not its chief, yet one of its chief powers, and I venture here further to affirm, that the time has come for a fuller recognition of this agency by its incorporation in the ecclesiastical counsels of the Church. The old controversy on lay representation is ceasing to be a controversy, at least so far as the theory of Church rights is concerned. It has come to be only a question of expediency. Our laymen have vindicated practically their claim in this respect. When we look at their devotion to our cause, their growing instead of declining activity in all its interests, the energy with which they are now conducting our Centenary, missionary, Sunday-school, and other schemes, it seems a strange and inadmissible solecism that we should deny them seats by our sides in the Annual and General Conferences; that we, sprung from the people, the most democratic Church of the land, should be the only leading Protestant body that thus excludes them. And when, in an assembly like this, we are crowding the seats and aisles beyond "the bar," and bending in throngs over our galleries, laymen distinguished in all the activities of business, in the offices of the municipal, the State, the national administrations, mere spectators here, while we, "barred" in, are disposing of the most sacred interests of them and their families in the Church, it is a spectacle which it should seem that every large-hearted Methodist preacher would say should not be, and hereafter shall not be. Even their present activity is sometimes alleged as a reason why they may be denied this higher recognition. Strange infatuation of partisan opinion! The demonstration of their fidelity and ability, the reason for respecting them, the extent and success in which they labor in their present Church spheres, the reason why they should not be admitted to higher ones!

The spectacle of a Methodist conference in this respect is, I repeat, a disparagement to the Methodist citizenship of this land; but let us not impeach the Church. Historically this anomalous fact is not an impeachment, though hereafter it cannot fail to be a grave one. The Church did not contrive this exclusion of its laity. The early Methodist preachers, it has justly said, were not "called" by the people, but went forth to call the people. They have traveled circuits from one to five hundred miles long; their societies were scattered, poor, and of few and generally unsettled people; they escaped annually in haste from their circuits to consult about their plans of labor, and these consultations were called by the unpretentious name of "Conferences." It was impracticable then to assemble the poor and dispersed societies by representation in these annual assemblies, and their business was almost exclusively clerical. Thus undesignedly the Conferences grew into great Church councils without the laity. A fear of impairing our successful work has since deterred both laity and clergy from hasty changes. But we are becoming conscious that the time has come for a safe change. Asbury saw it coming, and even suggested a fear of it as an inevitable fact. Who of us can fail to-day to see that it must come, and that it is even at hand? And who thus seeing can fail to see that our best policy is magnanimously to admit it with the least possible friction of controversy? I believe not only in its safety, but in its necessity for the security of our cause during the next hundred years. I believe it will prevent discords and schisms, and quicken all those Methodists of lay activity of which I have spoken.

Let us guard well, then, these minor characteristics of Methodism, as they are sometimes, but wrongly, considered, for they have made up much, if not most, of its distinctive practical character, and they have given it much, if not most, of its success. They have intimate relations to that one supreme object of our mission, respecting which we should be most solicitous for the future—the spiritual purity, the evangelical power of the Church. Happily, though a hundred years of vicissitudes have passed over us, this is still our too well recognized object and aim to need any particular remark here. It is indeed a grateful fact that the most essential condition of our future success is the one which needs the least to be treated here, the one still best appreciated by the Church. Holy living, and happy dying, to live for ever; this has been the supreme lesson of Methodism. The regeneration of individual souls, awakened congregations, sanctified and working Churches, "revivals" as they have come to be called, such are our chief Church work. And we enter upon our hundredth year still girded, I think for this work. Let us lift the ensign of this mission high this memorable year, and higher as the next century passes away, till, dying around our altars, we shall throw it to hands of our children, and they to the hands of theirs, in 1966, with the order to bear it still higher and swifter over our graves and around the world.

Early Christianity in America.

Christianity was established in Iceland about the year 1000. The person selected by the popo as Apostle to Iceland was Thangbrand, a mission to do penance for his sins. Though it is said that a bishop must be no striker, this Thangbrand was nevertheless a violent man, and fond of using physical force. In spite of his personal character, Christianity was successful, and the people eventually decided at the Allthing to give up the Hammer of Thor for the Cross of Christ. About this time Eric the Red was obliged to flee from Iceland, and sailing westward he discovered Greenland, passing the winter, however, on an island. The next summer was spent in explorations, while the summer after he was permitted to return to Iceland to obtain fresh colonists. Soon the western shores of Greenland were covered by a considerable population. Leif, also, a son of Eric, having passed a winter in Norway, was converted to the new faith, and on his return to Greenland, carried with him a priest and several other missionaries; though it should be added here that Puntarius, in his Danish history, refers the settlement of Greenland to an earlier date, adducing in proof the Bull of Pope Gregory IV, who, in 835, sent Bishop Angarius, recommending the propagation of the Gospel in Iceland and Greenland.

In Greenland Christianity appears to have flourished. The first bishop was Eric, consecrated in 1121. He was succeeded by sixteen others, who were suffragans of the Archbishop of Drontheim, Norway. Their names are as follows: Arnold, 1121, afterward first Bishop of Hammer in Norway; Jonas I., 1150; Jonas, II., 1188; Helge, 1212; Nicholas, 1234; Olans, 1246, who assisted at the consecration of Haron, Archbishop of Drontheim; Thorder, 1288; Arns, 1314; Jonas the Bald, 1343; Alkil, Gregory, Andreas, John, Henry, Andrew, 1408.

The first on the list had no episcopal seat, though it was established by his successor, at Garda, in West Greenland. He was an itinerant, and afterward went to Vinland to convert the heathen, of which we shall speak by and by. Henry, the sixteenth bishop, was at the assembly in Fuen, Norway, 1386, but on his return to Greenland he was lost sight of by reason of the infrequent communication. Andrew was consecrated and sent out on the supposition that Henry was dead. It appears that he finally shared the fate of his predecessor, though about this time all communication was cut off with Greenland, and the colony lost sight of. Documentary evidence, however, exists to prove that he officiated in the Cathedral at Garda, on a marriage occasion in 1409, from which marriage, curiously enough, Finn Magnusen derives his pedigree. Commotion at home is the best cause assigned for the neglect of Greenland. Iceland itself once came near sharing the same fate.

So prosperous was Christianity in Greenland that at one time there were no less than eleven churches and three monasteries, besides the cathedral at Garda. The ruins of seven churches have already been discovered, besides some implements, and fragments of church-bells. One tombstone bore the runic inscription, "Vigdis rests here, God glad her soul." Another inscription was as follows: "Biling Sighvatsson, and Bjarni Thordasson and Eindrid Oddsson, on Saturday before Gangday, (Ascension day,) raised these marks and cleared the ground, 1135." Among the ruins may be seen what was probably the foundation of the Cathedral of Garda. The most remarkable ruin is that at Karkortok, a building with walls from four to eight feet thick. The Church of Greenland was by no means destitute of missionary spirit, since, as already mentioned, Bishop Eric undertook a missionary voyage to Vinland, a tract of country previously discovered, and lying along the coast, between the present territory of Nova Scotia and Rhode Island. From the brief account it appears that he remained some time in Vinland, and possibly he died there. Yet, that he made the voyage, there is no reason to doubt. Two priests also penetrated far into the North, thus anticipating Parry and Ross. On St. James's day, July 25, 1266, they reached a very high latitude. This might be doubted, but for the fact that a stone bearing marks was found by Ross in 1824 in latitude 72 deg. and 55 min., north, which proved that those latitudes were visited by the Northmen. One of these priests was Halldar, who gives an account of the voyage in a letter addressed to Arnold, chaplain at the court of King Magnus, of Norway.

During the interval which occurred between the death of the Bishop of Greenland and the rediscovery of the American continent by Columbus, or rather, we should perhaps say, by Cabot, who saw the continent fourteen months before Columbus, and was making his third voyage of discovery, while Amerigo Vespucci was making his first, Greenland, and the parts adjacent, was lost to the mother-country. Still the learned Worminus told Peyrere that he had read in a Danish manuscript that down to the year 1484 there was a company of more than forty sailors at Bergen, in Norway, who went every year to certain ports of Greenland to obtain valuable products; yet this appears contrary to the fact that at the time referred to it was unlawful to sail to Greenland from Norway without the royal permit. The last vessel known to have sailed to those parts was dispatched by Queen Margaret and never heard from. The war with Sweden diverting her attention, the whole subject was neglected; so that it died out of the popular mind. The Archbishop of Drontheim, indeed, made some efforts to have an expedition fitted out for the relief of the colonists, yet the plan failed, and it was not until 1605 that the Danish Government reopened intercourse with Greenland. Iceland never attempted it, because it early became a tributary colony of Norway, to which it looked for the inauguration of the enterprise. In the meanwhile other nations improved the opportunity of opening communication with America.—Episcopalian.

Prison Life of Mr. Davis.

Dr. Craven, the Federal Post Surgeon of Fortress Monroe, has published extracts from his diary, during the first seven months of Jefferson Davis's imprisonment. The following is the true statement of the "shackling," of which we had so many false reports gotten up to justify and to excuse it, at the time. We have read nothing like it in history nor in fable since "Prometheus Bound." And when the reader shall have read it through to the end, he will be ready, in the name of an American citizen and a man, to exclaim, "oh! the shame, the shame!"

On the morning of the 23d of May, a yet bitterer trial was in store for the proud spirit—a trial severer, probably, than has ever in modern times been inflicted upon any one who had enjoyed such eminence. This morning Jefferson Davis was shackled.

It was while all the swarming camps of the armies of the Potomac, the Tennessee and Georgia—over two hundred thousand bronzed and laureled veterans—were preparing for the grand review of the next morning, in which, passing in endless succession before the mansion of the President, the conquering military power of the nation was to lay down its arms at the feet of the civil authority, that the following scene was enacted at Fort Monroe:

Captain Jerome E. Titlow, of the Third Pennsylvania Artillery entered the prisoner's cell, followed by the blacksmith of the fort, and his assistant, the latter carrying in his hands some heavy and harshly-rattling shackles. As they entered, Mr. Davis was reclining on his bed, feverish and weary after a sleepless night, the food placed near to him the preceding day still lying untouched on its tin plate near his bedside.

"Well!" said Mr. Davis, as they entered, slightly raising his head.

"I have an unpleasant duty to perform, sir," said Capt. Titlow; and, as he spoke, the senior blacksmith took the shackles from his assistant.

Davis leaped instantly from his recumbent attitude, a flush passing over his face for a moment, and then his countenance growing livid and rigid as death.

He gasped for breath, clutching his throat with the thin fingers of his right hand, and then recovering himself slowly, while his wasted figure towered up to its full height—now appearing to swell with indignation and then to shrink with terror, as he glanced from the captain's face to the shackles—he said slowly and with a laboring chest:

"My God! you cannot have been sent to iron me?"

"Such are my orders, sir," replied the officer, beckoning the blacksmith to approach, who stepped forward, unlocking the padlock and preparing the fetters to do their office. These fetters were of heavy iron, probably five-eighths of an inch in thickness, and connected together by a chain of like weight. I believe they are now in the possession of Maj. Gen. Miles, and will form an interesting relic.

"This is too monstrous," groaned the prisoner, glaring hurriedly round the room, as if for some weapon, or means of self-destruction. "I demand, Captain, that you let me see the commanding officer. Can he pretend that such shackles are required to secure the safe custody of a weak old man, so guarded and in such a fort as this?"

"It could serve no purpose," replied Captain Titlow: "his orders are from Washington, as mine are from him."

"But he can telegraph," interposed Mr. Davis, eagerly: "there must be some mistake. No such outrage as you threaten me with is on record in the history of nations. Beg him to telegraph, and delay until he answers."

"My orders are peremptory," said the officer, "and admit of no delay. For your own sake, let me advise you to submit with patience. As a soldier, Mr. Davis, you know I must execute orders."

"These are not orders for a soldier," shouted the prisoner, losing all control of himself. "They are for a jailer—for a hangman, which no soldier wearing a sword should accept! I tell you the world will ring with this disgrace. The war is over; the South is conquered; I have no longer any country but America, and it is for the honor of America, as for my own honor and life, that I plead against this degradation. Kill me! kill me!" he cried, passionately, throwing his arms wide open and exposing his breast, "rather than indict on me, and on my people through me, this insult worse than death."

"Do your duty, blacksmith," said the officer, walking towards the embrasure, as if not caring to witness the performance. "It only gives increased pain on all sides to protract this interview."

At these words the blacksmith advanced with the shackles, and seeing that the prisoner had one foot upon the chair near his bedside, his right hand resting on the back of it, the brawny mechanic made an attempt to slip one of the shackles over the ankle so raised; but as with the vehemence and strength which frenzy can impart, even to the weakest invalid, Mr. Davis suddenly seized his assailant and hurled him half way across the room.

On this Captain Titlow turned, and seeing that Davis had backed against the wall for further resistance, began to remonstrate, pointing out in brief, clear language, that this course was madness, and that orders must be enforced at any cost. "Why compel me," he said, "to add the further indignity of personal violence to the necessity of your being ironed?"

"I am a prisoner of war," fiercely retorted Davis: "I have been a soldier in the armies of America, and know how to die. Only kill me, and my last breath shall be a blessing on your head. But while I have life and strength to resist, for myself and for my people, this thing shall not be done."

Hereupon Captain Titlow called in a sergeant and file of soldiers from the next room, and the sergeant advanced to seize the prisoner. Immediately Mr. Davis flew on him, seized his musket and attempted to wrench it from his grasp.

Of course, such a scene could have but one issue. There was a short, passionate scuffle. In a moment Davis was flung upon his bed, and before his four powerful assailants removed their hands from him, the blacksmith and his assailants had done their work—one securing the rivet on the right ankle, while the other turned the key on the padlock on the left.

This done, Mr. Davis lay for a moment as if in a stupor. Then slowly raising himself and turning round, he dropped his shackled feet to the floor. The harsh clank of the striking chain seems first to have recalled him to his situation, and dropping his face into his hands, he burst into a passionate flood of sobbing, rocking to and fro, and muttering at brief intervals: "Oh, the shame, the shame!"

Necessity For a Sabbath.

"Give me the dauntless man,
Who flinches not from labor or fat gue,
But moves right on upon the path of duty.
God will stand by the man who boldly stands
By God's command; God will give him energy,
And courage now and afterwards success."

William Pitt died of apoplexy at the age of forty-seven. When the destinies of nations hung in large measure on his doings, he felt compelled to give an unremitting attention to the affairs of state. Sabbath brought no rest to him, and soon the unwilling brain gave signs of exhaustion. But his presence in Parliament was conceived to be indispensable, for explanations and defence of the public policy.

Under such circumstances, it was his custom to eat heartily of substantial food—meat highly seasoned—just before going to the House, in order to afford the body that strength, and to excite the mind to that activity deemed necessary to the high tension. Both brain and body perished prematurely.

Not long ago, one of the most active merchants in England found his business so extensive, that he deliberately determined to devote his Sabbaths to his accounts. He had a mind of a wide grasp. His views were so comprehensive, so far seeing, that wealth came in upon him like a flood. He purchased a country seat at a large cost determining that he would now have rest and quiet. But he was too late. As he stepped on his threshold, after a survey of his late purchase, he became appoplectic. Although life was not destroyed, he only lived to be the wreck of a man.

It used to be said that a brick kiln "must" be kept burning during the Sabbath; it is now known to be a fallacy. Even so, it is a received opinion that iron blast furnaces will bring ruin if not kept in continual operation. Eighteen years ago a proprietor determined to keep the Sabbath holy, with the result, as his book testified, that he had made more in six days than he did before in seven; that he had made more iron in a given time, in proportion to the hands and the number and size of his furnaces, than any establishment in England that was kept in operation during the Sabbath.—Christian Miscellany.

The Philosophy of Living.

IRRITATION THE ENEMY LONGEVITY.

But few men die of age. Almost all die of disappointment, passional, normal or of bodily toil, or of accident. The passions kill men sometimes, even suddenly. The common expression, "choked with passion," has little exaggeration in it; for even though not suddenly fatal, strong passions shorten life. Strong bodied men often die young—weak men live longer than the strong, for strong men use their strength, and the weak have none to use. The latter take care of themselves, the former do not. As it is with the body, so it is with the mind and temper. The strong are apt to break, or, like a candle, to "run;" the weak burn out.

The inferior in animals, which live, in general, regular and temperate lives, have generally their prescribed term of years. The horse lives about twenty-five; the ox fifteen or twenty; the dog ten or twelve; the lion, we are told, about twenty; the rabbit eight. The duration of life in all these bear a similar proportion to the time the animal takes to grow to its full size. But man, of all the animals, is the one that seldom comes up to his average. He ought to live a hundred years according to his physiological law; but instead of that he scarcely reaches, on the average, four times his growing period; the cat six times; and the rabbit even eight times the standard of measurement.

The reason for all this is obvious. Man is not only the most irregular and the most intemperate, but the most laborious and hard-working of all animals. He is the most irritable of all animals; and there is reason to believe—though we cannot tell what an animal secretly feels—that, more than any other animal, man cherishes wrath to keep it warm, and consumes himself with the fire of secret reflections. Besides this, man is the only animal that makes a wide departure from those laws of nature which control life. He takes on unnatural and health destroying habits, carrying them to the verge of the grave, and clinging to them with a tenacity which yields not even to his better judgment. The lower order of animals never do this. Instinct is their guide, and the superior duration of life they enjoy is proof of the folly of man.

The Lion Humbled.

All Scripture is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for instruction in righteousness. There is no scrap of all the record which has not its use. Yet there are portions of the Bible which no one would suppose intended to be used for the conversion of men. Who would ever expect to hear of such a result as part of the history of the proverb, "a living dog is better than a dead lion?"

There was, some years since, in a village in Massachusetts an awakening and a revival. There was a large attendance upon a series of evening meetings, and Christians were visiting from house to house, and pointing souls to Christ.

A proud, ungodly man, of the village was provoked with Christians for what he considered their fanaticism and their disturbance of the public peace. He freely expressed his contempt for them. He characterized them as "silly dogs, barking and growling about the town," to the disturbance of the weak, and the annoyance of large and liberal-minded men like himself.

No sooner had he expressed himself thus than there seemed to be shot into his conscience a sharp arrow in the words, "a living dog is better than a dead lion." "Well," said conscience, "if these people are fanatical, they are alive and stirring. They are acting according to their belief. If you are so much superior to them as you suppose, as much superior as a lion is to a dog, how do you show your superiority? What are you doing for what you deem the highest good of others? What are you, after all, but a mere dead lion? He was much impressed by the thought that in these despised Christians there was at least the merit of consistency, and he perceived that they did redeem some persons from great evil. The Spirit pressed the arrow still more deeply into his heart, so that he soon became one of that company which he had despised.—National Baptist.

Suffering Ill-Treatment with Humility and Silence.

I am touched, as I ought to be, with all your sorrows; but can only pity you, and pray God to console you. You greatly need His spirit to support you in your trial, and to render your natural excitability on an occasion so calculated to awaken it. When God would teach us to die to ourselves, he touches us in the tenderest part; our weakness is the measure of our trial. Be humble. Silence and peace, in a state of humiliation, are the true health of the soul. We are tempted to speak humbly, and we find a thousand excuses for it; it is still better to be silent, for the humility that speaks may be suspected. Self-love consoles itself a little by speaking.

Do not be vexed at what people say. Let them speak, while you endeavor to do the will of God. You will never succeed in pleasing men, and it would not be worth the trouble, if you could. A little silence, peace, and communion with God, will compensate you for all your injustice of men. We must love our fellow-beings, without depending upon their friendship. They leave us, they return, and they go from us again. Let them go or come; it is the feather blown about by the wind. Fix your attention upon God alone, in your connection with them. It is he alone who through them consoles or afflicts you.

All your firmness is required in the situation in which you are placed; but your impetuosity must meet with trials and obstacles. Possess your soul in patience. Renew often within you the feeling of the presence of God, that you may learn moderation. There is nothing truely great but holiness, charity, fear of ourselves, and detachment from the domain of sense.—Fenelon's Letters.

God's Promise of Support.

"When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee: when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee." Isa xliii. 2. What a diversity of afflictions in this trial word! "Waters," "streams," "floods," "flames," "fires."—The Christian is here forewarned that he will encounter these in some one of their innumerable phases whether it be the loss of health, loss of wealth, loss of friends, baffled schemes, or blighted hopes.

But, blessed thought, these trials have their limits. The floods will not "overflow," the fires will not "burn," the flames will not "consume." God will "stay his rough wind." He will say, "Thus far thou shalt go, no farther." And better still, Jesus will be in all these trials, and prove sufficient for them all. "O, sir," says Thomas Brookes, "there is in a crucified Jesus something proportionable to all the straits, wants, necessities, and trials of his poor people."—Macduff.

HEAVEN.—A living divine says: "When I was a boy I thought of heaven as a great shining city, with vast walls, and domes, and spires, and with nobody in it except white, tenuous angels, who were strangers to me. By-and-by my little brother died, and I thought of a great city with walls, and domes, and spires, and one little fellow that I was acquainted with. He was the only one I knew in that time. Then another brother died, and there were two that I knew. Then my acquaintances began to die, and the flock continually grew. But it was not till I had sent one of my little children to his grandparent—God—that I began to think I had got a little in myself. A second went, and by that time I had so many acquaintances in heaven, that I did not see any more walls, and domes, and spires. I began to think of the residents of the celestial city. And now there have so many of my acquaintances gone there, that it sometimes seems to me that I know more in heaven than I do on earth."

Our hopes are often but bright roses, too soon faded, and life, in its fairest phases of promise and enjoyment, too soon merges itself into the mystery of death.

The soul is the life of the body. Faith is the life of the soul. Christ is the life of faith.

NEW ORLEANS:
SATURDAY, - - - JULY 7, 1866.

TO ADVERTISERS.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has always been well known in this community as the very best advertising medium by which the business men of the city could bring their merchandise, trades, professions, and the like, before country readers in the States just named. This is easily understood when it is remembered that the four hundred preachers who are scattered throughout these States, in the Rio Grande, East Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Montgomery and Mobile Methodist Conferences, are all, more or less, active agents for the paper; and when it is also remembered that our paper circulates among a large class of people who seldom see any other New Orleans paper.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

	1 Month.	6 Mos.	12 Mos.
One square....	$ 5 00	$20	$30 00
Two squares....	7 50	25	40 00
Three squares..	10 00	30	50 00
Four squares...	12 50	35	60 00

Larger advertisements in proportion.

TO OUR AGENTS AND SUBSCRIBERS

1. The price of the paper is FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE: and it will be sent for 12 months only, unless the subscription price is renewed. We propose to keep no other books than the one containing the names of subscribers and their address. One notice will be given in the paper a few weeks previous to the end of the subscription.

2. All travelling Preachers in the several patronizing Conferences throughout the Southwest are our Agents. They will receive a paper for five subscribers, and be paid one dollar for each subscription over that number.

3. If money forwarded by mail is registered at the Postoffice when it is mailed, we will take the responsibility of its safety. But where it can be forwarded by private hands, the security is greater.

4. Be explicit in writing names and offices and routes—especially in directing to the "New Orleans CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE," as the Church North has already issued a sheet in this city entitled the "New Orleans Advocate."

Address Rev. J. C. KEENER, D. D., or Rev. J. B. WALKER, D. D.

PREMIUM TO AGENTS.

We offer Agents of the New Orleans Christian Advocate a PHOTOGRAPHIC PICTURE OF THE GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church South, held in New Orleans, for every FIVE subscribers they may forward to us; and this in addition to the commission already offered.

We will forward them by express, or in such way as they may direct.

Centenary College.

The annual meeting of the Board of Trustees and Visitors of this Institution is to be held on Wednesday, the 25th of this month. It is highly important that every member of the Board should be present.

The annual commencement exercises of the college will be held at that time.

J. C. KEENER, Pres. Joint Board.

The Mails—Notice.

We are glad to notice the extension of the mail service, after the first of July. Now that Post-offices and duly qualified Post masters may be found in many parts of the States of Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, we expect a rapid and considerable increase in our subscription list.

If any regular traveling preacher in either of our patronizing conferences will forward his name and the route and office which lead to him, we will send him the paper upon his own terms.

We call the attention of our readers to the card of Messrs. J. P. HARRISON & SONS, Union Street, No. 51 up stairs. Mr. H. was formerly of the firm of Payne, Harrison & Co—one of the most responsible cotton factors in the city.

ODD FELLOWS' HALL DESTROYED BY FIRE.—This costly and magnificent edifice, the pride of the city, erected at an expense of two hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, including the cost of the lot on which it stands and its splendid equipments, was completely destroyed by fire on the night of the 4th inst.

THE EPISCOPAL METHODIST.—We again call attention to the circular of this Church paper now located at Baltimore. See our advertising columns.

It is reported that Gov. Pratt of Maryland, has made application to the President for permission to the friends of Jefferson Davis to visit him at Fortress Monroe. The application will probably be granted.

THE TWO VASES.

THE WEDGE OF GOLD.

"The question is often asked, 'what shall we do to restore the feeling of friendship between the North and the South?' Just so long as each, section, or portions of each section, hate the other, give vent to their passions, boast over each other, revive the past, threaten in the future, just so long we will be a divided people. A little incident has just transpired in Indiana which is touching and which will do more to melt into love the bitterness engendered by the war, than can be easily imagined.

"When our army occupied Baton Rouge, a force was placed around the deserted mansion of Col. Bird, who was abroad in the Confederate service. At last it was deemed advisable, as a military necessity, to destroy it; and house, furniture and library were at once reduced to ruin. A young American officer saved two splendid cut-glass vases of gigantic size, of French manufacture, and two books from the library, which he forwarded to his uncle in Indiana. Said that uncle to me, 'I never wanted them; my wife never wanted them; I felt like a thief every time I looked at them!' But how to find the owner, how to return them, was the question. After trying several plans without success, he finally asked the Grand Master Mason of one of the Western States to write to the Grand Master of the State of Louisiana, and if possible, through him, find out where Col. Bird could be found, if living, and, if dead, who his heirs were. He was growing more and more nervous over them. Although the plunder of war, they were not lost. It was peace now, and they must not remain in his house.

"A few days since he received a touching letter from Col. Bird, who had survived the great conflict. He was raking among the ashes of his home, not knowing that a thing had escaped the fire. Yes he wanted the vases, the books. It was all left—the only link that he had to bind the past and present. Send them carefully; spare no expense. Such was the tenor of his letter. And then his thanks and expressions of regards for the kindness and tenderness that prompted such an act.

"Last week the vases and books were packed, and are now on their way to Baton Rouge.

"How many houses in this fair land of ours have this wedge of gold in them! How many are furnished outright from the plunder of the war!—Some, I know. If there is any one who can sleep easy under such a load, he deserves pity."—New York observer.

Of the many expedients which are being devised to "restore the feeling of friendship between the North and South," that suggested in this article from the "Observer" is the best. To restore the private property which was carried away during the war, would certainly demonstrate a returning sense of Justice in the North, and would indicate a magnanimity something like that which was expected, and was supposed to find place in the breasts of all successful warriors of Christendom since the days of the Crusades.

According to the most eminent writers on the Law of Nations, public property is the legitimate prize of a conqueror, and public property alone. We were therefore not surprised to see the statue of Washington by Powers standing in the Patent office labelled "Captured at Baton Rouge." It was all right enough, the statue had been erected by the State of Louisiana in honor of the Father of his Country, and stood in the State Capitol. It was equally suggestive of that independence which he had secured to the several colonies, as the illustrious Captain of their United armies, whether standing in Washington or in the town of Baton Rouge: and probably, as the State House where it stood was reduced to ashes, it is well that this work of art was spared to the world by its timely removal. It is now in a much securer place, and should there remain. The same fortune carried off the State Library, and saved it, for the benefit of the general mind of the country, from the torch of war. Many of the books which compose it are very valuable, and it is to be hoped that they are at present in some equally secure place.

Churches, however, and hospitals and poor-houses, and private houses with their furniture, and all stores and store-houses, belonging to individuals; in fact all property, personal and real, has long since been held by enlightened nations to be properly exempt from the fate of war, unless it was absolutely and directly important to the issue of a battle to destroy it; as for instance, a house affording position to the enemy.

Admiral Farragut and General Butler were therefore specially careful to announce immediately upon their entrance to New Orleans that all private property would be respected; and a recent decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the "Venice," recognizes these proclamations as in the true spirit of civilized warfare. Nor should persons quote adversely any subsequent act of General Butler, as in opening the tomb of Mayor Monroe in order to search the coffin of Sidney Johnson for treasure; or the order of Gen. Banks forcibly ejecting the Methodists from their churches, in order to place in them those ecclesiastics who followed in the wake of the army for plunder; these acts are to be taken as irregular, and not as illustrative of any great principle of military right.

President Johnson therefore, did but obey the laws of war, as well as of humanity, when he restored the houses, land and goods of our people. It was no doubt a sore trial for those who had smugly established themselves in mansions, and were surrounded by many unbought luxuries, and had become accustomed to the duties and responsibilities of the new condition, to yield to the mandate of the President, just to recognize a principle of general law. A comfortable occupation breeds a feeling of right which, when undisturbed for eighteen months or more, is disposed to assert itself. In some instances quite an elaborate argument set forth the rights of occupants to altars and churches to which they had been introduced by military installation. The inconvenience of individuals, however, should not be plead in bar to restoring property to its lawful owners, no matter how pious the uses to which it is proposed to convert it.

We have never heard a particular estimate of the amount of property taken from the South out of private houses, and from off the persons of individuals, but we suppose it to be considerable. The "Observer" has an exclamation as to "How many houses in this fair land of ours are furnished outright from the plunder of the war!" and the writer adds "some, I know." Well, well; the amount must be pretty serious—to furnish whole houses out and out. We had supposed the "pickings and stealings" of those in high position to be quite respectable: for instance, we knew that General Banks had a great fancy for other people's portraits in oil, and mahogany furniture, and that when he left Pleasant Hill, though in something of a hurry at the time, he took the sheets off the bed where he had slept, and sadly abused the hospitality of the best private residence in the place; and we knew, that Gen. Butler had a "brother." But everybody had not the facilities which position afforded Gen. Banks and Gen. Butler for furnishing whole houses "outright."

The abundance to be taken must have been very great. All the wealth of one of the most extensive, wealthy, and luxurious districts in the world—the accumulation of one of the most successful and fertile agricultural regions was the prey of the spoilers. The grandest and longest river in North America, sweeping through many degrees of latitude and longitude, had poured the fruits of an hundred harvests, and distributed untold millions, in every conceivable form of property, throughout the valleys and deltas of the South. A long period of peace, the monopoly of the cotton crop, the large crops of rice, and sugar, and tobacco, had laid the world under tribute and enriched the planters of the Atlantic and Gulf Southern States. The prospect of "plunder" was a powerful incentive, and bands of men, by and with, or without authority, searched every house, and every person, and every grave-yard, not for any particular "Wedge of gold," or for some sightly Babylonish garment, but for all the gold, and all the garments—wet and dry. The locust, and the caterpillar, and the army-worm perished, in search of food, while crossing the tracks of the armies of Gens. Sherman, Sheridan, and Banks. What proportion of values was burned, and what was deported, we can not even guess; nor is it important to know—specially in view of this "little incident which has just transpired in Indiana."

Truly, conscience is a wonderful thing; and when men yield to its enlightened teachings, they undo many things which they had done, or, like Herod, they "do many things." This Indiana "Uncle" sending back a couple of "cut-glass vases of gigantic size, and French manufacture," is something very noticeable and very noteworthy. As an indication of something better in the future, this event is a remarkable and unexpected symptom. Suppose it should lead to a general restoration of private property held by all the "Uncles" in Indiana, it would sure enough be, in the language of the "Observer," very "touching and do more to melt into love the bitterness engendered by the war than can be easily imagined." But if the "Uncles," the aunts and the cousins, not to mention nearer kin, who may possibly have received slight remittances of "cut-glass," should not restore anything of "French Manufacture," or any other manufacture, then these two vases, standing alone and out from that vast pile of private stealage, will be no less remarkable in the years to come, than is the celebrated Portland Vase with its marvellous curves and extinct art. The pains taken to restore these vases to their rightful owner, involving the offices of two "Grand Master Masons of two of the Western States," might be successful in other directions. Wonder if General Butler could not relieve the solitary instance by restoring a couple of goblets, or candle-sticks, or spoons, and increase by so much the force of this example. If he has nothing of the kind himself, it may be that some "Uncle" of his in Massachusetts might equal somebody else's uncle in Indiana, and contribute to the great principle which the "Observer" so justly admires and which we do also hope will very generally obtain.

MONTHLY MEETINGS.

We have a good report on all sides from the monthly meetings. Our people are taking great interest in them. They furnish a fine opportunity for the stewards to disburthen themselves of statements and calculations, which have always been interesting, but hitherto never sufficiently appreciated by the body of the membership. Wandering members who stray out of the sight and almost the knowledge of the pastor, are reported and found. The Sunday school interest is looked up and talked up. Every body is set to thinking upon possible schemes of improvement, because the responsibility of the prosperity of the Church, or its failure is, by this new arrangement generally distributed among the whole membership. It is a good time to propose church-extension schemes, the only way to prevent church-contraction; to advocate the support of the schools, colleges, and institutions, directly and indirectly connected with the Conferences—an interest, by the by, which has come to be of prime importance if we wish the Methodist Church to be alive at the end of fifty years. Here, too, the absolute necessity for the support and diffusion of the several "ADVOCATES" and for the distribution of the books of our own Publishing House, can be appropriately urged.

The Louisville Editor of the "St. Louis Christian Advocate says that in that region the preachers are bringing the various acts of the General Conference, which are yet to be considered by the Annual Conferences, before the people in their monthly meetings. This is a good movement, as the people have had little opportunity to consider these questions previous to their entertainment by the General Conference. On the western side of the Mississippi no papers had circulated, and even now the mails are but just introducing our Advocates to the Church.

To have a good monthly meeting, our circuit preachers should have Saturday and Sunday preaching, at all the different appointments of the circuit. We know of no people more worldly than farmers, and who have greater difficulty in diverting their minds off the world on a Sabbath day. The detail, the multiplied and varied forms of care, which press upon the farmer all the time like surrounding atmosphere, absolutely assail him in the house, and along the road, and at the Church. The clouds, the absence of clouds, the wind, the heat, the cold, fences, stock, freedmen, and things manifold, both tame and wild, conspire to make him the embodiment of care. We do not doubt that the first paradise was in the country, but we rather expect the second in — Jerusalem. Now unless the circuit preacher takes a welding heat he will accomplish but little. Saturday is the day to "make the connection," and start from; and Sabbath is the opportunity to secure the legitimate fruit of preaching.

THE American Wesleyan has a long article on Free Masonry, arising from the question now being agitated among Methodist Protestants and American Wesleyans, and touched upon in the late Cincinati Convention, namely, whether church members or ministers should connect themselves with secret societies. It sums up several striking objections to Masonry, and in concluding says: "The very least that the largest charity can say is that connection with Masonry is of doubtful propriety—it has the 'appearance of evil.'"

CENTENNARY VALEDICTORY SERMON.—Rev. Mathew Davenport, sr., who, on the 11th day of July, 1866, will be one hundred years of age—will, on that day, God willing, preach in the town of Okalona. He has been a member of the Primitive Baptist Church for eighty years, and a minister of the Gospel nearly as long.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

PROTESTANTISM—ROMANISM.

By the term Holy Scriptures the Protestants mean the Old and New Testament Scriptures, as they are commonly received among us; the Roman Church adds to these the Apocryphal books. These are often inserted in our Bibles, between the Old and New Testaments—not that Protestants regard them as of any Divine authority, but as a continuation of Jewish history between the close of the Old and the beginning of the New Testament. The Roman Church declares that these books are of equal authority with the Holy Scriptures, and attempts by them to prove some of her peculiar views and practices—for example, praying for the dead. The name by which Protestants designate these books shows their estimate of them—"Apocryphy," and "Apocryphal," meaning obscure, unpublished, doubtful, without authority.

Protestants do not receive these books as of inspired authority: 1. Because the ancient Jewish Church—the divinely selected depository of the Sacred Oracles—did not receive them as inspired, their catalogues of the Sacred Books entirely omitting the Apocryphal books.—Christ and His Apostles never quote from these books. 2. Because the General Council of the Christian Church, held between A.D. 360 and 370, in giving the Church a catalogue of the books to be received as Divinely inspired, entirely omit all the Apocryphal books. 3. Because four hundred years had rolled away before the Apocryphal books were admitted, and then only partially and hesitatingly. 4. Because it was not till the General Council held between A.D. 1545 and 1563, that the Apocryphal books were finally declared to be of equal authority with Holy Scripture. 5. Because the Apocryphal books, upon examination, are found to contain fabulous stories, contradictory statements, contradicting Scripture itself. These books recommend immoral practices, such as lying, suicide, murder, and mystical incantations. They contradict authentic history. For all these reasons the Jewish Church, the ancient Christians, and the Protestants reject the Apocryphal books from the list of the inspired books.

The Protestant Rule of Faith is the Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible. The Romanists take the Bible (as interpreted by the priest), the Apocryphal books, the Decrees of the Councils, the Decretals of the Popes, the Bulls of the Popes, the Writings of the Fathers, with some other books—in all one hundred and thirty-five folio volumes. To this the Roman Church adds a vast mass of unwritten tradition, declared by the Council of Trent to be of Divine authority. In short, it is a Rule so voluminous, that so far as the mass of men are concerned, it is no Rule at all; not one in a hundred thousand ever having time to read, much less comprehend such a Rule.

The sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures as a Rule of Faith is declared by the Scriptures themselves—see Psalm xix, 7-9. In Luke i, 1-4, we are taught we may know the certainty of the things wherein we have been instructed. In John xx, 30-1, we are told these things were written "that we might believe." In first Timothy, iii, 15, we are informed that the Holy Scriptures are sufficient and able to save." In second Timothy, iii, 16-17, we are told the Scriptures are meant to make us complete and "perfect."

No doubt Christ taught, and his disciples preached many things that were not written, as true as that which has been written, but the texts quoted shew that enough has been written for our learning and salvation; that we may be perfect, and entire, wanting nothing. To admit authority outside the Bible is to give support to Swedenborgians, Shakers, Mormons, Spiritualists, and all fanatics who have some other or higher law than the Bible.

The Protestant Rule of Faith is not Private Judgment, as the Romanists allege, but the Bible, as understood by the laws of language, and in harmony with itself. The right of individuals thus to read the Word, and learn their duty, is the use of the Rule, and not the Rule itself, which is the infallible Word of God. The Rule may be abused, as the light of the sun may be, but as the sun remains unchanged, so does the Rule, no matter how much it, by possibility, may be abused.

If we depart from the Scriptures, there can be no certain rule of faith and practice. For example: the Fathers (or early Christian writers) cannot be the Rule, for some of them teach heresies, and some of their writings have been corrupted by heretics. The Decrees of the Councils cannot be the Rule, for there are examples of Councils deciding questions contrary to each other.—The Bulls of the Popes cannot be the Rule, for they, like the Decrees of the Councils, have often been discordant.

Protestants accept the Scriptures as the only Rule of Faith and Practice—because they are the only Books that have been satisfactorily proved to be inspired; because they teach all we need to know in relation to divine, spiritual and eternal things; because they are plain and easy to be understood upon all the questions relating to our duty, our happiness, and our destiny.

Protestants believe that all men ought to have the Bible, and that all ought to be permitted to read it.—The Protestants have shown their faith by their works, they have translated the Bible into two hundred and fifty languages, and are laboring to send it without note or comment to every kindred and tribe. The Romanists are opposed to translating the Bible into the languages of the nations, and to its circulation among the people. The last General Council, held at Trent between A.D. 1545 and 1563, declared against the general translation and unrestricted reading of the Scriptures. Three Bulls of the Popes in the present century have been hurled against the circulation of the Scriptures in the language of the people; and calling the doing so "a snare," "a heresy," "an attempt to undermine and overthrow the faith," and even "a fraud." The Roman priests in England refused to permit their people to have the Douay Bible—a Catholic translation—when the British Bible Society offered to publish and circulate it. The Bible is not sold in Rome, except in a costly edition of fifteen volumes, with notes and comments. None can sell Bibles in Papal countries without a written permission, under penalty of forfeiting the value of the books and denial of absolution. Bibles are exceedingly scarce, almost unknown in Papal countries, in the language of the people. The Roman Church, through her Councils, Popes and Bishops, declares the Bible to be a dangerous book. Let us consider some of her reasons for so considering the Bible: 1. "Because it cannot be understood by the people;" that is, we suppose, some of the people, and some parts of the Book, for else the priests and bishops would be debarred the Book too, for some of her ablest divines have confessed that there were parts of the Book, especially the prophetic portions, which they could not understand. This same objection lies with equal force against the study of all natural science. 2. "Because its reading may be abused." So may our food, so may our reason, and so may civil liberty; but must we starve for fear of gluttony, refuse to think for fear of thought, be slaves lest liberty should turn to licentiousness? Protestants think that image worship is in greater danger of becoming idolatry, and indulgences giving license to sin, than the reading of the Bible becoming hurtful to souls. 3. "Because its reading by the people will produce heresy." We reply that it is a fact notorious that heresies have not sprung from the common people but almost always from Church dignitaries and scholars. If there is so much danger in reading the Scriptures, why did not Christ and His Apostles warn the Church against the peril? Protestants believe the best remedy against error is, "the knowledge of the truth," and hence circulate the Scriptures and urge the people to "search them." Again, it is a fact patent to all readers of ecclesiastical history, that no Church has been more afflicted with heresies and fanaticism than the Church of Rome.

Let us consider some of the reasons why Protestants translate, circulate, and urge all to read the Word of God: 1. Because it was not until the twelfth century, A.D., that any formal opposition was made to the reading of the Scriptures, at the Council of Tolosa. 2. Because nearly all the eminent Christian Fathers for six hundred years after Christ, recommend and urge the people to search the Scriptures. The Holy Scriptures were publicly read in all the religious assemblies of the people. 3. But most and first of all, because the Scriptures themselves command to read them. For proof see Deu. iv. 10; and vi. 7; Psalm i. 2, and cxi The Jews taught their children read the Word: Deut. vi.; II Ti iii. 15; John v. 39; Romans i. Eph. i. 1; Phil. i. 1; Act xvii. Thes. v. 25. These Scriptures abu dantly set forth our duty and o privileges. Let us search the H Scriptures—they have God for the author, truth without error for the matter, and salvation for their e

The Canada Methodist Conference.

THE forty-third session of the Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Canada began its proceedings in the Wesleyan church, Great St. James street, Montreal, on Wednesday, the 6th inst. When the roll was called nearly two hundred out of the two hundred and fifty members responded. Subsequently the number was greatly augmented. The retiring President, the Rev. R. Jones, addressed the Conference, and when the Secretary read the address of the British Conference, in which it was announced that the Rev. George Scott, D. D., was appointed President of the Conference in Canada for 1866-7, Mr. Jones then introduced him to the Conference. Dr. Scott, after addressing the Conference, introduced the Rev. Dr. Jeffers as co-delegate. The first day was occupied by the appointment of committees.

The question of Union of all the Methodist bodies in Canada received due consideration, and the following resolutions were adopted:

"1st. That this Conference cordially reiterates the expression of its conviction as to the desirableness and importance of a union of all the Methodist bodies in Canada who believe in the same doctrines, sing the same hymns, have the same form of worship, the same love feasts, the same prayer and class meetings, and the same general rules of society.

"2. That the Conference reappoint a committee, consisting of an equal number of ministers and laymen, to confer with any similar committee or committees appointed by other Methodist bodies, to confer on the subject of Union, and report to the next Conference."

The Thirty-eighth Annual Conference of the Methodist New Connection Church, of Canada, met at Waterford, in the county of Norfolk, on Wednesday, June 6th.

Notwithstanding the excitement incident to the Fenian operations, 113 ministers answered to the roll call. The Conference was opened by Rev. J. H. Robinson, the chairman, who introduced Rev. W. Cocker, the General Superintendent elect, who recently arrived from England, and who was elected president of the Conference, the usual retiring and opening addresses being made.

The subject of Methodistic Union engaged the earnest attention of the Conference, the result of which was the unanimous adoption of the following resolution:

"That a report of negotiations with various Methodist denominations with a view to union having been submitted to Conference, the Conference is glad to learn that a very friendly feeling has been evinced by the authorities of those dominations, without, however, leading, so far, to any practical result. This Conference, therefore, commits this question to the care of the executive committee for the next year with the instruction that in any further negotiations, so far as our own denomination is concerned, provision must be made for the fair and just representation of the laity in all courts in which the laws of the Church are enacted or administered."

The Conference adjourned Saturday, June 9th.

Reform in Universities.

There is a growing feeling of dissatisfaction in England in regard to the control which the State Church has over the educational institutions of the country. As the law now is, no person can take the degree of Master of Arts at Oxford or Cambridge without signing the "thirty-nine articles" of the Episcopal church, thus effectually debarring all dissenters from the honors of those universities, and as they are national in their character and in their support, this condition has long been considered exceedingly unjust. A bill has recently been introduced into Parliament to place all students upon an equality, irrespective of their religious views and relations. The High Church-men are bitterly opposed to it, but it has already passed to a second reading, and its friends will not cease from agitating the subject till all restrictions are removed. It is only a wonder that the English people have so long submitted to such unfair impositions, but in this, as in other important topics now before the public mind, there is plainly manifest a determination to get rid of some of the most objectionable features of the unjustifiable union of Church and State.

Trinity Church, Chicago, has raised the salary of the Rector to $6,000, besides his residence, and has given him $2,600 for a voyage to Europe, with leave of absence for six months.

WEEKLY SUMMARY OF NEWS.

FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, July 3.—The address by the Democratic members in Congress runs as follows:

"To the People of the United States:

"Danger threatens the Constitution. The citadel of our liberties is directly assailed. The future is dark unless the people will come to the rescue. In the hour of peril, 'National Union' should be the watchword of every true man. As essential to the national Union, we must maintain unimpaired the rights, the dignity and the equality of the States, including the right of representation in Congress and the executive right of each State to control its own concerns, subject only to the Constitution of the United States. After a uniform construction of the Constitution for more than half a century the assumption of new and arbitrary powers in the federal government is subversive of our system and destructive of liberty. A free interchange of opinion and kind feeling between the citizens of all the States is necessary to the perpetuity of the Union. At present eleven States are excluded from the national councils. For seven long months the present Congress has persistently denied any right of representation to the people of those States. Laws affecting their highest and dearest interests have been passed without their consent, and in disregard to the fundamental principles of free government. This denial of representation has been made to all the members from a State, although the State, in the language of the President, presents itself not only in an attitude of loyalty and harmony, but through representatives whose loyalty cannot be questioned under any existing constitutional or legal test. The representatives of nearly one third of the States have not been consulted with reference to the great questions of the day. There has been no nationality surrounding the present Congress. There has been no intercourse between the representatives of the two sections, producing mutual confidence and respect. In the language of the distinguished Lieut. General, it is to be regretted that at this time there cannot be a greater commingling between the citizens of the two sections, and particularly of those entrusted with the law-making power. This state of things should be removed at once and forever. Therefore, to preserve the national Union, to vindicate the sufficiency of our admired Constitution, to guard the States from covert attempts to deprive them of their true position in the Union, and to bring together those who are unnaturally severed, and for those great national purposes only we cordially approve the call for a National Union Convention, to be held at the city of Philadelphia, on the second Tuesday, the 14th day of August next, and endorse the principles therein set forth. We therefore respectfully, but earnestly, urge upon our citizens in each State, Territory and Congressional District in the United States, in the interests of the Union, and in a spirit of harmony, and with direct reference to the principles contained in said call, to act promptly in the selection of wise, moderate and conservative men to represent them in said convention, to the end that all the States shall at once be restored to their practical relation to the Union, that the Constitution shall be maintained, and peace bless the whole country."

WASHINGTON, July 2.—A resolution was adopted in the House to-day, appointing a joint committee to inquire into all expenditures in each department of the civil service, what are the salaries, and if they can be reduced, or offices abolished. The committee sits during the recess of Congress.

Mr. Banks introduced a resolution in the House to-day, establishing conditions by which the States of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Canada East and West, and the territories of Columbia, Selkirk and Kamskatchka, could be annexed to the United States. As an inducement for those provinces to annex themselves to the United States, the bill proposes to pay the debt of each; which amounts on the aggregate to $85,000,000, besides pledging the United States to pay the Hudson Bay Company $10,000,000 for certain possessions.

Senator Clark, chairman of the special committee on the levees of the lower Mississippi, reported a bill making appropriations for their reconstruction. The expenditures authorized are, in the State of Mississippi $665,000, in the State of Louisiana $595,000, and in the State of Arkansas $255,000. Total $1,515,000.

The secretary of the treasury has replied to an inquiry of the Senate, stating that Albert Elmore, collector of the port of Mobile, although a resident of Alabama during the war, and at one time a subofficer of the legislature of that State, never took the oath of allegiance to the Confederacy, and was uniformly and always opposed to the rebellion. He therefore took the oath of office that he never voluntarily bore arms against the United States, and never voluntarily gave aid and comfort to persons engaged in armed rebellion.

WASHINGTON, July 4.—The Democratic Congressmen have issued an address in favor of the convention at Philadelphia. "National Union," they say, should be the watchword of every man: they denounce the radicals for persistently refusing to admit the Southern States to representation, and say that laws have been passed affecting their interest in disregard of the fundamental principles of free government. They urge free representation from all the States and territories, at said convention, to work in a spirit of harmony for the purpose of restoring the constitutional Union, and for this purpose only.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—General Grant desires a large cavalry force to locate through the South to preserve order and maintain the roads, and General Sherman also desires a large force of cavalry to keep open the lines of travel to the territories and across the plains. He writes to General Grant that without a larger force than is now at his service, he will be unable to suppress Indian outbreaks or keep open the various wagon roads towards the settlements upon which the various Indian tribes make themselves troublesome.

Representative Sidney Clark this morning received a telegram from Leavenworth, Kansas, saying that Senator Lane, of that State, shot himself through the head last night, and died at 9 o'clock to-day. Senator Lane left Washington a week or ten days ago, and at that time complained of being unwell suffering from nervous debility.

Representatives Spaulding, Banks and Thayer, the majority of the special committee on the Rousseau-Grinnell affair, made a report to-day. They condemn Rousseau for caning Grinnell, on the ground that an act of violence against a Representative is an act of insurrection against the people he represents, and that Rousseau committed an inexcusable breach of the privileges of the House. They, therefore, offer a resolution for his expulsion, while they recommend another resolution, saying that the personal collection made by Grinnell upon Rousseau, during the debate, merits the disapproval of the House.

The minority of the committee, Raymond and Hogan, while concurring generally in the views of the majority, propose that Rousseau only be reprimanded. Their report will be hereafter considered.

WASHINGTON, July 3.—It is understood that the Southern representatives will issue an address to the people of the South, recommending the election of delegates to the Philadelphia convention. They regard it as highly important that the South shall co-operate in that movement especially, and it is understood the convention is only for the restoration of the South to the Union, and not for any party purposes.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Senor Romero, the Mexican minister, received to-day official news from El Paso, to the 8th of June. Juarez and his cabinet were to leave on the 10th for Chihuahua. It is likely on hearing of the capture of Matamoros, the government will be transferred to Monterey. The news received at El Paso from western Mexico was satisfactory. The French only hold Guaymas in Sonora, and Muzatlan in Sinaloa.

The American settlers who were captured at Cordova, Mexico, have been released, and reached Vera Cruz in sad plight.

A violation of the neutrality laws occurred on the Rio Grand on the 20th. Some French deserters, after crossing the Rio Grand, were pursued and captured by some fifteen or twenty French cavalry, who crossed the river in a large scow. The United States officer stationed there sent an official dispatch to the French commander, and the latter officer sent an insulting reply. Trouble is looked for shortly.

Signor Romero has received official confirmation of the capture of the imperial wagon train between Monterey and Matamoros, which differs in no essential particular from the accounts already published. General Carvejal expresses his ability to capture Matamoros without reinforcements.

Four thousand Austrians are marching towards the frontier.

The Italian government has formally declared war against Austria. The army crossed the river Mincio without opposition on the 23d ult., having given three day's notification to the Austrian commander. that Italy would then inaugurate hostilities The Italian ministry has been reorganized under Ricosoli. It is stated that Cardinal Antonelli has resigned, and it was believed that he would be succeeded by Cardinal Alberti.

The troops at Frankfort are much dissatisfied, and complain that Austria has put them in danger before she can afford them protection.

The Prussians have captured the Elector of Hesse and his former minister of war. The Prussians left a small garrison in Dresden, and advanced into Bohemia without resistance. A slight collision occurred between the belligerents in Silesia, and the Austrians retreated.

Concerning the communication of France to Austria, the Vienna Presse says France denies any agreement with Prussia. If Austria is successful, and does not menace the existing kingdom of Italy, and does not advance beyond Milan, France will not interfere, but will assist in concluding a peace on a permanent basis; and, further, she purposes that Italy shall pay indemnity for Austria's renunciation of the fruits of victory.

St. Petersburg advices declare that no troops have been moved to the frontier, and that her policy is non-intervention.

The London Observer says a motion will be made in the House of Commons, expressive of confidence in the ministry, and promising favorable consideration of the reform measure at the next session, if the ministry do not announce the dissolution of Parliament.

Victor Emanuel has issued a stirring manifesto to the Italians. He recapitulates the effect of the last war on Italy and regrets that for supreme reasons the noble province of Venetia was then allowed to remain in the hands of the Austrians, but a favorable opportunity has now arrived to accomplish the independence of Venetia, and freeing her from Austrian rule. He charges Austria with having assumed a hostile and threatening attitude on the Italian frontier to disturb the pacific task of reorganization in Italy. He has replied by again taking up arms, but nevertheless had shown his desire for peace by accepting the proposal for conference. Austria having refused it affords a fresh proof, if she relies on her strength, that she does not equally rely on the goodness of her cause.

The manifesto concludes with a patriotic declaration and expression of the assurance that Italy has the sympathy of Europe, and hands over the government of the State to the Prince of Carignano, while he again takes up the eagles of Gaeta, of Passigmano, of Palestrino, and of Marino.

NEW YORK, July 5.—Vera Cruz dates to the 22d state that the vomito was raging in that city, and many deaths had occurred. The French troops that evacuated Matamoros, had arrived. THE SUICIDE OF SENATOR LANE.—The following dispatch is to the Associated Press from Leavenworth, Kansas, July 2: Senator Lane, of this State, shot himself last evening, inflicting a wound which resulted fatally at 9 o'clock to-day. He had been acting strangely for several days, and a careful watch had been kept over him; but, while riding last evening with his brother-in-law, Mr. McCalt and Mr. Adams, brother of his son-in-law, got out of the wagon, which stopped at the gate of the government farm and residence of Mr. McCall, and stepping to the rear, shot himself in the mouth, the ball passing out at the top of his skull. NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

WEEKLY REVIEW.

We have but few changes to note in the general market (says the Price Current of Wednesday) the movement having been on a limited scale in nearly every branch of trade, with but slight variation in prices. Our leading staple, however, has suffered a farther decline, while the demand for it has been almost exclusively confined to buyers for the North.

COTTON.—On Saturday prices exhibited irregularity, but without any quotable change, while the movement was confined to 1000 bales, taken mostly for the North, the bulk of the sales being at 29¾c for Good Ordinary, 30 for Strict Good Ordinary, and 33¾ to 34 for Strict Low Middling. On Monday but 500 bales changed hands at still lower prices, both Low Middling and Strict Low Middling having sold at 31c, showing, in fact, a reduction of nearly or quite 2c. per lb, as the same lists would have previously commanded 32¼ to 33c.

TOBACCO.—Supplies are coming in freely, the stock on hand is fair and the assortment is very good, but there is very little demand and only small sales are being made to the city trade at prices ruling within the range of the quotations below.

	Light.	Heavy.
Low Refused	4 to—	— to 5c, Currency.
Good do	6 to 6¾	7 to 8
Common Leaf	9 to 10	10 to 12
Fair	12 to 14	14 to 17
Good	15 to 16	17 to 18
Fine	18 to 19	19 to 20
Choice Selec'n	21 to 28	24 to 27

SUGAR.—Supplies of the production of Louisiana are nearly exhausted, but there is an ample stock of Cuba sugar on hand. The market has continued dull, but holders nevertheless remain firm in their views, and ask full previous prices. There has been no movement, however. There have been a few small retail sales at previous prices: 12½ to 13c for Common, 11c for Fair Louisiana, 14½c for Fully Fair, 15c for Prime, 16 to 17c for Yellow Clarified and 17 to 17½c for White. Cuba Sugar has been retailing slowly at 12 to 13¼c for No. 12; 11c for No. 14, 14½ to 15c for No. 15.

MOLASSES.—The market is almost bare of Louisiana, but is well supplied with Cuba. There is very little or no demand, however, for either. The stock continues to be quite firmly held, nevertheless, and better prices are asked than buyers are willing to pay. There have been a few retail sales of Cuba at 55c per gallon.

FLOUR.—The supplies, though not large exceed the demand, which is limited and only local. Prices, however have ruled about at $8 to $8 50 for Fine and Good Fine $9 50 for Superfine, $11 for Low Extra, $12 87½ to $13 50 for Good Extra and $15 75 to $16 per bbl for Choice Extra.

BACON.—The supplies continue small but the demand is confined to the retail trade at 16½ for Shoulders, 20c for Ribbed Sides, 21½ to 22c for Clear Sides and 25c to 26c per lb for Sugar-Cured Hams. There are no plain Hams in the market.

PORK.—The stock on hand is small but the market continues very dull and only retail sales have been made at $35 to $35 25 per bbl.

GREEN MEAT.—There is very little on hand. It is held by dealers, who are retailing it at 16½c for Shoulders. There are very few or no Sides in the market.

LARD.—Is in good supply but is very little in demand and is selling only in a small way at 23½c for Prime in tierces and 24½c in kegs. Prime in tierces is freely offered from first hands at 23 and 23½c per lb without selling.

BUTTER & CHEESE.—Butter is plenty and dull at previous prices. Choice Western, which is now very good, is taken in preference to Northern, owing to the difference in price. Northern is selling at 40 to 45c and Western at 28 to 32c per lb. Common Butter is very dull at 20c per lb. Cheese is in good supply but very little in demand. It is selling slowly at 15 to 18c for Western and 15 to 20c for Northern, and English Dairy at 25 to 26c per lb.

CORN.—The receipts have fallen off and the supplies on the landing have been exhausted. The stock in store is only moderate and is firmly held and an advance of fully 8c per bushel has been realized. Yesterday the sales embraced about 8000 sacks in lots 85 to 87½c for Mixed, 88 to 92c for Yellow, 95 to 98 for White Mixed and 98c to $1 for White.

OATS.—Are in fair supply and demand. The stock is mostly in store and prices are steady and firm. About 2200 sacks were sold on Saturday and Monday at 48 to 49c for Ordinary and in bad order, 50c for Ordinary and 52c per bushel for Prime.

BRAN.—The stock is small but there is not much demand and only 1200 sacks were sold on Saturday at $1 15 to $1 20 per 100 lbs showing no change in prices.

HAY.—The market is well stocked but continues dull and prices are irregular and unsettled. Yesterday 500 were sold, in two lots, at $23 for St. Louis, and the same price for New York.

INDIA BAGGING.—The stock is small and firmly held. There was a sale on Saturday of 20 bales at 31½c per yard. An advance of ½c per yard. Dealers are supplying the demand for the country at 30c in rolls and 31c in bales.

BALE ROPE.—There have been no round sales. The last were at 18c per lb. Dealers are obtaining 18½c per lb. Iron Cotton Ties are selling at 12c per lb.

OBITUARIES.

[illegible], in the city of New Orleans, on the morning of June 25, 1866, CLOTILDE, wife of Geo. H. Penn, and only daughter of Rufus Dolbear.

Such is the cruel formula that registers human grief before the world. How sadly suggestive of broken ties; of withered hopes, and blasted joys! One short, last gasp, and all that we have loved, is—gone! The kind friend; the dutiful daughter; the gentle sister; the devoted wife; the fond mother, passes away, and desolation reigns throughout the circle of these sweet relations.

Husband, father, brother, each withdraws into the sanctuary of his own soul, and sits in silence under the shadow of his own grief; while prattling childhood prattles on in touching unconsciousness of its deep loss.

The subject of this brief sketch, was born in New Orleans, Sept. 24, 1838, and had not, therefore, completed the twenty eighth year of her age. Thus early she fell beneath the scythe of the Great Mower; but not unripe. Gifted with high natural endowments, she was capable of the rich culture bestowed on her. Having been taught to read and write before most children have well learned to talk, her education was vigorously pressed to the period of womanhood. Inquisitive and speculative in her mental cast, she improved these advantages to the last degree, and entered upon life, not only stored with useful knowledge, but embellished with all that refinement and taste, which literature and the arts could inspire. A character thus fitted to adorn society was, moreover, early sanctified by religion, and the graces of true piety added to superior charms to the beauty and loveliness of true womanhood. While young, she united with the Presbyterian Church, in whose communion she died, giving increasing evidence, especially through her long and painful illness, of entire preparation for Heaven. Her Bible, marked upon the margin of almost every page, indicates the truths upon which her faith and hopes delighted to feed. She fell gently asleep upon the Savior's breast, without a sigh of reluctance for the joys left behind her. Her husband and two children of tender age mingle their tears with those of a father and a brother; while yet in their bitter grief they wish her joy in her grand ascension to be with the Immortals.

The following lines, penned upon a bed of suffering, as a parting farewell to her beloved husband, we attach to this obituary, not only for their own beauty, but as a memorial of her taste and cultivation:

Call me no more thine own—the summer hours,
So loved by me, shall never come again;
Scarce shall I see the spring's pale flowers—
Here in this life of weary ache and pain,
I shall be thine no more.

The spring shall wake fresh verdure through the [vale
From gray winter freed, blue shall glow the sky
But ere the sweet-breath'd violets grow pale,
This fading form low in the dust shall lie,
Then shall I not be thine own.

The shadow of a parting hour is nigh;
It falls, dear one, upon my heart and thine:
Alas! to leave thee, when life's morning hour
Is goldened o'er by love almost divine—
Nay, call me not now thine own.

I shall leave thee soon, and then, beloved, will [feel
A gloomy shadow o'er thy pathway thrown;
And all too soon this truth will o'er thee steal,
That in this weary world thou art alone,
And from thee fled, thine own.

And thou wilt miss me; yet without grief,
And illumed by love's far-reaching eye,
I know that then thy purest joy shall find
In dreams of early love that buried lie—
Love when I was all thine own.

No longer thine! To wake for thee, at eve,
The chords of music sweetest to thine ear—
To love thee, and, through grief or joy,
To be thy truest friend—of all most dear—
To be thine own.

On those not distant hills, where beauty never [fades
My lingering feet shall rest. Oh! do not weep;
With me then'lt dwell, where sadness ne'er [invades,
With Him who giveth his beloved sleep—
Forever there thine own.

THE BALTIMORE EPISCOPAL METHODIST will be issued in this city the first of next month. Its publication will be under the management of the Rev JOHN POISAL, Dr. THOMAS E. BOND and Rev S. S. ROSZEL, Editors. The "Episcopal Methodist," of Richmond, Virginia, having been transferred to Baltimore, Bishop Dogget and Rev. J. E. Edwards will continue their services as Editorial correspondents. Rev. C. K. Marshall, D. D., General Agent. The best talent of the Southern Church will be employed upon its columns. The publisher has the pleasure to announce that contributions may be expected from Bishop Pierce of Georgia, Bishop Marvin of Texas, Bishop McTyeire of Alabama, Bishop Wightman of South Carolina, Dr. Summers of Nashville, Dr. Marshall of Mississippi, Dr. Huston of Kentucky and others.

The contributions of some of the most eminent men of other denominations will also enrich its columns: Rev. Dr. Palmer of New Orleans, Dr. Burgett of Mobile, Drs Bullock of Baltimore, Prof. McGuffy of the University of Virginia, Rev. Peyton Harrison, and others.

It is designed to make the paper the great organ of the Episcopal Methodist Church, yet in no partisan sense will it be denominational. The General Conference which recently met at New Orleans and the whole people of the South, concede to Baltimore a name and prestige as the proper place for its publication. No pains or expense will be spared to make it a first-class Journal and a welcome visiter to every Christian household. The names of the gentlemen who will have the Editorial management of the paper, and the corps of able coadjutors associated with them are the best pledge to its patrons, that they will find the "Episcopal Methodist," in its spirit and teaching, the advocate of conservative principles and a bulwark of defense against the dangerous tendencies of the times.

We deem it proper to assure our friends, that the salutary measures of reform, which were adopted by the late General Conference, meet the cordial approval of the conductors of this paper. As it will represent every State and Conference in the South, it will afford the best advertising medium in all our business and social relations. It invites a renewal in a stronger form of those commercial and fraternal ties which most bind Baltimore and the South more closely together.

This important organ of communication between our respective communities, will be published regularly one a week on fine paper, large type and quarto size at $4 00 per annum, or $2 00 for six months, invariably in advance.

Office of publication, 332 W. Baltimore Street Selby & Dulaney, where subscriptions and advertisements may be left. All the members of the Southern General Conference are authorized Agents. The preachers of the several annual Conferences and clergymen generally, are requested to act as agents for this paper.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

Clara Stone.

AS SKETCHED BY HERSELF.

I am a young lady of sixteen, and the handsomest that goes into our church. Everybody admires me, I know; for how can they help it? My face and figure are perfectly splendid. I know more than either of my parents, and I despise their narrow, humdrum opinions. I am entirely superior to most of my class at the academy, and shall soon stop going there; and I shouldn't think of attending Sunday-school only Mrs. Grey is so devoted to me that I can't seem to get away from her. She is very rich and knows such grand people, that I don't want to offend her; but I never look at my lessons except in the class, nor take any trouble to pay attention.

History, and dull, prosy books, I hate, and I always skip the religion in stories; but I read all the novels I can find, till sometimes I feel as stupid as if I had been taking laudanum.

I mean to get all the pleasure I can out of life. New dresses and things, and walks and rides, and games, and parties, with plenty of flirting, are enough happiness for me.

If anybody objects to my ways, I advise them not to say so, for I shan't allow meddling. I can snap them up very shortly, till they wish they had let me alone.

Once in a while, when anybody dies, I do feel uneasy, and I wish I was a Christian; but I very soon get rid of it.

AS SKETCHED BY HER ACQUAINTANCE.

"Clara is handsome and bright, that's certain. One would enjoy looking at her, if she did not spoil everything by that proud toss of her head, and her cold indifferent, sharp expression.—Sometimes we like going with her for a while; but she will suddenly turn round, with such cutting speeches and insolent airs, as to be really outrageous. She does very well in company; but nobody would want to live in the house with her, or ever think of loving her."

BY HER PARENTS

"Our poor Clara is our greatest anxiety.—Headstrong, passionate, and disobedient, she often makes our home unhappy. She plunges into whatever course of conduct she chooses, and ridicules the idea of being guided by us. O, what sin and sorrow are before her, if she goes on indulging her self-will and vanity and pride! She will alienate everybody, and harden her heart against God. How can we rest, while we see her resisting his love, and openly defying his commands?"

BY HER SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER.

"Clara Stone tries me more and more. With her bright, quick mind, she might be a great help in the class; but her careless air and flippant answers are enough to spoil all the other girls. Still, I pity the poor foolish child so much; I think with such distress of her soul's danger, that I bear from her what I never should have supposed I could. Her assurance and self complacency are so offensive that only the hope of doing her good could make me endure it."

BY HER PASTOR.

"That cruel Clara Stone—what mischief she does among these young people! I fear she sets herself deliberately about laughing away their serious thoughts, lest they should be Christians and leave her alone. How defiantly she repels every approach the loving Savior makes to her haughty heart. Warnings and sweet inviting voices are alike disregarded. If any one bears patiently and kindly with her for Christ's sake, she fancies herself irresistibly charming to them. Oh, the egregious folly of self-conceit!"

The Will.

A little Irish boy, going to school with his Bible under his arm, was met by a minister, who asked him what book he had there.

"It ie a will, sir," said the boy.

"What will?" asked the minister.

"The last will and testamont that Jesus Christ left to me, and to all who wish to claim a title to the property therein left," said the boy.

"What did Jesus Christ leave you in that will?"

"A kingdom, sir."

"Where does that kingdom lie."

"It is the kingdom of heaven, sir."

"And do you expect to reign as king there?"

"Yes, sir; as a joint heir with Christ."

"And will not every person get there as well as you?"

"No sir; none can get there but those that claim their title to that kingdom upon the ground of the will."

The minister was so much pleased with the boy's answer that he said:

"Indeed, you are a good little boy; take care of that book in which God gives you such precious promises; believe what he has said, and you will be happy here and hereafter."

What to Seek First.

I was recently much impressed with a striking instance of the influence of a mother's word. A number of friends were met together for prayer and Christian fellowship: a young student, who has since gone out as a missionary of the cross to the heathen world, stood up and said:

"When I was a child I was one day full of bright anticipations as to what I should do, and what I should be, when I became a man. My ideas, both with regard to business and the honors of life, were very glowing. My dear mother listened to my boyish prattle very patiently. When I ceased she paused a few moments, and then, drawing me gently to her side, with an affectionate and solemn tone she said, 'Seek first the kingdom of heaven.'

"That word 'first' was never forgotten by me. It made an impression on my mind which time never erased; and, by God's mercy, it led me to seek an interest in Jesus; and now I can give up 'all for Christ.'"

A YOUNG LADY'S REASONS FOR NOT DANCING

1. Dancing would lead me into crowded rooms and late hours, which are injurious to health and usefulness.

2. Dancing would lead me into close contact with very promiscuous company, and "evil communications corrupt good manners."

3. Dancing would require me to use and permit freedom with other sex, which I believe to be wrong.

4. My parents and friends would be anxious about me if I were out late, keeping company with they know not whom.

5. Ministers, and good people in general, disapprove of dancing, and I think it is not safe to set myself against them; if a thing be even doubtful I wish to be on the safe side.

6. Dancing has a bad name, and I mean to study things that are pure, lovely and of good report.

7. Dancing is generally accompanied with drinking, and I see drinking produces a great deal of evil.

8. I am told dancing is a great temptation to young men, and I do not wish to have anything to do with leading them astray.

9. Dancing unfits the mind for serious reflection and prayer, and I mean to do nothing that will estrange me from my God and Saviour.

10. There are plenty of graceful exercises and cheerful amusements, which have none of the objections connected with them that lie against dancing.

CHRIST OUR GUEST.

When one of the boys in an orphans' home had said the grace, "Come, Lord Jesus, be our guest and bless what thou hast provided," a little fellow looked up and said:

"Do tell why the Lord Jesus never comes? We ask him every day to sit with us, and he never comes."

"Dear child, only believe, and you may be sure he will come: for he does not despise your invitation."

"I shall set him a seat," said the little fellow; and just then there was a knock at the door. A poor frozen apprentice entered, begging a night's lodging. He was made welcome; the chair stood empty for him; every child wanted him to have his plate; and one was lamenting that his bed was too small for the stranger, who was quite touched by such uncommon attentions. The little one had been thinking all the time:

"Jesus could not come, so he sent this poor boy in his place; is that it?"

"Yes, dear child; that is just it. Every piece of bread and every drink of water that we give the poor, or the sick, or the prisoners, for Jesus's sake, we give to him. 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.'"

THE PRECIOUS LITTLE PLANT.—Two little girls, Bridget and Walburga, went to the neighboring town, each carrying on her head a heavy basket of fruit to sell for enough money to buy a family dinner. Bridget murmured and fretted all the way, but Walburga only joked and laughed. At last Bridget got out of all patience, and said vexedly: "How can you go on laughing so? Your basket is as heavy as mine, and you are not a bit stronger. I don't understand it!"

"O!" said Walberga, "it is easy enough to understand. I have a certain little plant that I put on top of my load, and it makes it so light that I hardly feel it. Why don't you do so too?"

"Indeed!" said Bridget, "it must be a very precious little plant! I wish I could lighten my load with it! Where does it grow? Tell me. What do you call it?"

"It grows," replied Walberga, "wherever you plant it and give it a chance to take root, and there's no knowing the relief it gives! Its name is Patience."

The severest storm ever known in Minnesota passed over Saint Paul on the evening of the 25th ult. The Cosmopolitan Hotel was leveled with the ground. Several other brick and stone buildings were crushed in and a circus tent, within which a large number of spectators were assembled, was blown down, causing the greatest terror among the women and children, none of whom, however, was seriously injured. Carriages, buggies and wagons were lifted up and shattered, whilst one vehicle taken in the rear by the tornado, was thrown clean over the horse's head.

The Portrait of Mary in Heaven.

Towards the close of the sixteenth century, the following correspondence took place between a young abbess and an illustrious painter:—

THE ABBESS TO THE PAINTER.

St. Mary's Abbey, Aug. 15, 1564.

My Brother,—For I may now address you as my brother. I am placed at the head of a convent. I quitted the world without any great regret; still, I confess that I feel the necessity of surrounding myself with some of those elegances which make a cloistered life more endurable. I am taking pains to redecorate my cell, and the thing I most want is a portrait of my gentle patroness. Next to a living being, nothing is such good company to me as a picture,—especially such pictures as yours. I write, then, to bespeak from you, at any price you think proper to fix, a portrait as faithful as possible, of the Most Holy Virgin. You understand, I wish it faithful, not imaginary. Take time, fix your own conditions, I shall grudge nothing to gain this essential point of fidelity; for I fancy that I could pray more earnestly to Mary, if I could represent her to myself exactly as she is now in heaven. Awaiting your reply,

Your humble, and in anticipation, grateful Sister,
Maria de Saint-Roman.

THE PAINTER TO THE ABBESS.

Cloister of the Assumption, Sept., 1564.

My Sister,—You will see, by the last date of this letter, that I, like you, have left the world; but I have not renounced painting. It was, therefore, with most lively pleasure that I received in this solitude, your order for a portrait of Mary. My labours from this time will at least have an object; and in order to make them more endnring, I mean to compose this picture with all possible care. As you wish it, I shall devote my chief attention to the likeness. I shall await your advice on the subject; but I think the following will be our wisest course to attain this end:—In the first place, I shall not copy any of the well-known portraits; for these as you are aware, Mary did not sit herself, but the most beautiful women whom the artists could find, and often, alas! they resembled nothing so little as the Holy Virgin. Neither shall I consult the different legends, or the numerous lives of the Virgin, written a thousand years after the period when she lived. No: I must go back to the fountain-head, and seek in the Holy Scriptures themselves authentic particulars respecting Mary, to guide my pencil into fidelity. I will promise you to leave nothing to chance, to permit nothing to imagination; but to study the sacred text with minute attention, even should I consume several years of my life in the research. But a little obstacle presents itself; I have no Bible. I have searched in vain for one in the library of our convent, and I write to you to-day, in the persuasion that you will be so fortunate as to find one in yours, and will allow me the use of it.

I remain, humbly and respectfully your brother,

Joseph de Saint-Pierre.

THE ABBESS TO THE PAINTER.

St. Mary's Abbey, Dec. 1, 1564.

My Brother,—Your plan is charming; and I immediately instituted a search for the book you want. Our convent does not afford one, any more than your cloister; but I wrote to Rome to request a copy from one of the libraries of the Holy Father; this favour has been granted me, and I send the only volume with this letter.

Now then, work on boldly. Meanwhile, I will pray Mary to condescend to guide your pencil, and I trust that some day you will be able to send me a work of which I shall be as glad as you can be proud. Again I repeat, take time, and do not send me the portrait till the likeness is exact.

I remain, your sister, &c.
Maria de Saint-Roman.

Two years passed away, and the correspondence, then recommenced, as follows:—

THE PAINTER TO THE ABBESS.

Cloister of the Assumption, Jan., 1566

My Sister,—Here is, at length, the work completed!—and a conscientiously faithful work, if ever there was one. But it is not enough to assert fidelity—I must also prove it; for the portrait which I send you is such, that you might question its likeness if I did not set before you at length, the authorities on which rest my pretensions to have achieved the most accurate portrait of the blessed Mary, as now in heaven, which has ever existed. I will, therefore, enter into detail on the subject.

One of the most important points to know, in order to picture a face to yourself, is the person's age. On the arrival of your Bible, I therefore directed my first inquiries to Mary's age. I opened the Gospel according to St. Luke, and from the first page I observed that Elizabeth, who conceived only six months before Mary, was then "well stricken in years;" which made me at first suspect that Mary, her cousin, could not be very young at the period when the daughter of her uncle or aunt was very old. But, on the whole, I would not attach much importance to thie inference; for Elizabeth and Mary might be the children of two brothers or sisters of very different ages. I only noted this point, that Mary's cousin was very old, six months before the Holy Virgin received the angel Gabriel's visit.

The second circumstance which came to my aid in fixing the age of Mary, is that when the miraculous conception took place she was already betrothed. Whence I conclude that she was at a marriageable age. It is important that this starting point should be determined; we do not risk too much in supposing that Mary was then twenty years old, especially when we remember that she was cousin to the respectable Elizabeth. Setting out thence, let us continue the reckoning.

Mary was betrothed at twenty. After the betrothal, Joseph perceived her condition, therefore when she brought her son into the world, she must have been twenty and a half.

From the first chapter of St. Luke, I pass to the second. And I see that Mary is still living, because she forgets the child Jesus in the temple of Jerusalem. Moreover, I see from verse 42, that Jesus was then twelve years old. Therefore I conclude that Mary was at that time thirty-two and a-half.

From the second, I proceed to the third chapter; and therein I learn that Jesus was baptized by John, and began his holy ministry at thirty years. Now, Mary was still living, since, as you know, and as we shall see later, she outlived Jesus on the earth. I draw farther this very clear and simple conclusion, that if the mother was twenty years and a half old at the birth of her child, when Jesus had attained the age of thirty, Mary must have arrived at that of fifty and six months.

Now, how long did the ministry of Jesus Christ last? It was easy to calculate this, by searching out from the beginning to the end of the same gospel, the number of different times during that ministry that Jesus went to celebrate the feast of the Passover at Jerusalem. Thus, in St. John ii. 12, 13, I see that Jesus descends to Capernaum, because the Passover was near.

At the fifth chapter, a feast occurs again, which must be the Passover, because St. Luke, chap 6, refers the events here related to that epoch.

At the sixth chapter, fourth verse, we find a third Passover.

Lastly, chapter 13, comes the fourth and last Passover, at which Jesus died.

These four Passovers, contained in the ministry of Jesus Christ, do not allow us to suppose that it lasted less than three, or more than four years. I take the mean, and admit three years and a-half. Now, if Mary was fifty years and a-half old, when Jesus began to preach, and if his ministry lasted three years and a half, Mary, when standing at the foot of the Saviour's cross, was exactly fifty-four.

Here the Gospel finishes; but the Acts of the Apostles commence, and there I find Mary again, at prayer with the disciples. Elsewhere I observed that, according to the order of Jesus, the apostle John must have received Mary into his dwelling. How long did she remain there? This the Holy Scriptures nowhere say, for there is no farther mention of her whatever. Whether Mary lived one, two, three, ten, or twenty years, I know not. If I would follow the tradition of the Church, I should be obliged to suppose that she lived a long while at Ephesus, where St. John was bishop; but as I desire not to age Mary without an imperative uccessity, I prefer, in the silence of the Holy Scriptures, to suppose that she dwelt in this inferior world only five or six years more, which makes her just sixty. It is at that age that Mary would ascend to heaven. But before we follow her there let us study a few additional circumstances, which may aid in setting her appearance more correctly before us.

If it be well for the painter to know the age of a woman, to aid him in gaining an idea of her countenance, another circumstance, no less helpful, is to ascertain whether the woman has had children, and how many. Never should I have dreamed of starting this question with regard to Mary, if certain passages which my eyes glanced upon in looking through the Gospels, had not awakened my suspicions.

The first hint which I received on the point, is at the last verse of the first chapter of St. Matthew. I saw that Jesus was called the "first-born" son of Mary; and that Joseph did not live with her, as her husband, "till" the birth of Jesus. The two words which I here underline, appear to me significant. But this time also I would not hasten to a conclusion, and I liked better to believe, before a still more evident proof to the contrary, that Mary had no other children besides Jesus.

Such was the tendency of my mind after reading the first chapter of St. Matthew; and I greatly hoped that nothing, in advancing in the perusal, would oblige me to resist it. It was almost with terror, that on reaching chapter xii., I encountered these words:—"As Jesus was speaking to the people, his mother and his brothers, who were outside, asked to speak to him." "His brothers!" I cried; "if Jesus had brothers, Mary then had several children! No, no; it must not be thus! No doubt the word brother here means cousin; let us pass over it, and may God grant that no other difficulties may recall me to the argument!"

I went on, and immediately found the following lines—"And some one said to Jesus, Behold, thy mother and thy brothers are without, and ask to speak to thee. But Jesus answered him, Who is my mother, and who are my brothers? And stretching out his hands over the disciples he said, Behold my mother and my brothers! for whoever does the will of my Father who is in heaven, he is my brother, my sister, and my mother!"

This close of the story only added to my embarrassment. For if, I reflected, the word brother means cousin in the first line, it ought also to mean cousin in the second. And in that case, Jesus would seriously have addressed to the crowd this burlesque phrase: "He who does the will of my Father who is in heaven, the same is my cousin! This supposition is ridiculous, absurd, impossible! This is to clothe in a grotesque form that thought—so touching in the noble expression of the Saviour, that we are brothers and sisters of Jesus Christ.

You perceive it here becomes necessary to choose between two translations and their consequences: either, Mary was accompanied by her nephews, therefore it is to cousins that Jesus compares the Apostles, and thereby we lose the beautiful name of his brothers; or else, she was surrounded by her own children, but thus Mary loses her glorious title to a perpetual virginity. For my own part, I confess that, if one must absolutely make the election, I would rather think that Mary had several children than disinherit the whole Church, the Christians of all ages, of the beautiful prerogative of being brothers and sisters of Jesus Christ.

Nevertheless, we do not so easily renounce the ideas held since our tenderest infancy, and nourished during a whole life; although my mind was convinced, my heart was not won. I still inwardly resisted, and I hoped for an almost miracle to restore to me my former illusion.

I turned the leaf, and I read the following chapter. Would you believe it? To my great surprise, I saw at verses 55 and 56, that not only brothers of Jesus were mentioned, but sisters too. The word cousin might possibly have been put for brother, for the Greek term (as a note in your Bible informs me) will bear both senses; but, alas! the word sister absolutely cannot be taken in the sense of cousin; for, according to a monk of our convent whom I consulted, these two words are never used interchangedly in the original text of the New Testament. You may, therefore, yourself judge of the force of my argument, and that without understanding either Hebrew, Greek, or Latin. I reflected:—There was in this passage the Greek words adelphos and adelphe; now, since adelphe always in the Scriptures signifies sister and never cousin, is it not evident that adelphos here means brother, and not cousin?

As for the rest, our reflection suggested by good sense settles the question: to make the word adelphos signify brother, it need only be taken in its ordinary sense; but, to make it mean cousin, it must be understood in its exceptional sense. If those who wrote the Bible, had believed the perpetual virginity of Mary, surely they would have avoided the ambiguity.

Directly I had admitted this interpretation, a thousand other details came to the confirmation of my new opinion. Thus, in a passage which I am examining, the Nazarenes, astonished that Jesus, who had passed his childhood among them, should to-day be working miracles, exclaim: "Is not this the son of the carpenter? is not his mother called Mary? his brothers, James, Joses, Simon, and Jude? and are not his sisters also with us?"

(To be concluded next week.)

LET THE CHILDREN SLEEP.

We earnestly advise that all who think a great deal, who have to work hard, to take all the sleep they can get without medical means.

We caution parents, particularly, not to allow their children to be waked up of mornings—let nature wake them up, she will not do it prematurely; but have a care that they go to bet at an early hour; let it be early, until it be found that they wake up themselves in full time to dress for breakfast.

Being waked up early, and allowed to engage in difficult or any studies late and just before retiring, has given many a promising and beautiful child the brain fever, or determined ordinary ailments to the production of water on the brain.

Let parents make every possible effort to have their children go to sleep in a pleasant humor. Never scold or give lectures or any way wound a child's feelings as it goes to bed. Let all banish business and every worldly care at bedtime, and let sleep come to a mind at peace with God and all the world.

ECONOMICAL WICKING.—A correspondent says: "In the present high price of kerosine lamp wicks, people can make a better wick than they buy, by taking cotton flannel, of which all have pieces, and folding it up three thicknesses, just wide enough to go into the tube, and catching the edges with coarse stitches. The wick will burn well and can always easily be rolled up and down."

A Golden Deed—A Tale of the Orkneys.

BY JEAN INGLOW.

Let us go back a long time, and talk about things which happened before we were born. I do not mean centuries ago, when the seakings in their voyages, plundering the coasts, drove by night upon the rock and went down. That is not the long time ago of which I want to speak; nor of that other long time ago when two whaling vessels, large and deeply laden, bounded against it in a storm, and beat up against it until the raging waves tore them to pieces, and splitting and grinding every beam and spar, scarcely threw one piece of wreck on the shore which was long as the bodies of the mariners. I am not going to tell of the many fishing boats which went out and were seen no more—of the many brave men that, hard by that fatal place, went under water—of the many toiling rowers that made, as they thought, straight for home, and struck, and had only time to cry, "The rock! the rock!" The time of which I mean was a wild night in March, during which, in a fisherman's hut ashore, sat a young girl at her spinning-wheel, and looked out on the dark, driving clouds, and listened, trembling, to the wind and the sea.

The morning light dawned at last. One boat that should have been riding on the troubled waves was missing—her father's boat! and half a mile from his cottage her father's body was washed upon the shore.

This happened fifty years ago, and fifty years is a long time in the life of a human being; fifty years is a long time to go on in such a course, as the woman did of whom I am speaking. She watched her father's body, according to the custom of her people, till he was laid in the grave. Then she lay down on her bed and slept, and by night got up and set a candle in her casement, as a beacon to the fishermen and a guide. She sat by the candle all night, and trimmed it, and spun; then when the day dawned, she went to bed and slept in the sunshine.

So many hanks as she had spun before for her daily bread she spun still, and one over, to buy her nightly candle; and from that time to this, for fifty years, through youth, maturity and old age had turned night into day, and through the snow-storms of winter, through the driving mists, deceptive moonlight, and solemn darkness, that northern harbor has never once been without the light of the candle.

How many lives she saved by this candle, or how many a meal she won by it for the starving families of the boatmen, it is impossible to say: how many a dark night the fishermen, depending on it, went fearlessly forth, cannot now be told. There it stood, regular as a lighthouse, steady as constant care could make it. Always brighter when daylight waned, they had only to keep it constantly in view, and they were safe; there was but one thing that could intercept it, and that was the Rock.

However far they might have stretched out to sea, they had only to bear down straight for that lighted window, and they were sure of a safe entrance into the harbor.

Fifty years of life and labor—fifty years of sleeping in the sunshine—fifty years of watching and self-denial, and all to feed the flame and trim the wick of that one candle. But if we look upon the recorded lives of great men, and just men, and wise men, few of them can show fifty years of worthier, certainly not of more successful labor. Little, indeed of the "midnight," oil, consumed during the past half century, so worthily deserved the trimming. Happy woman!—and but for the dreaded rock, her great charity might never have been called into exercise!

But what do the boatmen and the boatmen's wives think of this? Do they pay the woman?

No, they are very poor; but poor or rich, they know better than that. Do they thank her?

No. Perhaps they feel that thanks of theirs would be inadequate to express their obligations; or perhaps long years have made the lighted casement so familiar that they look upon it as a matter of course.

Sometimes the fishermen lay fish on her threshhold, and set a child to watch it for her till she wakes; sometimes their wives steal into her cottage, now she is getting old, and spin a hank or two of thread for her while she slumbers; and they teach their children to pass her quietly, and not to sing or shout before her door, lest they should disturb her. That is all. Their thanks are not looked for—scarcely supposed to be due. Their grateful deeds are more than she expects and as much as she desires.

How often in the far distance, of my English home, I have awoke in the wild winter night, and while the wind and storm were rising, have thought of that northern bay, with the waves dashing against the rock, and have pictured to myself the casement and the candle nursed by that bending, aged figure! How delightful to know that through her untiring charity the rock has lost half its terrors, and to consider that curse though it may be to all besides, it has most surely proved a blessing to her!

Methodism and General Protestantism.

The Methodist communicants of the country amount to nearly one half of the Protestant Church membership of the entire republic. They are, therefore, nearly as responsible for the Christianity of the nation as all the other Protestant Churches together.* With such a thought, we may well merge all boasting in praying and working.

Looked at in its relations to general Protestantism, Methodism assumes, if possible, a more solemn phase of responsibility. Geographers estimate the Protestant population of the globe (including non-communicants with communicants) at 80,000,000. American Methodism, then, with its 8,000,000 of population, is responsible for one-tenth of the interest and fate of the whole Protestantism of the world.

The general Methodism, which sprung from Wesley and Whitefield in 1739 embodies to-day more than one-seventh of the Protestant numerical strength of our planet. What a disaster, then, to the interests of our common Christianity would be the obliteration of this curious but momentous fact called Methodism, the most characteristic fact of our age in the religious world! What a crime against the general kingdom of God on earth would be its perversion or failure through the ambition or defection of its leaders or people!

But we are not to look to these statistical facts as any adequate measure of its success or importance. American Methodism as a part, and by far a preponderating part, of the "Religious Movement of the Eighteenth Century," claims a large share in the great moral and general results of that movement, for the movement has providentially found in this new world its chief sphere, and as early as 1820, less than thirty years after the death of Wesley, American Methodism advanced to its front with a majority 17,000 over English Methodism, with all its foreign dependencies.

THE PEACE OF METHODISM IN MODERN CHURCH HISTORY.

The Methodistic movement has come to be considered an epochal fact in modern ecclesiastical history. Isaac Taylor (himself a churchman) has not overstated its significance in affirming "that, in fact, that great religious movement has, immediately or remotely, so given an impulse to Christian feeling and profession, on all sides, that it has come to present itself as the starting-point of our modern religious history; that the field-preaching of Wesley and Whitefield, in 1739, was the event whence the religious epoch, now current, must date its commencement; that back to the events of that time must we look, necessarily, as often as we seek to trace to its source what is most characteristic of the present time; and that yet this is not all, for the Methodism of the past age points forward to the next-coming development of the powers of the Gospel."

The vitalization of the Protestant world, and the development of its resources for the Christianization of the whole world, were the providential work of Methodism, according to this philosophic writer. He shows that it resuscitated the Nonconformity of England, which, he says, "was rapidly in course to be found nowhere but in books," and that the Anglican Church, which he represents as morally dying, or dead, owes to it her moral resurrection. Archbishop Secker had declared that the declension of religion in England "threatened to become absolutely fatal," repeating substantially the opinion of Bishop Burnet, who had said that "imminent ruin hung over" the English Church, "and, by consequence, over the whole Reformation." Watts had declared that "religion was dying in the world," and Bishop Butler that Christianity was "treated as if it were now, at length, discovered to be fictitious." Across the channel Voltaire had predicted the overthrow in the next generation. Yet at the end of the first decade of Methodism, when Watts had been dead two years, and Secker and Butler were still alive, and Voltaire had more than a quarter of a century of life before him, the new evangelical movement was not only arousing the entire realm, but had assumed all its essential organic forms. It was already on its universal march of triumph full armed. Whitefield had begun preparing its way in the New World, by restoring the Edwardean "great awakening," and by extending it to the middle and southern colonies. The modern spiritual life and energy of American Protestantism generally date from his labors here, as a representative of the English Methodist revival, and a coadjutor of Wesley. He continued his preparatory work till Wesley's itinerants arrived, gave them his blessing in Philadelphia, bidding them God-speed, and then went to Newport to die, having finished his mission.

To the Methodist movement, I repeat, with Isaac Taylor, is to be attributed the modern evangelical life and progress of Anglo-Saxon Protestantism throughout the world. That movement was not merely to restore the spiritual life of the churches, but to develop most of our modern methods of evangelical propagandism. It was to introduce the first of modern tract societies, by Coke and Wesley, in 1782; to incorporate in the church the Sunday-school by Wesley, in 1785, by Rowland Hill, the Calvinistic Methodist, in the British metropolis, in 1786, and by Asbury, in the New World, in the same year; to start the first of modern church missionary societies by Coke in 1786, and the British and Foreign Bible Society (the parent of all such institutions) by Charles, the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist, in 1804; to originate, in 1817, the Bethel service for seamen, by Zebulon Rogers, who first flung to the air on the Thames that Bethel flag which is now the universal ensign of marine religious worship. It was to originate the fellowship of the "good men of Clapham," who forced religious philanthropy into the British Senate, established Exeter Hall, initiated West India emancipation, and the modern anti-slavery movement. It was thus, in many ways, all forming prominent, intelligible passages in the history of the last hundred years, to make that hundred years the most notable since the Reformation, it not since the Christian era, in religious energy and progress, as it has been in all the other chief interests of humanity.

* A writer in the Central Christian Advocate, March 11th, 1866, following more minute data than I have examined, estimates the Methodists in the United States and Canada at 914,077, and adds: "There are now in the Protestant Evangelical Churches in the United States and Canada about 2,075,000 Church members, so that we only lack the 75,000 of as many members as all the other Churches together. Surely, the Lord hath done great things for us!"

Posture in Worship.

'Of all the lazy folks in creation, Old School Presbyterians take the lead in reference to the manner in which they conduct religious worship on the Sabbath day. Every principle of physiology and common-sense is subverted; every instinct of propriety, respect, reverence, and devotion are all sacrificed to the Moloch of personal idleness and ease. The people go in, squat down on the benches, and sit, and sit, and sit, for two mortal hours, neither kneeling nor standing till two or three minutes previous and preparatory toward taking their hats and marching out. Some denominations have the decency to kneel in prayer, which seems very appropriate and becoming; the Presbyterian leans forward, spreads his elbows along the pew back for about a yard, leans his forehead on his hands and goes to sleep, becomes semi-comatose, or lays plans for next day. Some of them, the women, doubtless are devout as far as persons can be who can scarcely keep their eyes open. Does it not defy criticism, that keeping one position for nearly two hours predisposes to sleep, which is further cherished and invited by leaning forward, as just described, and closing the eyes. Episcopalians are called formal by some, and ceremonious, by their frequent change of position in sitting, standing, and kneeling; others derisively speak of it as 'bobbing up and down all the times so that a stranger can't tell what,' what, as sometimes they sit when they sing, at others stand when they sing; now the minister recites, and they stand; again he recites, and they sit; a third time, and they lean forward; sometimes he says 'Amen!' and they lean on, take no notice of it'; at another time he says 'Amen,' and 'as you were,' seems to be the order of the day. We never fail to get mixed up entirely when we go to hear the Episcopals preach; nor have we any chance of going to sleep. Who ever sits squat down two hours at a stretch at home, abroad, any where on the face of the earth, except a Presbyterian at public worship? It is the more irrational, in proportion as the worshiper is a laboring man, is actively engaged in business during the week, for the blood will tend to stagnation from the long one position, the body becomes uneasy and cries out for change, as is evidenced plainly enough by the incessant wriggling about in the pew; while the brain is oppressed by the stagnating blood, and the mind works sluggishly and sleepily. The good old-fashioned Methodist plan is the best, the most rational, devout, and becoming; to sit when they listen to man; to kneel when they address the Great I Am; to stand when they praise before the Saviour of all.—But homely old Methodism is getting out of date now; it isn't decorous in these times to 'shout aloud' and show that the worshipper is a wide awake Christian, a living man; they don't sing in these times as if they would split their throats open with the gushing unction of their songs, but they are getting to be put in strait-jackets like other people, with the 'steepelows' to their churches, and doors to their pews, as if to keep out the uncircumcised and 'be stranger;' while their forefathers' soul singing has dwindled down to a prim squeak, like a penny whistle that had the croup. What would good old John Wesley say if he could be resurrected?

The Bible Cause in Alabama.

Within the last six months I have visited many of the most important points in the State—organized and reorganized about twenty auxiliary Societies, and the most of them have been supplied with books enough for their various fields. A number of colporteurs are now engaged in hunting up the destitute, and supplying the country generally. My collections have been very small—but the friends of the Bible show a willingness, in most places, to do something. I find a few among the different churches, both ministers and laymen, who are not exactly opposed to the Bible, (and yet they do nothing for the cause) who give as an excuse that they do not want to support the A. B. S. The Christian community at the South generally believe, that they have done a good deal through the agency of the American Bible Society towards translating, and giving the Scriptures to the people abroad. I have no doubt the people of the South will be astonished at the announcement of the fact, that, as a whole, we have always been beneficiaries. This humiliating statement to our Christian benevolence is made from the figures.

What then, may be asked, has become of the money which has been collected by the agents in the South, for that Society, in the last fifty years? This is an important question, and one that the friends of the Bible, at the South should fully understand. The receipts of the Treasurer of the American Bible Society show, that the States which composed the recent Confederacy or Southern States, have received in books, salaries and expenses of agents, and donations made for the destitute, more than those States have ever paid into the Treasury of that Society. The Society is now paying my salary and traveling expenses, and is making grants of Books to nearly every auxiliary in the State for gratuitous distribution, both for white and colored, and the donations made to the colored people are under the control and direction of the various auxiliaries.

I think it due to the Christian public at the South to make these statements, that the churches and people generally, may act understandingly in their Bible work—and further, that when I come among them, they may know the object of my mission is to aid them in circulating the Scriptures among the destitute.

I have some experience in the Bible work and I give it as my opinion, not simply as an agent, but as a Christian man, that the best the churches South can do, and I mean all the churches in all the South, to supply the great destitution among us, is at once (and without further complaining and lamblinding, for all that can do no good, will never supply one poor soul with the bread of life, but may deprive many of it,) accept in good faith the sympathy and hearty cooperation, offered to us by the American Bible Society—and we should the more readily do this, from the plain fact, that that is the only institution religious or political in the nation, which proposes on proper grounds fraternal relations with us. That Society, at its last Anniversary, resolved by the help of God again to undertake the supply of the entire country with the Word of God. I ask, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, who gave himself a ransom for all, the Christian people of Alabama to aid me in giving the word of life to every destitute family in the State.

I shall visit the northern part of the State in a few weeks, and do the best I can to supply that part of this large field with the Bible.

I specially request the N. O. C. A. and Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist and other Christian papers to please copy.

Denying a fault doubles it.

A Singular Scene.

"One night, at a late hour, the doctor was disturbed at his studies by a rattling sound among some wood, which, sawed and split for his study fire, had been left by the teamster, the afternoon previous, too late to be properly housed. He arose, went cautiously to the window, and saw a woman filling her apron with wood which she hastily carried away. He resumed his seat and recommenced his study. Shortly after the same noise occurred, and on looking out a second time, he saw a similar operation, the woman filling her great apron to the utmost limits of its capacity. When she had gone he returned to his book with a tender pity in his heart for destitution which sought relief in this lonely, dreary, not to say sinful manner. By and by he was startled by a heavy crash of falling wood, and hurrying up to the window he beheld the poor woman casting the very dust of the wood from her apron. He remained motionless, his gentle heart filled with commiseration.

"She swiftly departed and soon returned heavily laden with the wood, which she threw on the pile as if it were indeed the accursed thing. The doctor's compassion and curiosity were now intensely excited. He followed her retreating figure till he discovered her residence and thus ascertained who she was.—What she was, was no mystery to him. The last hour had shown him her virtue's lofty height. He called early the next morning on Mr. B., the wood dealer, and directed him to send a half cord of his best wood, sawed and split, to Mrs.——, but by no means to let her know from whom it came, which was readily promised. Mr. B.'s teamster, who happened to be within ear-shot, though out of sight, was not so bound, and when he tipped the wood into the poor widow's yard, replied to her eager inquiry who had sent it, by relating the conversation he had overheard.

"The conscience-stricken woman, feeling that her sin and repentance, in the lonely darkness of the midnight hour, were known, were understood by another heart besides her own, hastened without delay to the house of the benevolent man, to express her gratitude and her sorrow, and with deep humility and bitterness, told him the temptation to which her extreme poverty had reduced her, of breaking the eighth commandment. 'Sir,' said she, 'though my house was dark and cold, though my heart was wrung with anguish at the sight of my poor shivering little ones, I could not keep it, my conscience would not let me.' 'Say no more, my dear Madam,' said the good man, 'I saw it all—I saw you conquer the devil in two fair fights.'".

Sins of the Flesh.

The sins of the flesh seem to be gaining on us as a people and age. The tendency is to pamper the body, stimulate the blood by high living, heat the passions by a sensual literature, theater, fashion, and the corrupt appliances of the Greek and Roman age. Intemperance, licentiousness, the relaxation of the marriage ties, the frequency of divorce, the scandals of the public press, the addiction to the esthetic arts even, and the immense subsidizing of a vast material prosperity and boundless resources of commerce, the useful arts, sciences, and the culture of the earth, to gratify the senses and pampor the fleshly and moral appetites, demand vigilance and reform. The anxious question presses upon many hearts, How shall we clean out this Augean stable of modern civilization? Reform as reform has been tried, with its societies, pledges, and the whole apparatus of agitating machinery, and it has accomplished much good. But we have, we confess, little faith in a repetition of the same efforts. Nothing seems adequate to the sins of the flesh in our latter days but the same remedy that recast the old sensual civilizations, and out of them brought forth modern Europe. The spirituality of the Christian religion seems alone to possess that courage, persistency, resource and tender love of humanity that can say to the drunkard, the debauchee, the glutton, the sensualist of every form, Go, and sin no more. But to do the work it must be applied, preached, and wrought with amazing zeal and energy into the working thought and impulse of the time. May it not be questionable, whether the pulpit does not fire a little too high, and while sounding the lofty key of thought, and reaching the more intellectual and cultivated in society, it does not fail in being faithful and effective in its administration of Christianity, and all the resources of modern science, thought, history, and experience, to the sins of the flesh? It is a need so imperative as to demand all the spirit-forces we can bring into the field.—Christian Inquirer.

Ministerial Study.

The successful minister must be a faithful student. The science of theology is intimately connected with all other sciences. They are all in harmony with, and serve to illustrate it. God's two books of Revelation and Nature never contradict each other, but explain and confirm each other, because they are the products of the same hand. When religion and science unite their foundations, they form a wider basis for the support of the same temple, the one answering to the inner and the other to the outer court, and where the worshippers may bow around the same altar. The visible creation is filled with hieroglyphics, which, when rightly interpreted, bear testimony to the wisdom, power and goodness of the Creator; and the Bible is the true Rosetta stone enabling us with certainty to decipher their real significance. There is no branch of secular knowledge which may not be turned to good account by the theologian. The truths of Revelation intersect all historic, all metaphysical, all philosophical and scientific truths. The minister can never complete his education, simply because he can never master all the departments of learning.—Then called as he is to preach week after week, and sometimes often in the week, to the same hearers, he must study diligently, that he may have something new as well as old to bring out of his treasures, and so avoid the weariness and the dullness of repetition. All things need renewal. The strongest physical frame must recruit its ever-wasting powers with nourishment. The cedars of Lebanon must absorb the dews, and draw fresh life from the soil. The largest rivers would run dry if not fed by tributary streams. The noblest faculties of man have a limit to their original power, and the richest genius soon exhausts its native treasures. A Chrysostom, a Massillon, or a Chalmers, could grow only by mental and spiritual assimilation. Many a young preacher endowed with the finest natural abilities, has disappointed the finest hopes of the church, because he trusted too much to his original gifts, and neglected the culture obtained only by patient and persistent toil. The pastors who have longest retained their positions and maintained their standing with increasing usefulness, are those who have most conscientiously united study with prayer, and counted their past attainments as nothing, while there was so much more to know.—Central Presbyterian.

The Eye of an Eagle.

The eyes of all birds have a peculiarity of structure which enables them to see near or distant objects equally well, and this wonderful power is carried to the greatest perfection in the bird of prey. When we recollect that an eagle will ascend more than a mile in perpendicular height, and from that enormous elevation will perceive its unsuspecting prey, and pounce upon it with unerring certainty; and when we see the same bird scrutinizing, with almost microscopic nicety, an object close at hand, we shall at once perceive that he possesses a power of accommodating his sight to distance in a manner to which our eye is unfitted and of which it is totally incapable. If we take a printed page, we shall find that there is some particular distance, probably ten inches, at which we can read the words and see each letter with perfect distinctness; but if we move this page to a distance of forty inches, or bring it within a distance of five inches, we shall find it impossible to read at all; a scientific man would, therefore, call ten inches the focus or focal distance of our eyes. We cannot alter this focus except by the aid of spectacles.

But an eagle has the power of altering the focus of his eyes just as he pleases; he has only to look at an object, at the distance of two feet or two miles, in order to see it with perfect distinctness. Of course, the eagle knows nothing of the wonderful contrivance which God has supplied for his accommodation; he employs it instinctively and because he cannot help it. The ball of his eye is surrounded by fifteen little plates, called sclerotic bones; they form a complete ring, and their edges slightly overlap each other. When he looks at distant object, this little circle of bones expands, and the ball of the eye, being relieved from the pressure, becomes flatter; and when he looks at a very near object, the little bones press together and the ball of the eye is thus squeezed into a rounder or more convex form; the effect is very familiar to everybody; a person with very round eyes is near-sighted, and only sees clearly an object that is close to him; and a person with flat eyes, as in old age, can see nothing clearly except at a distance; the eagle, by mere will, can make his eyes round or flat, and see with equal clearness at any distance.

The Decline of British Methodism.

The district returns of the Wesleyan Methodists for the Conference year now about to close have been made up, and are worthy of consideration from their bearing upon the future of Methodism in England. The net increase is but three hundred and thirty-one members. The returns have been quite as discouraging, if not more so, for four years past. The startling fact, however, of this year's exhibit is, that several of the oldest districts, where Wesleyan Methodism has in former times had almost unbounded success, report a decline. The Oxford, Cornwall, Devonport, Bristol, Bath, Birmingham, Macclesfield, Liverpool, Manchester, and Nottingham districts show a decrease of over two thousand members. Yet in these very districts chapel debts have been largely reduced; and the number of ministers has been increased. The truth is that, while Wesleyan Methodism is improving in all material respects, in the money contributions of its people, in the style of its church architecture, and in most cases in the number of hearers who attend its ministry, it is losing fast all its aggresive power.

As might be expected, these discouraging returns have given rise to much theorizing upon their causes. The Watchman finds the solution of the decline in the neglect of discipline. According to its authority, in many parts of South England "love feasts are seldom held; in some places they are not held for many months or for years together; and when they are, any person who pleases is at liberty to take part—no tickets being shown or asked for. In North Staffordshire it is customary to hold love feasts without tickets being shown, or notes of admission sought for. In many places, and in a number of whole circuits in the South of England, love feasts are very seldom held, and tickets have not been shown for years. Add to this that, in these circuits, as throughout modern Methodism, the custom of showing tickets at the sacrament of the Lord's supper has become obsolete, and it can no longer be a mystery that there is a decrease in the number of our church members. Why should a man meet in class? He has the same status, he can claim the self-same privileges, the solemn church meetings are equally open to him, whether he is a member or not. In some instances he is equally made a trustee; in a few cases he attends the quarterly meeting; even in official position and administrative power he stands on much the same level as the member of society."

The Cross of Christ.

Arabia has its Mecca, England her Waterloo, and the United States their Mount Vernon; but what are all these in the light of the Christian's Calvary? Not the juggling prophet of a barbarous nation, but the Apostle of refinement and true civilization to the world has sanctified it by his presence. Not a battle, to destroy one earthly empire and saving another, was waged there; but the decisive battle of the conflict of ages between good and evil. Not the Father of a country, but the universal Brother and all-powerful Savior of mankind, died there.

Its value and sanctity are neither national nor racial, if we may coin a word. The Greek and Barbarian, the Caucasian and Ethiopian, alike stretch forth their hands toward it, bathe in its radiant effulgence, and send the gushing thanksgivings of their hearts to God for the blood that made it holy forever. O wondrous Cross of Christ! never were soul-pilgrimages made to so worthy a shrine! Absurd as were their accompaniments, terrible as their excesses, we can almost sympathize with and least excuse the Crusaders for the enthusiasm that carried them over thousands of miles to wrest even the ground itself from the dominance and insult of the infidel Saracen.

The Cross of Christ is the paradox of the ages, that thunders down to us through the corridors of time; lessons that sweep away the flimsey cobwebs of human reasoning, and lay bare to the gaze the eternal truths of God that underlie the constitution of the universe and mold the destiny of humanity. Truly, it has 'turned the world up-side down' wherever its lessons have been heeded, reversing the judgments of ages and the laws of social life.

WORDS AND THE HEART.—God hears the heart without words, but he never hears the words without the heart.

Ancient Music, and the Music of Solomon's Temple.

The disentombing of Assyrian sculptures and the deciphering of Assyrian and Egyptian inscriptions, have opened new fields of investigation in almost every department of knowledge. Among the branches of science which have shared in those discoveries, that of music has been benefitted largely. The accounts of ancient musical instruments were vague, and our ideas, especially of Hebrew music, were confused, till recently sculptures and paintings have been brought to light which delineate the musical instruments of the early Oriental nations, and in a number of cases veritable specimens have been disentombed. Such for example, is an Egyptian harp found in Thebes, with its strings yet perfect enough to vibrate again, after a silence of three thousand years.

The more recent investigations prove that the parent of all known musical science was Assyria. From the Assyrians the Hebrews and the Egyptians, and indeed all Eastern nations derived their knowledge of music. The unveiled monuments show that in the time of Sennacherib music was a highly cultured art and must have existed through generations. This polished nation used a harp of twenty-one strings, the frame of which was four feet high, which accompanied minstrel songs, or was borne in the dance. The lyre of tortoise shell, the double pipe, the trumpet, drum and bell were common. Even of the bagpipe representations have been discovered, though none of stringed instruments like the violin played with the bow.

In all delineations of social or worshipping assemblies, musical instruments very like our modern ones have a prominent place. The Hebrew music at the time of the Exodus, was purely Egyptian; but it was much modified subsequently by association with Asiatic nations. In the Temple of Jerusalem, according to the Talmud, stood a powerful organ consisting of a wind-chest with ten holes, containing ten pipes, each pipe capable of emitting ten different sounds by means of finger holes, so that a hundred sounds could be produced by it. It was provided with two pairs of bellows and ten keys, so that it could be played with the fingers. According to the Rabbins, it could be heard a great distance from the temple.

Civil Worth of the Sabbath.

1. Toil needs it—to wipe off the grime and sweat of labor; to refresh by change of apparel; to restore and invigorate the body exhausted by labor; to enliven the mind by change of current of thought; and by all this to fit laboring men for the renewing toils of the week.

2. Capital needs the Sabbath—to alleviate by intermission the care of accumulation; to ease the unbending of the strained and exhausted mind; to give a sense of the value of nobler objects than silver or gold; to keep men's humanity and conscientiousness alive; to shield capital from harm by securing the power and triumph of law and order in society.

3 The State needs the Sabbath—to illumine the public conscience, that guardian of public safety; to cause men so to recognize the Eternal Lawgiver as to honor the earthly "powers that be;" to secure the moral atmosphere in a community, which is the only sure support of law.

TROUBLES.—Some people are as careful of their troubles as mothers are of their babies; they cuddle them, and cry over them, and fly into a passion at you if you try to take them away from them; they want you to fret with them, and to help them to believe that they have been worse treated than anybody else. If they could, they would have a picture of their grief in a gold frame hung over the mantle shelf for everybody to look at. And their grief makes them ordinarily selfish—they think more of their dear little grief in the basket and in the cradle than they do of all the world beside; and they say you are hard-hearted if you say "don't fret." "Ah! you don't understand me—you don't know me—you can't enter into my trials."—Blind Amos, pub. by the A. S. S. Union.

A school in Massachusetts was under examination, when one of the examiners said—if I had a mince pie, and should give three-twelfths to John, three-twelfths to Isaac, and should keep half the pie myself, what would there be left?" There was a profound study among the scholars, but, finally, one lad held up his hand as a signal that he was ready to answer. "Well, sir, what would there be left? Speak up loud, so that all can hear," said the examiner. "The plate," shouted the hopeful fellow.

Envy shoots at others and wounds herself.

NEW ORLEANS:
SATURDAY, - - - - JULY 14, 1866.

TO ADVERTISERS.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has always been well known in this community as the very best advertising medium by which the business men of the city could bring their merchandise, trades, professions, and the like, before country readers in Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and a large portion of Texas.—This is easily understood when it is remembered that the four hundred preachers who are scattered throughout these States, in the Rio Grande, East Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Montgomery and Mobile Methodist Conferences, are all, more or less, active agents for the paper; and when it is also remembered that our paper circulates among a large class of people who seldom see any other New Orleans paper.

The terms of advertising are as follows:

	1 Month.	6 Mos.	12 Mos.
One square	$ 5 00	$20	$30 00
Two squares	7 50	25	40 00
Three squares	10 00	30	50 00
Four squares	12 50	35	60 00

Larger advertisements in proportion.

TO OUR AGENTS AND SUBSCRIBERS

1. The price of the paper is FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE: and it will be sent for 12 months only, unless the subscription price is renewed. We propose to keep no other books than the one containing the names of subscribers and their address. Due notice will be given in the paper a few weeks previous to the end of the subscription.

2. All travelling Preachers in the several patronizing Conferences throughout the South-west are our Agents. They will receive a paper for five subscribers, and be paid one dollar for each subscription over that number.

3. If money forwarded by mail is registered at the Postoffice when it is mailed, we will take the responsibility of its safety. But where it can be forwarded by private hands, the security is greater.

4. Be explicit in writing names and offices and routes—especially in directing to the "New Orleans CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE," as the Church North has already issued a sheet in this city entitled the "New Orleans Advocate."

Address Rev. J. C. KEENER, D. D., or Rev. J. B. WALKER, D. D

PREMIUM TO AGENTS.

We offer Agents of the New Orleans Christian Advocate a PHOTOGRAPHIC PICTURE OF THE GENERAL CONFERENCE of the M. E. Church South, held in New Orleans, for every FIVE subscribers they may forward to us; and this in addition to the commission already offered.

We will forward them by express, or in such way as they may direct.

Centenary College.

The annual meeting of the Board of Trustees and Visitors of this Institution is to be held on Wednesday, the 25th of this month. It is highly important that every member of the Board should be present.

The annual commencement exercises of the college will be held at that time.

J. C. KEENER, Pres. Joint Board.

The Mails—Notice.

We are glad to notice the extension of the mail service, after the first of July. Now that Post-offices and duly qualified Post masters may be found in many parts of the States of Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, we expect a rapid and considerable increase in our subscription list.

If any regular traveling preacher in either of our patronizing conferences will forward his name and the route and office which lead to him, we will send him the paper upon his own terms.

DEATH OF AN OLD CITIZEN.—Mr. A. J. Tully, an old citizen and merchant of New Orleans, died suddenly, on Thursday, at Milneburg, as he was about to take the boat for Ocean Springs, where he has been spending the summer for the benefit of his health.

REV. JAMES L. MERRICK, formerly a missionary in Persia, died recently at South Amherst. He had published a translation of a Persian life of Mohammed.

The union between their Northern and Southern members, is now fully restored in the German Reformed, the Cumberland Presbyterian and the Protestant Episcopal Churches.

The Romanists have nearly doubled their priests and chapels in England and Scotland since 1851; the convents which numbered 53 then, number now 211; and in England alone 1,800 accredited priests are at work.

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

The recent Conventions of Sabbath School Teachers held in the North have brought out the fact, that while there has been a wonderful increase for ten years past in schools, scholars, and the various agencies connected with this holy enterprise, there has been only an increase in the conversion of children of one-tenth per cent—but one child in a thousand. The number of pious children is reckoned to be only two and seven-tenths of the whole number attending Sunday Schools. How nearly this represents the religious condition of our own schools we cannot determine—sufficiently near to stir the inquiry whether the Sabbath School is, to a wholesome extent, supplying that home instruction upon which the Church once exclusively depended for the training of its youth.

Secretaries, agents, "Visitors," books, cards, pictures, celebrations, pic-nics, and songs, are very attractive and powerful agencies, and have drawn hundreds and even thousands of children to the delightful rooms which have been specially prepared for them. A stranger visiting those school-rooms upon a Sabbath morning could see nothing but that which is calculated to please. The sparkling eyes, the graceful and elegantly dressed forms, and the ringing voices of the children; the order and pleasurable variety of the exercises; the moral and religious tone of the lessons; the exciting and noble emulation of the scholars in the higher forms; the occasional constitution-making; and the regular Missionary or Tract Society Meetings, with a real President, Secretary and Treasurer; these are some of the beautiful things which constitute the training rooms of the Church.

Compared with the sober, russet, four-square style of Sunday-School of forty years ago, the modern is a very sunny, light-moving, fascinating assembly. We used to go in at nine o'clock, A.M.; opening exercises decidedly solemn, almost funereal; hymns out of the Hymn-Book, regular long metre—

"Another six days work is done,
Another Sabbath is begun."

Then came recitation of verses, learned "by heart;" Scripture readings, unrelieved, excepting by the Teacher's explanations and exhortations. Then to Church—a quarter of a mile through the streets, in proper order, and filed into the house and up into the gallery, comfortably and securely placed, with all the Teachers and the Superintendent, and all the congregation in full view—between you and the door.

At 2 P.M., back again in the school room. During the afternoon there was a slight diversion in the shape of a writing lesson; but at the last hour—that is, between four and five o'clock, we stacked books, slates, etc., and squared round for an old-fashioned exhortation-prayer-meeting, in which the boys were invited to the altar. The hours seemed long—this last one oppressive. On the whole, it was a somewhat dreary way of getting through the Sabbath. At the tinkle of the bell by which the classes were summoned, in regular order, to depart, we never failed to experience a sense of relief.

And yet, during a period of twenty years, this school sent out some thirty or more ministers of the Gospel, and how many church-members we know not. Whether the constancy and heavy drill of this old style Sabbath School had anything to do with its superior success, we do not determine.—There may be other causes. One cannot fail to notice, however, that many of our young people of the present day do not grow out of the Sabbath School into the Church.

The theory that children of pious people are somehow inducted to a spiritual life by a process more resembling that of a natural growth, than are the children of others, may have something to do with this difference between the two periods.—This is a modern theory. The old notion was, that it was as necessary to make a direct personal appeal to children as to any other part of the human family, to repent and to believe, that their sins might be blotted out and their hearts renewed.—The youthful heart offered an impressible nature to the Gospel, and yielded readily to the appeals and influences of the Holy Spirit. This consideration did not relax the efforts of parents, pastor and teacher to win this young heart to the Saviour, by a treatment as thorough and prompt, as decided and searching, as that employed in the case of every other sinner.

It seems to us that in our Sunday Schools there is too little time employed in reading and teaching the Scriptures; too little in prayer; too much scene-shifting, and light-drill, and episode; too feverish a desire to be interesting. Now if any man will discover a way to make spiritual things and experimental holiness interesting to the natural heart of young or old, he will have advanced the art of preaching repentance beyond any former teacher.

Parents are much disposed to yield the whole matter of training their children religiously to the S. S. Teacher. The home-teaching of the Sabbath-day has been too generally abandoned by our people.—Sabbath Schools can neither substitute or supply that combined love and authority with which a father or mother should urge the truth of Christ upon the heart of a child.—They admire this arm of the Church much more than we do, if they transfer to it the sole care of enlightening and saving a dear child.

We know of no book used in our Schools for specially teaching our youth the doctrines of the Gospel as believed by the Methodist Church. The distinctive difference between the Protestant and the Romish faith should be repeatedly and clearly stated. The Articles of Faith and the Evidences of the authority and genuineness and inspiration of the Scriptures, should be taught to the Bible classes. The "Theological Compend," for instance, contains such truths as can and should be engraved upon the minds and memories of our young people. Then we should take such pains as Mr. Wesley took to teach the art of singing to the children—not merely Hymns, but the art of singing, that we may recover the music of Heaven which our people once had in their devotions, but have well nigh lost. The choruses and twitterings of very diluted, infant-like poetry, called songs, are a poor substitute for the tunes of the old masters and the spiritual breathings of Charles Wesley. And when these children grow up, they will reflect with but little pleasure upon the songs they learned from their Teachers, only less worthless and ephemeral than the music which accompanied them.

The sittings in our churches are now very generally or should be promiscuous; and children should be present at the hour of worship. They should be with their parents, and make up a part of the congregation, to feel the impress of its stillness, its unity, its solemn prayer, its combined uplifted praise, and of the authoritative Word as "from the mouth of God." No Sunday School attendance should excuse a child from the holy convocation of the Sabbath.

A properly conducted school is a great aid to both parents and pastor in teaching the youth of the Church and in gathering children out of the streets to the knowledge of Christ, who, otherwise, would remain neglected and untaught. But its true end must be kept carefully in sight: not to beguile or amuse, but to instruct in righteousness.

THE WAR OF EUROPE.

The news of the check received by the Italians under Victor Emanuel suggests the possibility of Franco becoming involved in the war. Napoleon, doubtless, wishes to deprive Austria of the celebrated fortifications in the North of Italy known as the Quadrilateral. This he wishes in order to fully create and build up a powerful kingdom in Italy—a breakwater, in addition to others which already exist, between France and Russia. This is the more desirable because it limits the power of the Romish Church as a politico-religious organization, that has not only interfered politically but often has controlled public opinion in France.

A combination between Austria and Russia might prove disastrous to Europe; and if a conflict is to come between these Absolute Monarchies on the one hand, and the Limited Monarchies on the other, as come it must eventually, the sooner the better. At any rate, neither France nor England can afford to see Prussia, or Italy—the Italy that now is—overwhelmed.

The prospect, therefore, of a general war in Europe will depend upon the nature of Austrian successes. If they are great, sufficiently so to seriously cripple either Prussia or Italy, every soldier that now is, and every man capable of carrying a rifle, in France, England or Russia, will be in the conflict.

NEW POST-OFFICES.

There seems to be a good disposition upon the part of the Government to open Post-offices wherever they are applied for. Hard-swearing would be, is required to constitute a post-master; in fact, too hard to be possible to those who have been living in Alabama, Mississippi or Louisiana during the last four years. But, fortunately, when the war ceased, some of the Federal army who were already in the South as prisoners, and who choose to remain here; or mechanics who, since the war, have wandered South in search of employment, can be found—who would make not the most desirable post-masters under ordinary circumstances, but will answer a remarkably good purpose just now. Hunt up these modest and inherently qualified parties, and instal them into the honor of receiving, opening and delivering mail matter. As the qualifications demanded are moral for the most part, and as the Government seeks only the most incorruptible for its servants, some one else may supply the mere clerical qualifications for the office.—Surely virtue will find its way down here presently, at least enough of it to open a post office in every town. It would not be a bad idea for some person in Massachussetts or Connectient to undertake to supply this demand for postmasters. There must be a good deal of the right sort of moral material lying around loose up there, out of which a very good article of postmaster could be "qualified." At any rate, we hope that our people will take pains to put themselves in communication with each other, even if they don't care about the rest of the world.

All interests of a general kind of the State and Church depend much upon the general diffusion of post offices. A good many have been opened since the first of this month. We are availing ourselves of this fact to send the ADVOCATE to all of our agents. If the mail service should for some time yet be irregular, yet it will improve with use. If the ADVOCATE does not come promptly regularly, please let us know; keep writing, and complaining, because we have no other way of correcting the miscarriage. Do not become impatient, only write.—Write a little about the state of the Church, and about the crops, and it will fully repay us for the labor which we honestly expend in order to please subscribers.

DEATH OF REV. J. WESLEY MILLER.—A letter from Rev. W. A. Gamewell, dated Darlington S. C. June 29, 1866, brings the sad intelligence of the death of the above-named brother—one of the most diligent, faithful, pious and cultivated members of the South Carolina Conference. His brethren, his family, the Church have suffered a great loss in his death.—Southern Christian Advocate.

REV. J. CANNON, an old Methodist preacher, who had spend fifty years as a pioneer among the Indians and whites on the frontier, in Vermont, Northern New-York, and Canada, died on Friday, June 22d, in Troy, N. Y., aged eighty-three years.

The Rev. Samuel Watson, D. D., of the Memphis Conference, has been bereaved by the death of his wife. She had been in feeble health for two years—owing to a shock received by her nervous system, from a battle having been fought near her residence, the shells flying over and around the house. Her end was triumphant. Her bereaved husband asks the prayers of his Christian friends, and they will not deny him the boon or withhold their sympathies in his great trial.

REVIVALS.—We have now received news, says the Arkansas Advocate, from Arkadelphia, Washington, Tulip, Benton, Cypress Valley and Batesville, of a highly interesting awakening of religious interest. The holy fire is spreading through the State. A general revival of pure spiritual Christianity is the conservatism now needed. Let every true patriot cry, day and night, "Oh Lord revive thy work."

Bishop Early.

Bishop Early was on the car that became detached near Coalfield station, on the Danville Railroad, on the 12th inst., and which was precipitated down a high embankment, making a complete revolution in its descent; killing one and seriously injuring many of the passengers. Bishop Early was severely bruised and battered by the accident; but, by a merciful Providence, escaped sudden death. He was carried to the residence of Mr. E. Brumall, near the scene of the terrible casualty, where he received the kindest nursing and care on the part of the family, and the most assidious attention on the part of three or four physicians. Rev. O. P. Fitzgerald, of California, happened to be on the train, and finding the Bishop in his suffering and precarious condition amid the wreck of the coach, he declined proceeding on his journey, and attended the Bishop for a couple of days until some members of his family arrived from Lynchburg, and relieved him from his charge, and allowed him to proceed on his journey. With the constant attentions of the kind family, the physicians, and friends who have been unwearied in their care and efforts to relieve the Bishop, he has continued to improve until the present, and will doubtless soon be himself again.

Fortunately, no bones were broken. The Bishop is a man of powerful constitution and irrepressible energy of mind and will, which will keep him alive and active, it may be, for years to come.

The last Richmond Advocate says that Bishop Early is staying in Richmond, Va., at the house of an old friend, where he will remain till he has recovered from his recent injuries. The Advocate says: "He is doing well, and looks better than we expected to see him. He suffers still some pain from a bruise in his side, and will, perhaps, for some time to come. He is cheerful, and speaks very gratefully of his many friends who showed him kindness in his affliction."

BISHOP ASBURY—Harper's Magazine for July has a sketch, with a portrait, of Bishop Asbury. There is much of truth in the opening sentences:

"There is a man, not even named in our leading histories, who yet has wrought more deeply into American life in its social, moral, and religious facts than any other who lived and acted his part in our more formative period. His name is Francis Asbury. His life is overlooked, and so spiritual, pervasive, and effective a force is left unnoticed. And this is but an instance in which history is ever repeating its own method."

We have this concerning the person of the Bishop:

"Bishop Asbury was 5 feet 9 inches high, weighed 154 pounds, erect in person, and of very commanding appearance. His features were rugged, but his countenance was intelligent. His nose was prominent, his mouth large, as if made on purpose to talk, and his eyes of a bluish cast, and so keen that it seemed as if he could look right through a person. He had a fine forehead, indicative of no ordinary brain, and beautiful white locks which hung about his brow and shoulders. There was as much native dignity about him as any man I ever saw. He seemed born to sway others. In dress he was a pattern of neatness and plainness."

MEETINGS FOR HOLINESS.—E. W. W., writing from New York to Zion's Herald, says:

There is a weekly meeting held at the residence of Dr. Palmer, 23 St. Mark's Place, for the promotion of Christian holiness. The meeting is held in a suit of large parlors, and they are uniformly thronged on every Tuesday afternoon. This gathering is now historic. For thirty years it has exerted a wide influence upon our denomination in this neighborhood. Of late these meetings have been, perhaps, more intense and powerful than ever before; and now very often not only the parlors, but the spacious halls and stairs are crowded with people who are anxiously interested on the subject of Christian perfection. I believe that Dr. Palmer and his excellent wife have entertained the idea of building a private chapel for the better accommodation of these services. Persons of all denominations mingle very freely in these meetings; and it is not uncommon to hear, in quick succession, experiences from the lips of Presbyterians, and Baptists, and Dutch Reformed, and Episcopalians, as well as Methodists. The meeting is recognized, however, as belonging to our Church, and the Wesleyan views of perfect love are distinctly taught and insisted upon. The services are very simple and unostentatious. Dr. Palmer commonly presides at the meeting; but after the opening exercises of Bible reading, and singing, and prayer, usually assited by some minister who may be present, he takes no further control. All are made welcome to take such part in the service as they may please; but although there is this utter absence of direction and restraint, the meeting rarely ever wavers from the single subject of heart purity. The controlling influence of Mrs. Palmer in the services gives full encouragement to any Christian women who may desire to participate; and very often some of the most thrilling, intelligent, and beautiful experiences are given by the godly women of the assembly.

RELIGIOUS CONVERSIONS IN POLAND.—A letter from Wilna, published in the Moscow Gazette, gives the following account of wholesale religious conversions in that province: "On Sunday, March 20th, at Podbrezie, the Roman Catholic priest, after celebrating the Mass, ascended the pulpit and delivered a sermon, in which he succinctly traced the history of the Christian Church from its earliest period, and concluded by declaring his conviction that the one holy universal church was the Orthodox Church, to which he should henceforth attach himself, and he invited his parishioners to follow his example. Conversions in the town began in February, and now there are 1300 Orthodox believers. The priest was admitted into the bosom of the Orthodox Church on March 25th, and on Easter Sunday officiated in his own church, remaining still the parish priest. This conversion is entirely spontaneous, and affords no legitimate ground for insinuations against any persons."

THE POPE AGAINST LIBERALISM.—A communication from Rome in the Salut Public of Lyons has the following: "A letter which the Holy Father recently addressed to the editors of the Civilla Cattolica has produced a deep impression here. It is a heavy blow for the liberal Catholic press. The Jesuits published this letter in the last number of their periodical, along with two articles, one of which condemns the Catholics who wish to reconcile the Papacy with the kingdom of Italy, while the other blames those who take part in political elections and consent to become deputies to the Parliament at Florence. The Civilla Cattolica maintains that men of good principles ought not to adhere to the Italian Government, and that they must choose between the Pope and Liberalism, no conciliation being possible. The Pope's letter approves of the opinions of the above-named journal, and consequently of this formal declaration. By this same document, the editors of the Civilla Cattolica are constituted a corporation or perpetual college, under the direction of the General of the Jesuits."

One of the most remarkable indications of the sentiments of the Italian people with regard to the Church of Rome is the recent vote on the Italian Chamber of Deputies on the suppression of convents. In the face of a war which demands the greatest possible unanimity of the people, the Chamber of Deputies had felt sure enough of popular opinion to adopt almost unanimously a bill for the suppression of all religious bodies throughout Italy.

It may be interesting at the present time to institute a comparison between the present Prussian army and that of the Great Frederick. On the 6th June, 1781, that monarch held a review of all the regiments of the Prussian army, both eastern and western divisions. It then consisted of exactly 50,000 men. The strength of the Prussian army of to-day is nearly 700,000.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?—The officials at Washington seem to be attempting to shift the responsibility of the very foolish and cruel order putting Mr. Davis in irons. It appears that the President had nothing to do with the matter, and that the order has been traced to the door of Secretary Stanton.

Boasters are cousins to liars.

The following table shows the progress of Methodism in Great Britain, in quadrennial periods since the year 1800:

	Members.
1800	113,762
1804	120,222
1808	126,655
1812	155,124
1816	191,680
1820	192,217
1824	226,939
1828	245,194
1832	256,272
1836	298,132
1840	323,178
1844	337,598
1848	338,861
1852	281,263
1856	263,865
1860	310,311
1864	329,663

The total membership of Great Britain and Ireland at the opening of this century was 113,762, while the total membership in the United States was only 64,894—a little above half that in the mother country.

The Seventeenth Annual Conference of the Methodist New Connection met in Birmingham, June 11th. The Rev. Samuel Hulme was elected president, and Rev. Thomas Fenton secretary. Last year the Methodist New Connection had over 33,000 members. A correspondent in the Wesleyan Times compares its growth with that of the Wesleyan Methodist Church as follows: "The Wesleyan body commenced the century with 112,000 members; it has now about 330,000, being rather less than three times what it was in 1800. The Methodist New Connection commenced the century with 5000 members; it has now over 33,000, being more than six times what it was in 1800; thus demonstrating that its increase is more than two to one compared with the Wesleyan body."

THE NEW BAPTIST VERSION.—Burleigh writes to the Boston Journal from New York, that the new Baptist version of the Scriptures is steadily gaining ground in the denomination:

"At a meeting of the New York association, held last week, at which thirty leading Baptist ministers were present, it was voted unanimously to accept the new version and to recommend it to be used in the pulpit, in the Sunday school and in the family. Rev. Dr. Wescott, who has been a long and earnest opponent of the new version, has given in his adhesion and allowed himself to be elected as associate secretary. The new first commissioners have requested donations of the new version for every engine house in the metropolitan district, assigning as a reason that the members of the paid department have a great deal of time on their hands. They have heard of the new version, are curious about it, and propose to read it in connection with the old in their leisure moments and see which is best. Orders have been received for the new book from the Pacific coast, the provinces, and from Europe. Orders for 20,000 copies are now unfilled."

DR. WHEDON'S NEW COMMENTARY.—The Advocate and Journal, in a notice of Dr. Whedon's Commentary on Luke and John, says:

"The author in handling this Gospel shows marked ability. The treatment may be less tender and dew-like than Tholuck, it is penetrative, original, and devotional. Thus happily does he detect a meaning in the words, 'The only-begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father.' As the Word was in the divine intellect, before its incarnation, so the Son was in the love, the bosom, the heart of God, before his early birth.' 'Jesus turned and saith,' is thus noticed: 'John still stands at his work; but his disciples will follow the lamb. Jesus turns, and our Evangelist arrives at the first thrilling word which the eternal Word uttered in his hearing.' "Which were born, not of the will of man,' is thus finely annotated: 'Self-regeneration is an impossibility in fact and an absurdity in thought. Man consents, and God regenerates. Man repents, and God forgives. Man turns, and God converts. Man believes, and God justifies.' A shrewd critic might find room for a troublesome metaphysical query, as to man's consenting to be regenerated while as yet he is totally under the dominion of sin; yet the thought as given is practically correct."

WEEKLY SUMMARY OF NEWS.

FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, July 10.—The fourth section of twenty miles of the Pacific railroad in the western division being completed, the secretary of the treasury has ordered the issue of bonds in the amount of $320,000 to said road to which it is entitled by law.

The secretary of the treasury has also ordered bonds to be issued to the Central Pacific railroad of California, to the amount of $640,000 due the company, it having completed one quarter of the section, the cost of which exceeded $1,000,000.

WASHINGTON, July 10.—The President received visitors to-day. Rumors are afloat of a rupture between the President and Secretary Stanton, consequent on the arbitrary measures of the latter in the case of Paymaster Paulding, whom he hurried off to Fort McHenry under guard. The President directed a stay of the proceedings until the bureau of military justice could review the case and report to him, and issued an order for Paulding's immediate return.

Secretary Stanton has also dismissed three paymasters—Lieut. Cols. Dodge, Jamison and C. B. Ely—who testified in the court-martial in defense and justification of Paulding.

In the Senate, Mr. Stewart submitted a resolution, which was laid over, requesting the President to interpose in behalf of the Fenian prisoners in Canada.

The House bill fixing the number of justices of the supreme court was passed with an amendment which provides that no vacancies shall be filled in the office of associate judges until the number shall be reduced to six; that thereafter the court shall consist of one chief justice and six associates, and makes certain changes in the places of holding the courts. Under this bill Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina are in the fourth circuit, and Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Mississippi and Texas in the fifth circuit.

The bill to enlarge the capital grounds and appropriating $50,000 for the improvement of the same, passed. The estimated cost of the property is about $400,000.

In the House the tariff bill passed by yeas 94 and nays 53. The tariff on cotton is fixed at three cents per pound, and on all foreign coal at $1 50 per ton.

Thad. Stevens is a candidate for United States Senator.

The Senate bill reducing the number of associate judges of the supreme court was another plan to head off the President. He had nominated Hon. Mr. Stansbury, of Ohio, for the vacancy caused by Catron's death. Under this bill there is no vacancy.

Col. Kuhns, Democrat, of Pennsylvania, will be turned out, and his seat in the House will be given to Koontz, the Black Republican competitor.

It is not believed the Senate will pass the tariff bill.

WASHINGTON, July 10.—House.—In the debate on the tariff bill, Mr. Wentworth said it would be prohibitory.

Mr. Morrill, of Vermont, thought it was in the main just, and notwithstanding the clamor against it, would prove beneficial.

Mr. Dawes, of Mass., declared that New England did not need more protection nor he did not want the responsibility of the bill to resist on the people, but so the West whose people had more interest in it than any other section.

Mr. Delano, of Ohio, said it ought to be passed. It was the first tariff bill that had ever given any thing like protection to agriculture. He appealed to the New England members to stand by it.

Mr. Cassen, of Iowa, spoke in opposition, and said its title should be a bill to prevent the blessings of divine providence from being employed by the people of the United States. He thought the bill should be recommitted and fundamentally changed; if it were not, the American people would protest until they would not buy a single thing that is protected. It was legislated for special interests, and sacrificed the interests of one half the people for the other half.

Messrs. Wilson, Garfield and others spoke.

Amendments were offered and passed reducing the duty on railroad iron to seventy cents per hundred pounds, striking out all amendments increasing the duties on agricultural products, reducing the duty on tea to 12½c. per pound and on coffee 2½c.

The House refused to allow the Alabama and Florida railroad to be credited with the duty on railroad iron for five years.

Other amendments were adopted, and it was moved to recommit or postpone, or to lay it on the table. The motions were all voted down and the bill passed.

WASHINGTON, July 10.—The Republican caucus has been postponed until Wednesday evening. One of their purposes, it is said, is to consider the best means of thwarting the action of the President during the recess of Congress.

Mr. Trumbull's bill, if passed, virtually takes the appointing power from the President, and likewise prevents removal from office without the consent of the Senate.

The President will undoubtedly veto this measure, and it is a question whether it can be passed over the veto.

It is understood the President will remove the radicals from office after the close of the session, hence the action of the Republican members, which was agreed on in caucus.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—An address has been issued to the loyalists of the South to meet in convention at Philadelphia in September next. It says the time has come when the reconstruction of the Southern State governments must be laid on the principle of protection to every citizen, on the basis of perfect equality before the law; and further, that no State government should be recognized as legislated under the Constitution that does not incorporate this principle by organic law; that if Southern men control the legislatures there will be no safety for the loyal element of the South. The reliance of the signers they declare is in Congress alone. The signers are: J. S. Fowler, Senator elect, and Wm. B. Stokes, of Tennessee, Governor Hamilton, of Texas, G. Washington, and H. G. Cole, of Ga., Judge Underwood and R. Mordewill, of Va., Byron Lofton and Dr. Goodloe, of N. C., Geo. Reese, D. H. Bingham and M. J. Saltron, of Alabama, and others.

The Herald's Washington correspondent gives publicity to an extraordinary story respecting the leaders attempting to sacrifice Jeff'son Davis and others alleged to have been implicated in the assassination of Lincoln. It says immediately after the execution of Mrs. Surratt, the judge advocate set to work to procure evidence for the conviction of Jefferson Davis, Clay and others as conspirators. Several detectives were employed to hunt up and hunt down every person who appeared to have had any correspondence or connection with the suspected parties, or any knowledge tending directly or indirectly to connect them with the conspiracy, but after weeks of industrious labor and search, the detectives failed to discover anything of the slightest consequence bearing upon the subject. This result was communicated to the radicals in the cabinet, and by them confided to the leading radicals then about to assemble in Congress, and probably to many—certainly to a few celebrities of their faction not in office. Disappointed at the result, the blood-thirsty partisans who demanded vengeance and more blood, engaged another experienced agent to work up the case and find necessary witnesses at all hazards. He did work it up and procured nearly a dozen scoundrels, who deposed under oath in the bureau of military justice, to matters or facts sufficient to hang both Davis and Clay. Among these men were Conover, Montgomery, Meredith and others. Some of them actually told the story to the President and cabinet, and it was urged upon the President to trace the facts by a military commission, but notwithstanding the opinion of Attorney General Speed that it would be legal and proper to try Davis and Clay by military commission; the President, who penetrated the designs of the scoundrels, refused. It has since transpired, and the judiciary committee know, that these men acknowledge there was no truth in their statements, which they admit were made for money.

Judge Holt, in his official report last December argued informally of Davis's participation.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—Rumors are current of dissolution of the cabinet. It is positively stated that Postmaster General Dennison tendered his resignation to-day, and that this will be followed by similar action on the part of Secretaries Stanton and Harlan, and Attorney General Speed. There is nothing official.

The Republican members of Congress held a caucus to-night and appointed a committee to report hereafter as to the necessities of public business and the proposed time for adjournment. Their own party interests were also under consideration, but as they passed an injunction of secrecy on the members, the proceedings are not fully divulged.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—The Senate passed a bill to extend for three years the time and manner of holding elections for United States Senators. Among other provision it requires that the vote shall be viva voce.

The Senate, by four majority, rejected the bill for the annexation of Alexandria City and county to the District of Columbia.

The House passed a joint resolution providing for a reorganization of the militia of the States and Territories in a uniform manner, and for the distribution among them of two-thirds of the ordnance and ordnance stores, excepting the States lately in insurrection.

FOREIGN.

In the House of Lords on the 25th Earl Russell announced that in consequence of the late hostile vote in the commons, the minority had tendered their resignation. The queen had invited them to reconsider their determination. They awaited the result of their interview with the queen on the 26th, before declaring their definite resolution. The House was adjourned.

In the House of Commons, on the 25th, Mr. Gladstone said Earl Russell and his colleagues had tendered their resignations and awaited a personal interview with the queen. The House was adjourned.

The queen accepted the resignations of the ministry.

The London Times thinks Derby will form a new ministry.

Military revolts took place at Madrid and Barcelona. Seven hundred took refuge in France, were disarmed and sent to Serrejon.

GREECE.—The Roufus ministry had resigned, and a new ministry had been formed.

THE WAR.

NEW YORK, July 8.—The Italian army crossed the Mincio without meeting with opposition from the Austrians. It then pushed towards Peschiera, but was repulsed by a short cannonade from the forts in that stronghold. The Italian army was encountered by the Austrians in great force in the vicinity of Verona, and a great battle commenced. The Austrians had repulsed both wings of the Italian army. The fight was still going on.

The reported relief of the Hanoverian army was not confirmed. Negotiations for capitulation on agreeable terms had been agreed on between the commanders of the Hanoverian and Prussian forces.

The Prussians had advanced into upper Silesia and Bohemia. The Prussians easily repulsed the Austrian hussars owing to the effective power of the needle gun.

Prince Charles's army met resistance in crossing the Bohemian frontier.

It is expected that General Benedek will debouche from Bohemia with the main body of his army upon Gorlitz, compelling the Prussians to evacuate Saxony by a flank attack.

The Prussians are arming the Coblentz and Ehrenbreitstein fortresses and defenses against the Southern Germans.

LATER.—Sunday's engagement between the Austrians and Italians, near Verona, lasted all day, and ended in the complete defeat of the Italians, who were commanded by the king. Both armies fought most bravely. The Italians were repulsed at all points. After a severe and bloody struggle, the Italians recrossed the Mincio on Sunday evening.

Prince Amadeus was wounded. The Austrians captured 2000 prisoners. The Austrians then took Custozza by assault. The Austrians occupied Sondrio in Lombardy.

Nothing is known of General Benedek's movements.

The Prussians attacked Osnreein, in Gallacia, and were beaten off with loss by the Austrians.

The Hanoverian army escaped through the Prussian corps and reached Meininger. Prussia will not blockade the Hanoverian ports nor seize private property.

Garibaldi intends marching through direct to Munich.

STILL LATER.—A telegram positively asserts that the Hanoverian army is still completely surrounded. The king has demanded twenty-four hours for deliberation on the condition upon which his army is to capitulate.

The demand has been granted. The king expects to receive assistance from the Bavarian army.

Garibaldi was successful against the Austrians near Brescia, and his volunteers held excellent positions in the Alpine Passes. The General looked to Munich as his objective point.

In the battle of Custozza the Italians met with a severe defeat. Gen. Villerz was killed. Prince Armand and Gen. Cerale were wounded.

An Austrian official dispatch announced the result as follows:

VIENNA, July 25.—The Archduke Albert telegraphed from Gorizia yesterday evening, as follows: "The Imperial army debouched at daybreak from Verona, occupied the heights of Sanguinetto and Somma Campagna, and attacked, with a change of front toward the south, the enemy's columns, which were advancing on the line of Salesino to Somma Campagna in considerable force and with much artillery. The Imperial troops repulsed the enemy at all points, after a very severe and bloody struggle. Finally Custozza was taken by assault. All the troops fought with extraordinary bravery. They captured several guns and about 2000 prisoners, and are animated by the best spirits.

"On the 23d inst. the garrison of Mantua made a sortie upon the enemy's corps of observation at Curatone, repulsed it and took several prisoners."

The following telegraph has been received from the Archduke Albert, dated June 26: "The enemy's forces driven back by our army, recrossed the Mincio yesterday evening. The Imperial army is in the best condition and in excellent spirits. The battle of yesterday is called by the Archduke the battle of Custozza. The movement of Cialdini across the river Po towards Venice will be checked by the result of the battle."

There had been serious military revolts in Spain connected, it was supposed, with Gen. Prim's conspiracy, but vigorous measures adopted by the Government had prevented a spread of the insurrection. A portion of the populace joined with the insurgent soldiery. Several hundred were killed.

The three divisions of the Prussian army commanded by the Prince Royal, Prince Frederick Charles, and Gen. Herworth, have advanced into Bohemia. No important battle have as yet occurred.

Baden has been compelled by Wurtemburg, Bavaria and Austria likewise, to join in the war against Prussia.

The States of Northern Germany have now withdrawn from the Confederation, and accepted the Prussian plan of Federal reform. This includes Bremen and Lubeck.

Prussia has officially intimated that she may annex Hesse-Cassel, and is enrolling the whole military strength of Northern Germany under her supreme command, thus depriving Austria of fully one half of the Federal army on which she relied.

A telegram from Pardubith, Bohemia, says the Prussians were beaten in a fight near Neustadt, and retreated, leaving their dead.

A Berlin telegram states the Prussians were successful in an encounter near Turin, capturing 7 officers and 500 privates.

The Austrian army at Custozza numbered 60,000.

A Florence telegram admits that the whole Italian loss was equal to or greater than that of the Austrians. The cavalry and Boxeo's division covered the retreat, which was effected in good order.

VIENNA, June 27.—Gen. Benedek's passive attitude is accounted for by his desire to have the federal troops form a junction with his army, and also to allow the Prussians to advance into Bohemia so that he can cut off their retreat.

There is dissension among the Hungarian Liberals, the Deak party being opposed to insurrection, unless the Austrians suffer defeat; and the other party favoring immediate insurrection.

FLORENCE, June 27.—The king of Italy yesterday requested the assistance of the French against Austria, offering in exchange the Island of Sardinia, in addition to important concessions upon the Roman question. The king addressed a dispatch to the president of the council, saying the battle of the 24th was neither lost nor won. He adds: "I have ordered the concentration of all our forces to resume the campaign. Our army is in excellent spirits and anxious to be led to battle."

IMPRESSION PRODUCED BY THE EMPEROR'S LETTER.

Public opinion, which has all along been so averse to war, is anything but satisfied at the Emperor's message. It is thought to be of a very ambiguous character. And the long and the short of the matter is, the H. M. will not let a favorable opportunity go by to carry out his darling object, the extension of the French territory. The consequence has been that the state of the Bourse, which was very bad previously to the communication of the Emperor, is now worse than ever.

GARIBALDI AND THE VOLUNTEERS.

Everything depends upon the success of failure of the attack of the Italians upon Venice. In a few hours perhaps, when the war between Austria and Prussia has broken out either in Saxony or in Silesia, Italy as one man will fall upon the quadrilateral, behind which Venice is sighing in chains under Austrian yoke.

Garibaldi has already left Caprera, and latest accounts inform us that he has arrived at Como, where he has been received with enthusiasm by the population. We shall no doubt hear much of the great liberator and the red shirts.

THE THREE EMPIRES.

In the coming tournament will be England, France and Russia, each of which have their proteges, and it is not unlikely that from umpires they may be forced by circumstances to become combattants; as Russia would protect Austria, France, Italy, and England, Prussia (query).

I think I have now told you how our European game of chess stands.

STILL LATER.

The Hanoverian army surrendered to the Prussians, and the men were allowed to return to their homes.

Desperate battles were fought in Bohemia near Nachod and Frauleuau. The accounts are conflicting.

A Berlin dispatch claims that the Prussian drove the Austrians on the 27th and 28th, capturing 8000 prisoners, while Vienna telegrams claim that the Austrians captured 18 guns and many prisoners.

In the fight of Frauleuau, the Austrians are said to have 4000 to 6000 killed and wounded, the Prussians 1000. There is a great rejoicing at Berlin over the alleged Prussian victory, and the people have presented an address to the king.

Vienna dispatches, on the other hand, assert that Benedek prevented the junction of the army of Prince Frederick Charles with the army of Silesia, and was successful in the engagement of the 27th and 28th, killing and wounding a great number of the enemy.

The London Times says it is difficult to decide the result of the battles. By the accounts at hand they were not decisive.

The Italian army has changed its plan of operations, and the reports from that quarter are of an infinite character.

Derby has been forced to form a cabinet exclusively tory. Threatening trouble among the London populace about the reform question.

According to the Prussian reports they defeated the Austrians at Nachod, on the 27th; at Frankenau, on the 28th, and Mondlingratz, in the vicinity, on the same day.

On the other hand, the latest Austrian telegrams give the following:

"PARDUBITZ, June 25.—The Prussians were completely defeated by the Austrians yesterday under Hohlentz, leaving behind one third of their army in killed and wounded. They will withdraw to the Prussian territory towards Glutz.

"The Austrian cavalry under Gen. Edelkein drove the Prussians off of Joirn to Furnau and compelled them to evacuate Melinka and Sheps and retreat. The Prussian loss is enormous. The Prussians here engaged are of the army of the Elbe. The Prussians on the Silesian frontier were commanded by the Crown Prince Frederick Willim. The federal army is on the point of marching from Frankfort, and a battle is expected at Crucow."

An Austrian dispatch says the Prussians attacked Oswentein June 28th, and were repulsed with heavy loss. The Austrians acknowledge the Prussians have destroyed their railroads and seriously interrupted communication with different points.

LATEST BY TELEGRAPH.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—Secretary Dennison has resigned. He wrote the president that the call for the Philadelphia convention is antagonistic to the policy of the party that nominated and elected Lincoln, and the convention over which he presided, and he therefore withdrew from the Cabinet. Rumors are credited that other resignations are to follow.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—Notwithstanding the injunction of secrecy, the proceedings of the Republican caucus have been divulged. Several members advocated the continuance of the present session until the policy of the President was more clearly developed, or the passage of measures limiting his appointing power. It was contended it would be dangerous to adjourn sine die and leave the patronage of the federal government in the hands of the President, especially as the next session was a short one, and must expire by limitation on March 4, 1867.

A resolution was moved by Thad. Stevens and carried, that it was the duty of every member of the Republican party to oppose the Philadelphia convention by every means possible. It was necessary to know friends from foes.

Stevens denounced Mr. Raymond in severe terms, and said he did not wish to know him personally or any other man who indorsed the hermophrodite convention to be held at Philadelphia.

This brought Raymond to his feet. In answer to inquiries of the object of the New York Times in indorsing the convention, Mr. Raymond said when he indorsed the call it was which the distinct understanding that none but Union men were to participate in the convention. He had since been persuaded into different conclusions, and was ready to admit he had done wrong. However he would retrace his course, and henceforth there would be no more indorsements of the Philadelphia convention by himself or the Times.

A resolution was offered that no Union member of Congress would countenance the Philadelphia convention. The yeas and nays were demanded and recorded, and the result was the unanimous passage of the resolution. Raymond did not vote on it.

It was stated by several gentlemen that Mr. Seward had recently expressed his opinion that the President ought and would call the Southern members and Senators elect together and recognize them as the constitutional Congress.

The question of adjournment then came up Senator Lane of Indiana, spoke warmly and excitedly. While he favored an early adjournment he hoped something would be done to prevent the threatened displacement of Union office holders and the substitution of copperheads in their places.

Senators Conness and Wilson also spoke on this subject. The latter said he had tried hard to keep from believing that the President had gone over to the copperheads, but he was now fully convinced that his worst fears were realized.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—It is rumored that Speed, the attorney general, has tendered his resignation, and that Harlan will do the same.

It is alleged that there is a fraudulent issue of stock of the Washington and Alexandria railroad to the amount of $300,000. It was used in connection with the defunct Merchants' National Bank. A New York firm advanced $100,000 on said stock.

Gen. Grant has issued an order directing all department, district and post commanders in the States lately in rebellion to arrest all persons who have been, or may hereafter be, charged with the commission of crimes and offenses against officers, agents, citizens and inhabitants of the United States, irrespective of color, in cases where the civil authorities have failed, neglected or unable to arrest and bring such parties to trial, and detain them in military confinement until such time as a proper judicial tribunal may be ready and willing to try them.

In the Senate the tariff bill came from the House to-day. Mr. Grimes moved to postpone consideration thereon until December, and after a debate the question was agreed to by yeas 23, nays 17.

The Niagara Falls ship canal bill came up but was not disposed of.

In the House a motion to appoint a committee to investigate why the minority report of the reconstruction committee was not published with the evidence taken by the majority report of the same committee, was laid on the table by a decided vote.

The speech of Senator Lane, of Indiana, was especially inflammatory, and denounced the President in the strongest terms.

Several speakers declared that Raymond was an enemy, and had no right to act in the caucus.

A committee was appointed to consider the questions presented, and report at another meeting of the cause.

It is proposed in the diplomatic and consular bill to abolish the office of minister resident of Lisbon, Portugal.

NEW YORK, July 12.—A telegram received by Gen. E. Huesta, from San Antonio de Bexar, Texas, states that the permanent deputation of Chihuahua, assembled at Presidio del Norte, a town of the State of Chihuahua, have protested against the coup d'etat given by Don Benito Juarez, condemning his illegal continuance in power, and the contents of the decree issued by him on the 8th day of November last, wherein he declared himself President, without authority.

NEW ORLEANS MARKETS.

WEEKLY REVIEW.

The general market (says the Price Current of Wednesday) has been without any material change since our issue. If any thing, there has been more animation in Western Produce, at irregular prices. Corn and some other articles having ruled more in favor of buyers, while flour is rather stiller. With regard to the latter, we notice for the first time since the commencement of the late war, some enquiry for export to Liverpool, which may, perhaps, be regarded as an indication of the probable influence, in one direction, of the present European conflict. We also notice some movement in Tobacco. Our leading staple has continued quiet, and although some factors have slightly advanced their pretensions, yet yesterday's sales were at a further decline.

COTTON.—We noticed in our last report that after a fair business on Friday, the market closed at 25 to 27c for Ordinary, 28 to 30c for Good Ordinary, 31 to 32 for Low Middling, and 34 to 36 for Middling. On Saturday there was again a good enquiry, but many factors were more stringent in their pretensions, and there was hardly as much scope left to buyers at the ruling rate. Yesterday the market opened dull and drooping, and with very little competition among buyers, factors were compelled to make further concessions, in order to realise. The sales were consequently at figures fully 1c lower than previous rates, but comprised 950 bales.

TOBACCO.—Supplies come in freely, the stock on hand is fair and the assortment is very good and offered market inducements to forgeing buyers, several of whom have again been looking around. Factors hold their stocks firmly at the following figures, but would make some concessions in the event of effecting large sales. We quote:

	Light.	Heavy.
Low Refused	4 to —	— to 5 Currency.
Good do	6½ to 8	6½ to 7
Common Leaf	7½ to 8	9 to 11
Fair	12 to 13	14 to 15
Good	15 to 16	16 to 17
Fine	17 to 18	18 to 19
Choice Selec's	20 to —	21 to 25

SUGAR.—Supplies of the production of Louisiana are very small, but there is an ample stock of Cuba Sugar on hand. The market has continued dull, though holders remain firm in their views, and ask full previous prices; 12½ to 13½ for Common, 14c for Fair Louisiana, 14½c for Fully Fair, 15c for Prime, 16 to 17c for Yellow Clarified and 17 to 17½c for White. Cuba Sugar has been retailing slowly at 12 to 13½c for No. 12; 14c for No. 14, 14½ to 15c for No. 15.

FLOUR.—On Monday 2000 bbls were sold at $7 50 for Fine, $9 25 to $9 87½ for Superfine, $11 50 for Low Extra, $13 50 for Good do and $14 to 14 25 per bbl for Choice. Yesterday the market was quiet but steady with sales of 1000 barrels at $9 25 to $9 87½ for Superfine, $11 50 for Low Extra, and $12 37½ to $13 50 per barrel for Good Extra.

CORN.—The receipts have increased and prices are lower although the demand has been fair. Yesterday the sales embraced 9000 sacks at 84 to 85c for Mixed and Yellow and 95c for White.

OATS.—Have come in more freely. They have sold quite readily but at a reduction of 2 to 3c per bushel. Yesterday 2000 sacks were sold at 50c per bushel.

BRAN.—Is in fair supply and holders have been compelled to submit to a reduction of 7½ to 10c per 100 lbs in order to realize. Yesterday 2000 sacks were sold at $1 10 to $1 12½ per 100 lbs.

HAY.—The market is well stocked but continues very dull and prices are irregular and unsettled. The sales were confined to 500 bales Prime St. Louis in two or three lots at $20 per ton. Ohio is quoted at $20 to $22 per ton.

INDIA BAGGING.—The stock is small and is held at 32½c per yard in lots. Dealers are supplying the demand for the country at 31c in rolls and 33c in bales.

BALE ROPE—The market is steady. Round lots are held at 18½c per lb. Dealers are obtaining 18½c per lb. Iron Cotton Ties are selling at 12c per lb.

COFFEE—The market has continued dull and prices, in currency, were lower today owing to the decline in Gold. Dealers are supplying the demand for the country, which is small at 24½ to 28½c per lb currency for Ordinary to Prime Rio.

GUNNY BAGS.—There are not many in the market. They are selling at 26½c a piece in large lots and 27c in small lots, readily.

STAR CANDLES.—The stock is light, the demand is good and the market is firm. There have been small sales at 20c per lb for 12 oz, 21c for 13 oz, and 25c for full weight.

WOOL.—The market is bare. The last sales were at 15c per lb for burry, 24c for unwashed, and 28 to 35c for washed Texas Wool. All descriptions are in request.

SALT.—There is a fair stock on hand. Round lots of Liverpool Coarse and Fine are quoted at $1 65 per sack, while dealers have been obtaining $1 85 per sack for Coarse in store and $1 85 to $1 95 for Fine.

NAVAL STORES.—The supplies are small and there is but little doing. We continue to quote Common and No. 2 Rosin at $4 50, No 1 at $9, Virgin dip. $10 to $12, Pitch $6, Tar $2 50 to $4 per bbl; Spirits Turpentine command 90 to 92½c per gallon.

HIDES.—There are not many in the market. They are in request and prices are still looking up. We quote 9 to 9½c for Green Hides, 10c for Kip Skins, and 12 to 13c per lb for Dry Hides.

MALT.—Is in good supply but only in retail demand at $2 20 per bushel for Canada and $1 25 to $1 80 for Western.

ESCULENTS.—New Potatoes are selling at $2 65 to $3 per bbl. New Onions $4 00 to $4 25 per bbl. New Apples from Vicksburg at $7 to $8 per bbl.

POULTRY & EGGS.—Chickens sell on the landing at $12 50. Geese at $20 00 and Turkeys at $30 00 per dozen. Western Eggs are selling at $20 to $24 per bbl.

THE CHILD'S CORNER.

Grandma's Story.

A great many years ago, when I was a little girl, I started to take a journey to see my aunt—not in the cars—they had never thought of such a thing then—but in the stage. Now, I felt very proud to be going away off without papa, or nurse to take care of me, and only my Uncle Charlie along, who was a gay, pleasant young man in college. Now I sat snugly tucked beside uncle on the back seat, sitting very straight, and wondering very much in my silly heart, if the gentleman on the front seat would not think I was a young lady—father said I was so large of my age—and then more silly, may be he would think I was grown up, and was Uncle Charlie's wife. Oh! how absurd it was, was it not, children, that I, only nine years old, should have ever thought of such a thing? My grown up consequential feelings did not last long, though, for soon the stage stopped, and a very feeble looking old man with a little girl, whose hood covered her whole face, got in. The old man saw Uncle Charlie's pleasant face and said, "If you please, sir, take your little one on your lap, and I will mine, I like to ride on the back seat, the others make me sick." "Certainly, sir." And my dignity was summarily disposed of, by uncle's lifting me, without another word, into his lap. He only laughed because he had no little girl, and it was a funny mistake. But I did not laugh, I pouted, and made uncle very uncomfortable with my fidgeting about, and sour, hateful looks. I happened to look up in a few minutes, and I saw the child, sitting in the old man's lap, and her hood taken off, but her eyes all covered up with a great, thick bandage. Soon she spoke in the sweetest voice to the old man,—"Grandpa, may be we could sit somewhere else, and let the little girl sit here. How I wondered that she knew I was cross about it with her eyes all covered up, so she could not see my face, and I had been ashamed to say nothing. "Oh, no!" said I, and forgetting my ill humor in wondering why she kept her eyes covered up that way.

Again I said, "Please don't be hurt at me, but won't you tell me what ails your eyes?" "O, yes," she said, very sweetly, "I was coming down stairs with the scissors in my hand, and put my eye out, and then the other got blind, too, and now I can never see out of either any more. But I am going to Boston to try and get the doctor there to do something for them, so that they won't hurt me so badly." My eyes filled with tears for the poor blind girl.

"Can she never see again?" said my uncle.

"No. There is no hope of that," said the old man very sadly.

"Grandma says I can see when I get to Heaven," said she, in a very low whisper, and looking very cheerful and bright as she said it.

"Is she happy that way, always?" said my uncle.

"Yes, always. Every one calls her happy Mary."

She got out, soon, said grandma, taking off her spectacles, and even then wiping her eyes, and I never saw her again; but I never forgot her, but always remembered, when I was inclined to be cross over little things, poor blind Mary, who would never see till she got to Heaven; and yet whom every one called "happy Mary."—Western Churchman.

Robbing God.

One Sunday a gentleman was going to church. On his way he saw a number of boys playing on the common. He wanted very much to show them how wrong it was for them to be so doing, but he knew that if he began to reprove them they would not listen to him. So he walked leisurely up to them, and sat down on the grass. Presently, in a pleasant, familiar tone, he said, "Boys, I want to tell you a story."

Directly they all gathered unsuspectingly around him, and he began as follows:

"There was once a good man who was noted for his kindness and liberality. At the time of which I speak he was on a journey. As he was pursuing his way along a lonely road, he met a man who represented himself as having suffered a great loss, in consequence of which he was in deep distress. With his usual kindness the good man drew out his purse, and after examining it, he said, 'I have only seven pounds with me, but I think with one pound I can get to the end of my journey, and you shall have the rest.' With this he handed the man the six pounds. Was not that generous? Would not you have thought that the beggar must have gone off, feeling very grateful and contented? Certainly, we should have expected this. But he did no such thing. He was not a beggar at all, but a robber; and seeing that the good man had still one pound in his purse, he knocked him down with a club and stole his last pound from him."

The boys were very indignant on hearing this. They all cried out against the shameful conduct of the robber. One of them went so far as to say he didn't think anybody could be found quite so wicked as that.

"Now stop," said the gentleman; "let me tell you, boys, this is just what you are doing. God has given you freely six days out of seven for your own use. He has kept only one for Himself, to be kept holy, and spent in worshiping Him; and yet you are so mean as to rob Him even of that!"

The boys hung down their heads. They had not a word to say, but broke up their play and went off.—The Biblical Treasury.

A Little Boy Moves a Great Ship.

We have somewhere read that at an English dockyard, a great ship was to be launched; an immense multitude assembled to see it glide down the slides that were to carry it into the water. The block and wedges were knocked away, but the massive hull did not stir, and there was disappointment. Just then a little boy ran forward and began to push the ship with all his might. The crowd broke out into a laugh of ridicule, but it so happened that the vessel was almost ready to move, the few pounds pushed by the lad were only needed to start it, and away it went into the water. This teaches an important lesson to every boy and girl. You often think that the little you can do, is of no account. You don't know that. A little word, a kind act, however small, may be, and often is, the turning point in one's own history, and often of great importance in its influence upon others.

ORA.

Ora was young, and Ora was fair,
With soft blue eyes and golden hair;
Wearing the look that the angels wear.

And we loved our darling, our sweet pet girl,
Better than anything in this world;
Her price was far above gems and pearl.

But one calm day, in the summer hours,
This pearl of love, this bird of ours,
Flew off to warmer and brighter bowers.

We saw her not when the morning shone,
We met her not when the day had flown,
And we grieved till our hearts seemed turned to stone.

But we looked above us, and there, behold!
Our precious one in the Saviour's fold,
Walking the beautiful streets of gold.

And now, when we miss her at morn or night,
We say, while the tear-drops blind our sight,
The Lord who took her does all things right.

Neatness in Dress.

We are almost inclined to think that every person, and especially all young persons should be encouraged and expected to dress themselves with some degree of fresh care during the after part of each day. It may cost a little time (it certainly should not be allowed to cost much,) but it will be apt to increase a person's self-respect, and that comfortable feeling of being allied and equal to the better part of the social world, which is so desirable for all, and especially for the young.

Not long since, a lady whose ideas were thought by many to be above her circumstances, would insist on her children dressing for the afternoon neatly though plainly, but never remaining in their morning attire. To wash, to arrange the hair, and to be always dressed in the afternoon, not for company but for home life, became a habit of all the young people in that house from childhood, not without some remarks from less pains-taking neigbors.

At last, one of the children, a bright, but rather self-willed girl, remarked, "I think we all feel so much more inclined to be orderly and good when we are dressed for the afternoon."

This remark, made casually to the mother, was, she said, an abundant reward for all the trouble and care of the arrangement.

It is not expensive, but rather economical than otherwise, to pay this sort of attention to dress. A little extra washing which it may cost is nothing to what is saved by the habitual carefulness not to soil one's clothes. The sloven is the most extravagant, generally speaking, of any one in dress. So also the time that it may take is nothing, compared to the habit of order, of system, and of having a time for everything. It promotes self-respect and pleasant social feeling. The man, woman or child, who feels habitually worse dressed than his neighbors, will be apt to shrink from society and behave awkwardly in it. This will make others shrink from them, and produce a sort of warfare and antagonism most undesirable, and sure to check the flow of those benevolent and social feelings which are the source of the purest and best earthly joys, and much of all our usefulness. For all this a person must have no thought or care or pride of wherewithal they are clothed while in company.

There are some would-be philosophers who cannot see the reasonableness of all this. Let them watch the effect which the Sunday attire has, especially upon the working portion of society, when parents and children all have time and dress for the Sabbath School, the church or the private walk, or the family fireside. Does not all this produce great mutual respect among the members of the same family, among neighbors and friends, greater self-respect in nearly all, and a quiet contentment and enjoyment of existence, most of all things conducive to order and improvement? Let those families who neglect all such habits be observed, and they will almost uniformly be found disorderly, and wasteful of far more than all the cost of attending to such matters.

We have known of authors who have found it necessary to dress (From the French of Napoleon Roussel.)

The Portrait of Mary in Heaven.

Concluded from last week.

Now when neighbours enumerate the members of a family, is it not natural to think that, after having named the father and mother, they would mention the names of the brothers and sisters, rather than those of the cousins?

Finally, if Jesus were the only child of Mary, why does not the Holy Scripture say so? It says, indeed, and that several times, that Jesus is the only Son of God; why does it not say also, at least once, that he is the only son of Mary? If the words are different, it is because the facts are different also. We must suppose that authors, inspired by the Holy Spirit, knew how to choose their expressions, and they speak with equal truth when they call Jesus only Son of God, and first-born son of Mary.

From these considerations we must necessarily come to this conclusion:—Mary, after having conceived by the Holy Spirit, carried in her virgin womb a body free from pollution, and brought into the world the only Son of God, had accomplished her supernatural task, and from that time re-entered into the ordinary course of nature, i. e. became in all things the chaste wife of her husband Joseph.

Now then, according to this thirteenth chapter of St. Matthew, Jesus had at this period four brothers and some sisters. The plural of the word sisters represents at least the number two; I therefore draw this final inference: Mary had as children:—

Jesus, her first-born;
His four brothers;
And his two sisters:

in other words, Mary was mother of seven children. Now, understand, my sister, that I felt it right to take account in my picture of this important circumstance, and slightly emaciate the features already aged. But if Mary's advanced age of sixty years, and her seven times renewed maternity, came to my aid to give her the respectable features of a holy and good mother, grown old in the experience of life, and, alas! in grief also, since the sufferings and death of her first-born son must have transpierced her soul like a sword; still, none of this could yet teach me of anything of the expression of her face. Were her features beautiful and regular? or had they nothing very remarkable in them? The answer to this question appeared to me difficult to find. I even searched the whole New Testament, without discovering anything in it to put me on the track of a direct solution. On the whole, I observed in every page a marked disdain for what has to do with mere outward form. Thus God willed that his divine Son should be born in a manger; should live with artisans; should die on a cross; all through the Gospel the flesh is abased and the spirit exalted, therefore appearance is despised and reality required; throughout, the body of the Christian is counted for little, and his soul for much. Consequently, I inclined towards the opinion that such was also the case with the body of Jesus Christ, when a passage of the Old Testament came to confirm me in it. Notice how Isaiah describes the exterior of the Messiah:—"He hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him."—Isaiah liii. 2. That is what Isaiah the prophet says.

Ah! doubtless, my sister, to me as to you, Jesus is the Son of God; he is a model of sanctity, of moral beauty, of magnanimity, of high-souled devotion. Doubtless Jesus is worthy of all our worship; but observe that I here speak only of the mutorial body which he assumed in Mary's womb, that he might live for a space among us in his humiliation; and though prostrating myself before the God, I can still admit that this mortal covering had neither beauty nor splendour, nor, indeed, anything to please the sight.*

If such were Jesus, we may, on the same grounds, and further, from the probable resemblance of mother and son, suppose that such also would Mary be.

I placed myself before my canvas and seized my pencill when a new idea struck me. It is for Mary as she is now, and not as she was in her childhood or her youth, that you have asked me, and you are right; for it is not Mary at her marriage, but Mary after her entrance into heaven who now intercedes for us. Here I had no longer anything in the Holy Scripture to guide me. The Church, indeed, speaks of the Assumption of the Virgin, but the word of God is silent upon it. What could I do? as a good Catholic submit to the Church. I admitted, without further hesitation, what that good mother teaches; i. e. that Mary, at the close of her earthly life (according to our calculation of sixty years of age) was raised to heaven in body and soul, and placed beside her Son. This once accepted as a fact, how should I represent Mary arriving in Paradise? Of course, with the features which she had on quitting the earth, since she did not die, but departed with the same body; but was not this body, then, in any way modified? such is the question which I thought I could put to my guide—hitherto so sure—the word of God.

I again went entirely through the New Testament, and here is what I found respecting my subject:—"In the life to come," said Jesus to the Sadducees, "those who are worthy of the resurrection shall neither marry nor be given in marriage because they are like the angels." Thus Mary, as now in heaven, can neither marry nor be given in marriage; she is in a manner neither man nor woman. Jesus says "She is like the angels."

Now, how are angels to be represented? or, at least, what is the essential difference which distinguishes these celestial creatures from human creatures? On the one hand, we must believe that their forms are analagous to ours, because it is thus that they are often presented to the personages of the Old and New Testament; but, on the other hand, we are told in the 6th chapter of Isaiah, that in the presence of God "the angels veil their faces with their wings." Whence I draw this conclusion, if not certain, at least probable, that our celestial body must differ in some respects from the present one; and that to us, as well as to the angels, this admirable method of traversing space, and of ranging from sun to sun and from world to world, will be given, that we may accomplish the commands of our God.

This is the reason why I have given wings to the queen of heaven, who is no longer either man or woman, and who entered into Paradise, on the testimony of the Church, when she quitted the earth; i. e. at the age of sixty years.

As to the drapery with which I have covered Mary, I was guided, not by our imaginary portraits, in which she is painted gracefully attired in light blue robes; nor have I introduced into her garments those folds, here tightened to define the form, there let loose to hang tastefully: but I have the rather conformed myself to the indications furnished by the Book of Revelation, where great multitudes of saints are seen, enveloped in long white robes.

And, now, my sister, I have completed the vindication of my portrait. I hope that you will be pleased with it; for I have accomplished what I promised—a portrait of Mary, the most faithful of all that have ever been painted.

I remain, devotedly and respectfully your Brother.

JOSEPH DE SAINT PIERRE.

P.S.—I return you your Bible, that you may yourself verify the quotations which justify my work.

A year passed away, and the Abbess replied in the following letter, which closed the correspondence:—

Abbey St. Mary, Feb. 19, 1567.

DEAR BROTHER IN OUR LORD AND SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST,—With feelings of the purest and most vivid joy I address you. Without question you have rendered me the greatest of services; it is only just that I should endeavour to render as great a one to you in my turn. You believed you were sending me an inanimate portrait, you gave me a living being; you thought to make me acquainted with a woman, our mediatrix with Christ, you have revealed me to God the Saviour. But this needs explanation. I will unfold the matter from the beginning.

You will understand how, on the receipt of your packet, my first glance was at the picture. The sight confounded me! I read your letter; and, although with difficulty, I yielded to your arguments. Afterwards I hung up the blessed portrait in my cell; yes blessed, as you will see.

The more I contemplated those emaciated features, that figure enfeebled by age, the more was I disenchanted, and the more was my veneration for Mary weakened. I felt displeased with myself. "For, after all," I reflected, "she is still the very same being, and Mary is not the less powerful with God, for being neither young nor beautiful." Vainly did I again and again school myself with these fine reasonings; I was conscious of a continual diminution and failure of affection for my patroness; and at length I came to perceive that what I had hitherto loved in the Virgin was her young, beautiful, girlish face, and her graceful and pure form; but not her moral character and intercession with Jesus Christ. Having once made this confession, I wished to know for myself this Mary whom I still respected, but whom I could no longer adore without difficulty. I opened the Bible which you had sent me. There, too, as before the picture, I felt my own ideas vanish one after the other; and the young, sweet, beautiful Virgin, the mediatrix between Jesus and men, and, moreover, the Queen of heaven, was changed into a humble servant of the Lord; happy because she had been received into favour, and who, far from being able to contribute to the salvation of others, herself required to be saved. The following is the passage which struck me most vividly:—"My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour."—(See Luke i. 46, 47.)

If God be her Saviour, I said to myself, then Mary was previously lost; then she was not sinless; but I continue to quote this portion of the Gospel:—

"For he hath regarded the low estate of his handmaiden."

You perceive Mary speaks of her low estate. She adds: "Henceforth all generations shall call me blessed. For he that is mighty hath done unto me great things."

Thus, then, if Mary were exalted, it was by God, and not by herself. But listen again to what the angel Gabriel says to her at verse 30 of the same chapter:—"Mary, thou hast found grace before God." Now, you understand that to find grace it is necessary to have sinned: you feel that it would, for instance, be ridiculous to say that God has bestowed grace or pardon on Jesus Christ; ridiculous, because he did not sin.

Notwithstanding, do not think that my great joy comes from the discovery that Mary was only a favoured and blessed woman, like every woman who is pardoned and saved. No; but directly I had dethroned this idol from the sovereignty of my heart, the place was prepared for Him who should always have filled it. Yes; I learned better to appreciate Jesus Christ, my only and well-beloved Saviour. And that which I find in Him is not what I formerly sought in Mary,—a carnal body, chiselled in this or that form: but a soul, a heart, a love, which nothing here below can worthily express. Ah! dear Brother, when I saw the Son of God quit the heavens to come and live on the earth; when I followed him at every step instructing the people, curing the sick, visiting the poor, from whom he expected nothing; blaming the great, at the risk of their displeasure; and, above all, when I heard this Saviour say to me: "Come unto me, you who are heavy laden, and I will give you rest; he who believes in me shall not die; I give my life for the sheep." And, lastly, when after having thus listened to him, I beheld him ascend a cross to expiate my sins, and exclaim in death, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do!" Oh, then I felt my heart burn within me, emotion overcame me, my eyes overflowed with tears, and I cried: "My Lord and my God; I am at length saved."

Since then, everything has seemed new to me; those Christian truths which I already called mine, seem, like beautiful images which have suddenly received life and motion. The Gospel, Christ, heaven, God, became realities to me. I felt in my heart a Divine guest explaining the word of God, rendering the good which had hitherto been so difficult to me easy, and disgusting me with the evil formerly so sweet. I am as though I had been transported into a new world, where the ideas, the feelings, all things are different from the world of yesterday; and this new world began to surround me on the day when I truly felt that I was fully and freely saved by Jesus Christ.

And you, dear Brother, will you not also finish the way which you have already half travelled? You have restored the Virgin to her place, will you not also restore our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ to His? Ah, believe me, true peace, true joy, is there alone. Take this Bible (not the same, for I keep that myself); read it every day, praying for the Holy Spirit; and, be assured, you will soon find a better than Mary, the Mediatrix; you will meet Jesus himself, our God and Saviour!

The Cuttle Fish.

The colossal cuttle fish belongs to the class Mollusca and the order Cehphalopoda—so called because its organs of movement are grouped about the head. Its common name is 'cuttle fish,' and the sailors, who know most about it, call it the 'squid,' and have a proverb that 'squid is the largest and the smallest animal which lives in the sea,' which is as nearly correct as proverbs generally are. There are, in fact, cuttle fish but an inch long, which have regularly developed arms, and secrete the same inky fluid with which the larger squid, whose arms have been found 28 feet long, darkens the water when he is rushing on his prey, or when he, in turn, is chased by some hungry whale or shark, whose jaws he escapes under cover of his inky cloud. These minute squids are found in shoals, near the surface of the water, in various parts of the ocean, and are ravenously pursued by dolphins, bonits, albicore, and even by porpoises, whose choice food they are. There is a variety which measures some two inches in length, which has the faculty of darting out of the water when pursued, and is, therefore, called by seamen flying squid. It is found in vast numbers on the banks of Newfoundland, where our cod-fishmen use a peculiarly constructed hook to catch it. They use the animal for bait in catching codfish, which seem to be extravagantly fond of it, and will bite at a squid bait when even the most delicate clam does not tempt them.

The ancients knew the cuttle fish very well. They are even now found in considerable numbers in the Mediterranean, but not in such quantities as must have grown in the days when the Romans and Grecks, with a singular taste, thought a 'cuttle' the finest of fish, and paid high prices for them. In India it is eaten now; and I have seen the disgusting things bought in the bazaar of Port Louis (Isle of France) at a figure which must have made them proud, if they had that human kind of pride which values itself on a high market price.

Uses of Glycerine.—The uses of glycerine are daily extending, and as it is now a commercial article as easily obtained as alcohol, there is one application which ought to become popularly known. This is the property it posesses of dissolving out the odoriferous principle of flowers. The leaves of roses, of hyacinth, jasmin, geranium, etc., are to be put into a stopped bottle, and glycerine left in contact with them for three or four weeks. All perfume will be extracted, and as glycerine will mix readily with water, a scented wash can be prepared for the hands, as well as an extract made for use by the preparation of perfumery. If the glycerine be left in contact with red pepper-balls, it will extract a principle very strengthening to the hair, and less dangerous than the preparation of cantharides now so often used.

Good Home-made Yeast.—The following is in general use where I reside: Boil a handful of hops in two quarts of water about twenty minutes. Pare and grate three good sized potatoes. Add two tablespoonfuls of wheat flour, one do. sugar, one do. of salt; strain the hop water hot into this mixture, stirring well together; then boil about five minutes. Set away to cool to milk warmth, then add a cup of yeast and keep in a warm place until light and foaming. Put away in a jar or close vessel in a cool place. It will keep some weeks.

One step backward is equal to two steps forward; hence, retreating from duty is a compound loss—it is cowardly.

* It will not be forgotten that Isa. liii 2, ought primarily to be understood in a spiritual sense.—Trans.
